Great Distress and Suffering.

At a mass meeting held in the town of Jonesville, La., on Wednesday, Dec. 21, 1892, subject to a call from Captain Hugh Watson, editor of the Trinity Herald, and which was called to order by that gentleman in a few appropriate remarks, Hon. J. W. Wiggins, ex-representative of Catahoula, was named chairman and Mr. J. T. Robertson, president of the police jury of the same parish, as secretary. A committee on resolutions and appeals was appointed.

After an adjournment of one-half hour the committee returned with the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, All that portion of Catahoula and Concordia parishes bordering upon Black river and all that portion of Catahoula bordering upon Little and Ouachita rivers, both sides, was completely inundated by the disastrous flood which visited this section in June and July of the present year; And, whereas, It has come to our knowledge that there are 4,000 souls rendered homeless and destitute, resultant from said flood; And, whereas, Unless succor is rendered said people in the way of food and clothing, great privations, suffering and distress will surely follow; And, whereas, The assistance tendered by our State during the recent overflow has been entirely exhausted, as well as that so generously donated by the merchants of St. Louis, New Orleans and Natchez, and during the past three months our people have managed to subsist on what they could realize from gathering pecans, money, pelts, etc.; And, whereas, Such articles of sustenance are now gathered and Winter coming on, our people are in a worse condition than ever before; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the people representing the overflowed section, residing upon Black, Little, Ouachita and Tensas rivers, in mass meeting assembled in the town of Jonesville, on Wednesday, Dec. 21, 1892, do hereby appeal to all charitable people and institutions in the State of Louisiana for assistance.

Resolved, That any and all contributions placed in the hands of Mr. Hugh Watson, our legally authorized agent, will be thankfully received and distributed in a fair and impartial manner.

Resolved, That the thanks of the people of this section are hereby tendered to the noble-hearted and generous citizens of St. Louis for their donation of meal and medicines through Mr. Hugh Watson in October last.

Resolved, That the committee appointed by this mass meeting be requested to call upon His Excellency, Gov. M. J. Foster, at his office in Baton Rouge, and present to him the facts in full concerning the distress now existing in this community.

Resolved, That in case the governor is unable to assist our people, the committee is requested to at once proceed to Memphis, Cairo, Louisville, Evansville, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and such other cities as they think proper, and solicit aid for these sorely distressed people.

Resolved, That we call upon the police juries of Concordia and Catahoula parishes to appropriate a sufficient sum of money each to pay freight and expenses of the committee sent out to solicit aid for our people.

Resolved, That the thanks of the citizens of Catahoula parish be extended to the St. Louis and New Orleans Anchor Line of steamers, as well as our local packets, for valuable services rendered.

Resolved, That we urgently request all the papers in our State, as well as every paper in the Union, to publish these proceedings and memorials in order that the sufferings of some 4,000 of God's creatures may be heralded to the world.

Resolved, That we indorse as true and correct in every particular all that Capt. Hugh Watson, of the Trinity Herald, has said in regard to the suffering and general destitution that now exists in portions of Catahoula and Concordia parishes.

Resolved, That this meeting tender Captain Watson a unanimous vote of thanks for his untiring efforts of our distressed people.

Adopted by a unanimous vote.

J. T. ROBERTSON, Chairman.
HUGH WATSON, Secretary.

AN APPEAL FOR AID.

Jonesville, Catahoula parish, La., Dec. 21, 1892.

To All Charitable Institutions and Commercial Bodies of the United States:

At a mass meeting of the citizens of the parishes of Catahoula and Concordia, Louisiana, held in the town of Jonesville on this, the twenty-first day of December, 1892, to take action toward the relief of the sufferers of said parishes, who lost nearly all that they possessed by the recent flood that swept down upon them, thereby rendering their farms useless for the past year, would most respectfully, and in the name of some 4,000 people, request that you come to their aid. Flour, meal, bacon, shoes, clothing and medicines are needed. Numbers of our people in this cold weather are barefooted and devoid of clothing enough to cover their bodies, much less keep warm. Many have not even bread. Our physicians have exhausted their medicines in their efforts to wait upon the sick. Our merchants are unable to advance any further supplies, and to-day many are on the very verge of starvation.

Our people are thrifty and energetic, and this great calamity, through no fault of theirs, has rendered them helpless.

Therefore, in the name of humanity and charity, we appeal to you to assist us, trusting that the day is not far distant when we will be able to fully reciprocate your kindness. Mr. Hugh Watson, of the Trinity Herald, and C. W. Bruce, of Catahoula, and C. B. Burley and J. S. Gano, of Concordia, are our legally authorized agents to act for us, and any kindness extended to them will be thankfully received.

[Here is a fine opportunity for the benevolent to help the needy. The ADVOCATE will gladly receive and forward any money that may be sent to the relief of these people. Can't you give something?—EDITOR.]

Rev. E. L. Spragins.

The following letter from Bro. Spragins to Rev. R. G. Porter, of Pickens, Miss., and kindly forwarded by him to the ADVOCATE, will give our readers an account of the terrible event which came so near putting a tragic end to Bro. Spragins' life. His quick recovery is very wonderful.

Dallas, Texas, Dec. 28, 1892.

Dear Bro. Porter: Your very kind letter just to hand. In reply, I want to give you full text of the tragedy that came near costing me my life. Indeed, I hold my life as a miracle of Providence.

To begin: Mr. Slagle, the man who cut my throat, had long suffered with epileptic fits, and was thought to be perfectly harmless. He was a devout member of my church, with his entire family, and professed great love and admiration for me and my work in Henrietta. My removal was a great surprise to the entire charge and to myself, and many were the expressions of regret by all the people of the town. It is thought that Mr. Slagle, hearing these expressions and protestations, and his mind already toppling from repeated attacks of epilepsy, in an insane moment conceived the idea of killing me and himself. On Friday, in the afternoon, before I was to leave on Saturday morning, I went over to his house—a large boarding-house kept by his wife and mother-in-law—to tell them all goodbye. Upon entering the house, the mother of his wife called me up stairs to her room, in which was a fire, for it was cold. She paid me two dollars for the Texas Christian Advocate. She talked for about five minutes, and I remarked that I was in a hurry; that I had a man packing my library at the parsonage, and would have to return. Coming down the stairway, I noticed Mr. Slagle standing near the foot of the stairs at the front door. I said to him, after I had taken his hand in mine (he evidently had the razor concealed in his left hand): "Good-bye, Bro. Slagle; I leave in the morning for Dallas, and will not see you any more for some time. God bless you!" His hand was cold as ice, and he in a quiver. He replied, as I turned loose his hand, "God bless you!" and, quick as thought, with his right hand he struck me an awful blow with the razor. I did not see the razor, but felt its keen edge slip into my throat for six inches—the length of the gash. I said, "You have cut my throat with a razor and killed me," at the same time grappling my throat with both hands as the blood gushed out in red torrents. The would-be crazy assassin turned around, walked a few steps in the hall, and said, "I will now kill myself," and cut his own throat with the same razor. I was sure he had cut the large artery, and did not expect to live two minutes. Runners were started after the doctors in every direction. The men of the town left their places of business, and came and kept coming until the yard and premises were full of people. The doctors were on the spot immediately, and, though the gash was three inches deep, the large artery was not cut, but laid bare for two inches. One sixteenth of an inch deeper would have killed me instantly.

Now comes the remarkable part of the history. The doctors, without giving me anything—for I refused to take chloroform—pulled the parts together, and began stitching, taking ten stitches in all. I was put in a closed carriage and carried to the parsonage. And as God is my judge, I have never suffered one pain or unpleasant sensation. I felt as well next morning, save weakness from the loss of blood, as ever in my life. The wound healed without suppuration, or inflammation of any sort. The church here sent on the first train one of the ablest surgeons to my relief. I am now entirely well, and will fill my pulpit next Sunday. Mr. Slagle has been adjudged by the courts insane, and sent to the asylum.

Now, Bro. Porter, this is about the gist of the matter hurriedly scribbled down for you. Family well, and send love. Yours, etc.,

E. L. SPRAGINS.

World's Fair Report from Washington.

A four days' hearing before the World's Fair Committee of the National House of Representatives on the proposed repeal of the Sabbath closing law has been appointed for January 10-13, from 10 to 12 A. M., daily. This will suggest earnest prayer to God during the Week of Prayer, and corresponding efforts in forwarding resolutions and voted protests to Congress, and especially personal letters to congressmen and senators.

While there is danger in the desperate efforts being made by the directors and stockholders of the World's Fair, in the supposed interest of their dividends, and especially because their pretense of devotion to the workingmen and "pure religion" has confused some friends of the Sabbath, yet, if every pastor and religious editor, and every wise leader of workingmen, will pledge a dozen or more to write a brief letter each against repeal to his congressman and senators, and to some member of the committee, named below, having the bill in charge, the repeal resolution will surely fail of passage, and may be killed in the committee, six of whom—a majority—voted for the Sabbath closing law at the time of its passage, namely: Dingley, Dolliver, Robinson, McCrary, Reilly, and Honk, of Ohio. Of the others, Cogswell did not vote, but now favors repeal. The other four—Durborrow, Lagan, Little, and Wheeler, of Alabama—voted against the Sabbath closing law; but they do not, therefore, necessarily approve the "bad faith" of the directors' attempt to repeal the condition of an accepted gift, which even the infidel leader, Westbrook, condemns in The Investigator, and which business men declare if done in commercial circles would ostracize those guilty of the attempt.

In fact, one-half or more of those who voted against the Sabbath closing law, judging by the canvass we have made among them, did so on "constitutional grounds," in alleged defense of "State rights" and "religious liberty," denying the power of Congress to forbid Sunday work at the Fair, even as a condition of an appropriation, which grounds will lead them, if consistent, to vote against two of the Durborrow repeal resolutions, as they also contain, in each case, a Sabbath law, only in this case there is an unquestionable assault on "State rights," as these half-and-half Sabbath laws authorize violations of the laws of Illinois, while the law they aim to repeal harmonizes with the State law.

There are two other encouragements to expect victory, if we deserve it, by prompt and earnest effort, namely: (1) that the labor organizations which had been induced to favor Sunday opening have become alienated by the recent act of the directors in giving their printing to a non-union office; and (2) the admission of the advocates of opening that those who oppose the law and those doubtful, together, even now, after all their agitation, aided by labor unions and eminent prelates, number only 160, while 165 are firmly set against repeal, even by their own count.

It is significant of the tendency of the whole movement for repeal that the New York World is already pleading that the workingmen ought not to be put off with half a show, but should see on the Sabbath all that others see on other days, including machinery in action, in which they are more interested than in art. Partial opening logically leads to complete opening, and opening of this Fair to opening of other fairs, and so to general toil and traffic and turmoil, as on the Continent. The difference between complete opening and the proposed mixing of preaching with a colossal Sunday picnic is the difference between straight wickedness and a worse hypocrisy.

Let us bury the proposed repeal in a snow-storm of resolutions, protests, and letters.

H. H. GEORGE,
Gen'l Field Sec. American Sabbath Union.
WILBUR F. CRAFTS,
Cor. Sec. Reform Bureau, etc.

Washington, Dec. 21, 1892.

P. S.—Will you now, my brother, see to it, without fail, that not less than from twelve to twenty letters are sent by persons of your own congregation to your representative and senators before the fifteenth of January, urging them not to be deceived by any dust-throwing arguments for a repeal of the Sabbath closing provision, but to act themselves against any such unworthy act, that on the face of it is a money-making scheme for Chicago? If you will act, and act promptly, the repeal will never be carried.

Conference—Memories.

MR. EDITOR: I have just gotten "home again" (if I may dignify it as home) from Conference at Natchez, and while to everyone, no doubt, it was a pleasant reunion, that pleasure to me was mingled with recollections and reflections that made me sad, unusually so on such occasions.

It was the fifty-third anniversary of my admission on trial in the "traveling connection," and at the very place where I was admitted. I was the only preacher present of all who were present then. The apostolic Winans; the Jeremiah of the Conference, B. M. Drake; our Elijah, John Lane; Lewel Campbell, Green M. Rogers, W. H. Watkins, Jno. G. Jones, Thos. Owen, Peter James, Barnabas Pipkin, Thos. Clinton, L. D. Langford, etc.—none of these "ancient worthies" were present last week at Natchez. They had all gone up to "meet the Lord in the air" in advance of the final conflagration. A new generation has come upon the stage, and even these—some of them—are crowned with "silver threads among the gray."

For more than forty years out of fifty-three I had met and mingled with these beloved and honored pioneers of Methodism, but at the late Conference not one of them was present! I had located six years ago, constrained, as I felt, by providential causes, and I was present at the late Conference recommended for readmission. The sons of those I used to love and with whom I used to labor, were kind enough to grant my request, though they knew that, according to the course of nature, I could not render efficient service long, and might be a pensioner upon the liberality of the church. It was a happy day to me, and I said in my heart: "Bless the Lord, O my soul. Bless his holy name, all that is within me."

Whatever may be the experience of other men and ministers of other churches, to a Methodist preacher called of God to the pastoral work there is no condition so fraught with unrest and anxiety as that of one who has spent almost a life-time in the itinerant ministry, and then to be a local preacher without a pastoral charge.

Not every man is called to be a pastor, nor is every man called to be an apostle or evangelist. It is no reflection upon a man to be a "local preacher," as we term it, for in this relation he may be a "teacher," and edify the church. But a man called of God to the pastorate should feel in his heart that the same Divine Spirit moves him to abandon this office and work, or he will be miserable for life. Never locate while you can do the work of a pastor—"make full proof of your ministry."

In the early years of our beloved Methodism there were many things to do and suffer that the itinerant preacher of to-day knows not of. There is only here and there a "hard appointment" now. Only go in the spirit of the Master, and you will find "green pastures," and lie down beside still waters, and a table will be spread before you "in the presence of your enemies." How different was it even fifty years ago, and still more trying were the days of our fathers!

May God give us a year of greater prosperity as a church than ever before!

H. J. HARRIS.

Hattiesburg, Miss., Dec. 21, 1892.

Something New.

"A happy New Year" to all the readers of the "dear old ADVOCATE." Solomon tells us there is "nothing new under the sun." No one can dispute his wisdom, of course; but there is something new under the moon just now, and that is the new year.

Everybody with a reflective mind is stirred more or less to make new resolutions at the dawn of the new year; but new resolutions grow old faster than anything else one can make, and, before the year is three months old, they generally die a natural death. Alas! that this is true.

This new "dear old ADVOCATE," in the first new week of this glad new year, goes into many new homes, and it is to be expected to go into all the old ones it has visited so long, and tell the readers something new every week.

If it could be possible to imagine that after this week's new issue of the ADVOCATE they could all come back to the editor at 112 Camp street, New Orleans, and tell him that in every home it had visited the parents and guardians of the children in those homes required, enforced and received exact obedience from their children to their wishes and commands in their home government, this writer asks in all simplicity, Would not the editor be disposed to contradict Solomon and declare that there really was something new under the sun? And the startling part of this piece of news would not be in the home-coming of the ADVOCATES, but in the trend of the news toward the dawn of the millennium.

A correspondent on this subject in a recent letter says: "I have been pained and astonished at the almost universal indifference of parents to this one of their most important duties. They all belong to the class that seem not to think present duties have anything to do with the future. Every act of disobedience to parents that has passed under my notice seems to be a stride, long or short, away from God and heaven to the opposite being and place, which will need to be retraced, if saved."

Now, this is something new to some parents, and may set them to thinking earnestly of their great responsibilities.

With our good editor's sanction, we hope to bring out some more new things on the same subject. At the same time the writer acknowledges that she lives in a wing of a glass house, and some stones may be thrown back. If so, and the paces are broken, they will be mended, and, with thanks to the one that threw the stone, another will be sent out.

Let all parents and guardians begin this glad new year to enforce implicit obedience from the children under their control, and every home the ADVOCATE visits there will be something new.

MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

Letter from Brazil.

Mr. E. P. Mackie—

Dear Brother: Your letter containing draft just to hand. Many, many thanks to all the senders. God bless all those little girls and boys who have done this. We are building a new church at Capavairy, not far from here. As this is the most needy cause now, I shall send it at once to Bro. Dickson, the leader in the erection of this new church. He is a young minister in the mission work here, and deserves much praise for his noble undertaking. The money of last year you sent went to the same purpose; but this will not bring so much cash, as exchange has gone down a good deal, yet it will bring a nice sum. I thank you all so much for the money, but still more for your prayers in my behalf and that of my co-workers. Mrs. Brelsford has returned to the States; left on account of ill-health, and to take poor Mrs. Brown home, who has undergone mental aberration since coming to Brazil. Mrs. Brelsford will, perhaps, return again.

I am glad you take the Little Worker. It is a great enthuser for children as well as for older heads. I distributed some of the cards you sent last Sunday with good effect. Since then one of my fifteen young women and girls (S. S. C.) has expressed a new desire to be saved, and is to be received (with one other of the same class) shortly into the church. I will be very grateful to Mrs. Mackie for the pleasure cards, and thank her very, very much. Little things of the kind at home, which are of little importance, help much here. There is great interest in the church here throughout our work. God is working by his Spirit among the people. There are, perhaps, twenty to be received in our church very soon. I pray God's blessings upon your work there, and I feel that you have it.

In December I hope to write to you again more definitely of the work.

Most truly,

SALLIE M. PHILLIPS.

Piracicaba, Brazil, Nov. 21, 1892.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Bolivar, Miss., Dec. 26, 1892: "Bolivar promptly paid the pledge of ten dollars on the mission debt Christmas Day. This is the beginning of our second year at this place, and the substantial tokens of love for the Master's servant and his cause are many."

Rev. G. H. Jacobs, Mt. Pleasant, Miss., Dec. 27, 1892: "I sent my report for the fourth quarter, but heard nothing from it. We have now begun the labors of another Conference year. We left the Olive Branch charge the twenty-second; had a cold ride of twenty miles; found a kind and appreciative people; so, while we regretted to leave the kind people whom we had served for two years, we feel that our lot has fallen in a pleasant place, and we feel very much encouraged. Bro. Johnson, who has served this people for three years, has the good-will of all, both saint and sinner. He, perhaps, will now make his last move as an itinerant preacher, as he has been in the work for forty-seven years. Bro. Shumaker has charge of the parsonage at Olive Branch, and will do well the present year. We will report later on. Success to the ADVOCATE."

Rev. J. M. Barnes, Strongs, Miss., Dec. 27, 1892: "We left our former work, Nettleton and Fulton circuit, on Dec. 16, for our new field of labor—Prairie circuit. Arrived at Strongs station, on the I. C. R. R., the following day at 2.45 P. M., where we have as neat and well furnished a parsonage as there is in the Aberdeen district. We were met at the depot by some good brethren, and escorted to the parsonage, where the good sisters received us with smiles, welcomes, and 'God bless you!' We were conducted into the house, where warm fires were blazing in the grates, and a nice supper on the table, consisting of a fine turkey, with all things else to make it a royal supper. We chatted, got acquainted, had prayers, and this good people left us to return to their respective homes, and us to survey the premises. Oh, the good we did find! In fact, everything needed. Wife says such people will sure get to heaven, and the pastor said, Amen! May God bless this good people for their kindness to this scribe and his family!"

Rev. G. W. Gordon, Coffeeville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Dec. 24 1892: "We have begun our fourth year on this charge with prospects of success. Our reception by our people was all we could have desired. When we returned from Conference we were met at the train by several young ladies and gentlemen, who conducted us to the parsonage, where we found others, married and unmarried, waiting to welcome us, which they did in a manner that made our hearts glad. They not only came themselves, but brought with them flour, meal, meat, sugar, coffee, pickles, preserves, etc. If Bro. R. M. Davis will call around soon, we can treat him royally. Since then we have been receiving almost daily tokens of appreciation and love. We thank God and take courage. We have heard good reports of our new presiding elder, Rev. R. A. Burroughs. Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, his predecessor, was very much beloved by our people. But this district is a trying one on a man of a strong physical constitution. Bro. Burroughs has the physical as well as the mental ability to do the work required. He has not visited our charge yet, but will on Jan. 21 and 22, at which time we want to sample him. We shall be hungry for preaching by that time, as we do not expect to hear anyone preach except ourself between now and then. Pray for us."

THE REFORMER.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

All grim and soiled and brown with tan,
I saw a strong one in his wrath,
Smiting the godless shrines of man
Along his path.

The church, beneath her trembling dome,
Essayed in vain her ghostly charm;
Wealth shook within his gilded home
With strange alarm.

Fraud from his secret chambers fled
Before the sunlight bursting in;
Sloth drew her pillow o'er her head
To drown the din.

"Spare," Art implored, "yon holy pile;
That grand old, time-worn turret spare!"
Meek Reverence, kneeling in the aisle,
Cried out, 'Forbear!'"

Gray-bearded Use, who, deaf and blind,
Groped for his old accustomed stone,
Leaned on his staff, and wept to find
His seat o'erthrown.

Young Romance raised his dreamy eyes,
O'erhung with palsy locks of gold—
"Why smite," he asked in sad surprise,
"The fair, the old?"

Yet louder rang the strong one's stroke,
Yet nearer flashed his ax's gleam.
Shuddering and sick of heart I woke,
As from a dream.

I looked. Aside the dust-cloud rolled—
The waster seemed the builder, too.
Up-springing from the ruined old
I saw the new.

'Twas but the ruin of the bad—
The wasting of the wrong and ill;
Whate'er of good the old time had
Was living still.

Calm grew the brows of him I feared;
The frown which awed me passed away,
And left behind a smile which cheered
Like breaking day.

Grown wiser for the lesson given,
I fear no longer, for I know
That where the share is deepest driven
The best fruits grow.

The outworn rite, the old abuse,
The pious fraud transparent grown,
The good held captive in the use
Of wrong alone—

All wait their doom from that great law
Which makes the past time serve to-day;
And fresher life the world shall draw
From their decay.

God works in all things; all obey
His first propulsion from the night.
Wake thou and watch! the world is gray
With morning light.

The Sermon Idea.

Ideals are our masters. As we aim, so we strike; as we think, so we are. What we are depends largely on what we think we ought to be. Only the truth can make us free, for there is no bondage like that of ignorance or error, and he who serves a false ideal is a slave. An untrue chart and a stranded vessel, a broken mold and a marred statue, a wrong motive and a wrong action, a false ideal and a false life-work; these are analogies.

Nowhere do these truths apply more forcibly than to our idea or ideal of a sermon. If we are fundamentally wrong in our notion of what a sermon is and is for, we will fail as preachers. It is not our purpose to set up our youthful opinion as a criterion in homiletics, for we are not talking about the art of preaching, but the genius back of the art. We write because we have been lately wakened on this subject and are deeply convinced that there are many men, good, bad and indifferent, who don't know or don't care what the true ideal of a sermon is, and, in consequence, their preaching is shorn of power, and their discourses are like cold cinders or dead stars according as they are commonplace or "fine."

We are convinced that God's idea of a sermon is that it is always only a means to an end—a potential means to an eternal end—and God's idea is ever the only main track to his terminus, his ultimatum, and all ideas aside from his are side lines that have their terminus somewhere this side of eternity. A sermon is not an end in itself. A work of art needs no apology for its existence, if it be beautiful and only beautiful. The utilitarian stands before a block of marble that has felt the magic molding touch of a sculptor's chisel, and no longer is the cold, dead stone, but, in graceful contour and delicate lines that seem to be formed by life's master hand, expresses some high, esthetic sentiment and breathes as with the soul of genius.

"What use?" says he. But his question here is irrelevant. The beautiful as such is an end in itself, for, says Victor Hugo, "The beautiful is sometimes more useful than the useful." But the sermon is not a work of art, is not an end per se, and when it is so considered is degraded, debased, perverted, and all best things when perverted become the most damning.

And yet how many preachers there are who preach just to be preaching, who took upon their sermon as a landscape in literature, a "literatesque" work, an end in itself—for is it not a fine sermon? These men are willing to always close their very correct services with the benediction, and the benediction only. They look for no result other than complimentary remarks, and have a sense of duty done, not that seed are sown, but that they have preached a sermon. They are willing to be Cleros, and hear the multitude cry out, "Long live Cicero, our Cicero, for behold how beautiful a speech he has made us!" Would that we had the power to drive the fact of the wide prevalency of this sort of idea into the hearts that need it as a conviction, a regenerating conviction.

The church, as a means, is a glorious power, "fair as the moon, beautiful as the sun, terrible as an army with banners." As an end the church is a mockery, a travesty on all that it purports to be; and this is equally true of a sermon. It either accomplishes or defeats its end.

The sermon idea, then, against which we write is the mortally false one that a sermon can by any possibility or under any circumstances be an end per se. Nor is it sufficient that a sermon have some objective end in view. It is essential that every sermon have the great and only end in view. That end, as God teaches it, is the soul's best good, and the ideal formula for a sermon is this—it is a means to an end, and that end is the direct regeneration and development of immortal souls. Trite as you may think this is, it is an ideal that few of us continually hold before our minds. Mark you, it is not the development of fancy by the sounding brass of sonorous words in lofty imagery, nor the development of sentiment by the tinkling cymbals of poetic thought. It is not the softening of hearts by the plaintive flute-notes of pathos, nor the moving of reason by the strong tones of logic. All these are and should be only tributary streams that pour their brightening, freshening, strengthening waters into the great main current—the possessing purpose to save immortal souls. The end aimed at must be, first and last, the soul; not the mind or the morals, but the soul, for the greater will always include the less. In the midst of many temptations peculiar to preachers, beset by allurements and charms; hearing yonder the voice of public opinion, and yonder the sweet-sounding trump of fame—on the one hand popularity, on the other criticism—not knowing what is or is not expedient, there is but one course for us to safely and successfully pursue, and that is to be possessed with an "eye single" and a single idea—God's glorious and eternal end for every sermon. Singleness of purpose has been characteristic of nearly all genius or greatness, and great preaching is no exception. Just as the rudder guides and directs the giant forces of an ocean steamer, and renders efficient all of her equipment and adornment, so a great single idea guides and renders efficient all the forces and equipments of the mind. A masterful purpose is a focalizing power that gathers all the energies of a man's mind and life and makes a grand resultant of what would otherwise be scattered and self-destroying forces. Then put ye on the mind of Christ in this matter of preaching. Preach every time as a dying man to dying people. Let every sermon be one you would like to have reported in heaven by a departed member of your congregation. Be possessed with an eternal, Christ-like purpose to save immortal souls.

To the Steward.

Dear Brother: I address you in the singular because I want to talk personally to each of you. You have been appointed by your Quarterly Conference to an important trust, and you should be your preacher's best friend. Your preacher will soon be to see you, who is to serve you another year, and I want you to cut this out and save it.

First, I want to ask you a question. You did not allow your preacher last year to go away without his meager salary, did you? I speak particularly to stewards on circuits. Do you know anything of his financial condition when he left? Have you gone to him and found out how much he has been stinted in food and clothes? He went at your beck and call all the year, through heat and cold, sunshine and rain, light and darkness. He prayed in your families, preached to you, visited your sick, buried your dead, and went to your lonely home after the coffin went out, and prayed God to bless and help you, while he wept with you in your woe, and now he is gone without the money he and his family needed so sadly. He prayed with you and sympathized with you, and helped you with your trouble, but in his trouble you left him alone. Whose was the fault? Answer this question in God's sight, to whom you must account for your stewardship.

Your preacher comes to you this year financially crippled from the penurious sum doled out to him last year. Perhaps his work has "fallen behind" with him several years in succession. When he comes to your house, set a good table, and then, when you see the far-away look come into his eyes, stop a moment and wonder if his family at home is not sitting down to the same old meal of salt meat and bread and black coffee. He loves his wife and children. Do you wonder that he sometimes looks sad where there is plenty? Take him out and show him your well-filled granary and sleek horses, and ask him if he has anything at home to feed his overworked horse on. Show him your fat hogs, and tell him you are going to kill that one soon and send him half. Perhaps it has been months since he had a piece of fresh pork or beef on his table. Did you think to send the preacher any last year? Get your wife to show him her fine poultry, and tell him you are going to gather up some chickens in the neighborhood and bring to him. Take him to your storeroom and show him your good things, and ask him if you can not send along something to eat with the corn and pork and chickens you intend to send.

Let me make you a suggestion. Get your new preacher to call a meeting, early, at the most central church, and spot every steward that does not attend (be sure to go yourself), and at that meeting make your preacher's assessment, and then each of you solemnly pledge yourselves to raise a certain amount quarterly.

Don't forget to bring him some money this time; he needs it. And, then, don't go home from that stewards' meeting, and stay there until nearly Conference time, and then come up and plead poverty when it was laziness, or carelessness, or stinginess, and send him off with half or two thirds his hard-earned salary. In 1891 there were 123 charges in the Mississippi Conference, and of that number 85 did not pay the preacher what they promised. More than two-thirds of the works failed to pay honest claims.

Brother, shake off that old way, or else go to the Quarterly Conference, when it meets, and tell them you are not man enough, or Christian enough, to do a solemn duty.

Another suggestion: Appoint at your first stewards' meeting, I have advised you to hold, a committee of one to go to the preacher's house every two weeks all through the year, and see if he needs any provisions or horse feed. (All of you ought to go now and then, but you know you will not.) (And, brother, don't go there and tell him where there is a barrel of corn eight or ten miles away, and ask him to come in his jumper and get it.) Let this committee of one write a postal monthly to each steward, asking this one if he can get horse feed, that one meat, and that one coffee, etc., and take them to him. His jumper now is worn out hauling horse feed, and provisions, and wood, and such things in it.

Oh, stewards, this year turn over a new leaf, and have some mercy upon the preacher, his jumper, his horse and his family, and may the Lord bless you all, and may this be your most prosperous year of all the past, both spiritually and financially! If the editor will publish this letter to you, I will write another letter to the church members soon.

Yours in Christian love,

BETA TAU.

The Pew to the Pulpit.

This occupant of the pew has passed the sixty-eighth mile-post on this life's journey, and he feels as much interest in the church as any occupant of the pulpit, perhaps; therefore, he hopes that these well-meant expressions of his honest thoughts may not be considered out of time or place. And, furthermore, there is no class of men on earth this occupant of the pew loves so much, and feels so much concerned about, as the occupants of the pulpits, because to them—and to one more especially, Bro. M. C. Manley—he feels deeply indebted in love and gratitude for leading him out of darkness into the true light of God, wherein he now rejoices with the comforting and sustaining witness of the Holy Spirit that he is an heir of God and a joint-heir with Christ; and because they (the legitimate occupants of the pulpits) are called of God and appointed, especially and solely, to turn the people from the errors of their ways, and lead them into the way of righteousness and true holiness. But, if they fail to do so, with all their soul and strength—as too many of them do, alas!—what will become of the people, as well as of themselves? St. Paul says: "How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall he preach except he be sent?" There can be no calling on earth that is so urgent, and requires half so much of whole-soul devotion and unremitting work of heart, mind and body, as that of a preacher of "the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto the salvation of everyone that believeth." And souls are being lost as fast as the moments flit away. But no one should dare occupy the pulpit without being called of God, and then doing his whole duty faithfully, for he "can do nothing of himself," but he "can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth" him. But the people are going astray as sheep without a shepherd; and as sheep without a good shepherd's care are devoured by ravenous wolves, so are the people being led astray and destroyed by the great enemy of souls—the devil. The people are running into all manner of wickedness; dying in their sins everywhere. Are the preachers fully alive to the awful responsibility resting upon them, and are they doing their whole duty?

The thirty-third chapter of Ezekiel reads: "So thou, O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand."

DEAR ADVOCATE: After all these years of close fellowship it would really be a great deprivation to have to do without your helpful presence; and I have wondered much how a Christian family could ever get along without a Christian paper. They might do without tea and coffee, tobacco and snuff, and other luxuries, and not be any the worse off; but to expect to live up to the requirements of Christian civilization, not to say perfection, without having any religious literature in the house, or the enlightenment that a Christian paper invariably brings to all who read one, seems to me just like finishing the top of a chimney and forgetting to make the fireplace. The chimney would look all right on the outside; the base broad, corners carried up in fine proportions, plumbing perfect, the top ornamented, and so one would desire to see if the fireplace had the proper slope and the finishing touches that only an artist in brick can give a fireplace, when, to the amazement of the beholder, as he walks inside of the room, there is only a solid piece of masonry looking more like a tomb, and seemingly as cold. There is no opening for draught, heat, or light. The artistically contrived mantel, with its costly vases and beautiful ornaments, is all a delusion, a mockery. What is a chimney without a fireplace?

The Christian paper is the chimney. The contributors and the editor furnish the wood, the printer the match, and the good news starts the fire. The warmth is soon perceptible by "our hearts burning within us" while we read. What is a Christian home without a religious paper?

Whose Image Do We Reflect?

Christianity, sincere and heartfelt, should reflect the image of Christ on its believers. Who of us has enough faith and earnestness to reflect even in a small degree the image of our Savior? Alas! in most of our lives there is little trace of the blessed Jesus we profess.

We are quick to catch the manners and expressions of an earthly associate. We get their very intonation, their characteristic gesture. So certainly is the influence of an intimate associate felt that we are often warned not to frequent the society of certain persons whose influence is thought not good. How half-hearted and careless our intercourse with God must be that we show in our daily life so little of his character!

At the close of a Sabbath-school I attended not long since, the superintendent asked, 'What is your belief?" The school replied, repeating the Apostles' Creed. The thought came to me: How many of those teachers and students grown to years of maturity really believed that creed? Who acts as if he believed, "From thence he shall come again to judge the quick and the dead"? How can our fellow-men think we believe in the gospel Christ taught, when in our sordid selfishness we oppress the poor and resent with a proud air all injuries done to us. When our lives show so little of Christ's spirit, it either shows that we do not believe his teachings or esteem them of so little importance as not to warrant an earnest following. Even those who think Christ merely a good man, regard him the personification of unselfishness. What must be their opinion of a professed believer in his divinity, when this believer is so careless of the feeling of others? What an influence for good would be felt if all who read the Beatitudes arose from the reading with a determination to be merciful and pure in heart. How beautiful it would be if the world, looking at our actions both in times of adversity and prosperity, could say of us, "Our rock is not as their rock." He who believes, above every other consciousness, in the mercy and justice of God will have his daily life filled with the love of God and the "charity that falleth not." Elisha followed the commandments of the Lord closely and was intent on the teaching of Elijah. Note when Elisha returns from the scene of Elijah's translation, the people at once recognized the spirit of Elijah fallen upon him. Now, suppose Elisha had followed the Lord's command in the way so many of us do now, think you the school of prophets would have named him their leader? Suppose he had had to run panting from some heated, useless theological discussion with the men at Jerusalem to be present at Elijah's ascension! Oh, what mantle of love and spirituality might not have fallen on us if we only kept our hearts waiting and in sweet time for Christ's spirit to enter them!

In every cause we espouse we should be careful not to reflect dishonor upon it. If we acted as we should, despooding ones might, from our example, turn to the God who lifts the soul-cloud away. Words of exhortation are often taken as rebuke; doubtless, this would not be the case if we lived up to our belief. Oh, for a religion that permeates our entire being and is seen in every action of life! Oh, there is vast magnitude and infinite comfort in these words, "I believe in Christ!" Carlyle grasped something of the truth when he says, "Well might men prize their creeds and build stanchest temples to them." Oh, poor mortal, following at a guilty distance, examine well thine heart and see if Christ is enthroned there!

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

BOOKS.

SACRED HOURS WITH YOUNG CHRISTIANS. By Bishop James W. Holt, D. D. W. J. Shuey, Publisher, Dayton, Ohio.

This book has an introduction by Dr. Cuyler. It is a fine devotional volume, the subjects connected with religious life being discussed in a manner to enable the reader to profit to his growth in grace. The price of the book is ninety cents.

This is as good a book for valuable suggestion in living as we have seen in many a day. If all our young men and women would read and heed what is here taught, it would do them good in all the days to come.

SAM WILLIAMS. By W. S. Harrison. Price, $1.

ANNIE COOPER'S FRIENDS. By Mrs. C. B. Howard. Price, 60 cents.

These four books are published by our House in Nashville; the first two and the last by the Sunday-school Department. They will be found to be interesting stories. Barbee & Smith, Nashville, Tenn.

PERIODICALS.

—THE CHAUTAUQUAN has a table of contents that for variety, interest and instruction is not surpassed by any of the monthlies. T. L. Flood, Meadville, Pa. Price, $2.

—THE MAGAZINE OF ART devotes its space largely to Tennyson and his portraits. The illustrations in this magazine are simply superb. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. Price, $3.50.

—THE QUIVER is a favorite at the editor's home. It is clean and pure and, therefore, healthy, good for young and old, and within easy reach of nearly everybody. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. Price, $1.50.

—WIDE AWAKE opens with Whittier with the Children, a beautifully illustrated paper by Margaret Sidney. This article alone is worth the price of the magazine. Other well-illustrated and charmingly written articles make up as fine a month's reading as our young people can find. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Price, $2 40.

—MISSIONARY REVIEW contains a fine paper by the editor on Our World, and one by Dr. Strong on The Nineteenth Century One of Preparation; A Century of Missions, by Rev. F. Edwards, of Harlow, England, and various other excellent articles, all of which make a most valuable monthly. Funk and Wagnalls, New York. Price, $2.

—SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE begins the year with a fine table for its readers. The leading article is, The Peary Relief Expedition, by Angelo Heilprin. It is a paper of thrilling interest. The seventh article of the series, The Poor in Great Cities, is The Poor in Naples, by Jessie White Va. Marlo. Other articles of interest make up the table. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Price, $3.

—THE CENTURY presents as frontispiece a portrait of the poet Whittier. When we say that Mark Twain, Grace King, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Richard Watson Gilder, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Washington Gladden and Mrs. Burton Harrison are the principal contributors, we have said enough to commend this number to everybody. Century Company, New York. Price, $4.

—WORTHINGTON'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE AND LITERARY TREASURY is a new author for public favor. This is intended to be "the ideal magazine for the home," and this number gives a very large promise in that direction. Here are some of the names of contributors: G. M. Stone, D. D., Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Sir Edwin Arnold, Junius Henri Browne, Lillian Whiting, A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn. Price, $2.50.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchel, Publisher.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Jan. 8, 1893.

BY REV. WM. H. LAPRADE, D. D.

Rebuilding the Temple

Ezra iii, 1-13.

B. C.—536-535.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"They praised the Lord because the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid." (Verse 11.)

The return of the exiles to Judea occupied about four months. When they reached the homes of their fathers they did not find the country entirely waste and desolate, for the majority of the peasantry had been left by Nebuchadnezzar. Two months were occupied in getting settled in the town near Jerusalem, and in general preparation for beginning the work of rebuilding the temple. Jerusalem itself lay in ruins, but the site of the old temple, on Mount Moriah, was easily found, and here would be, naturally, the place of rendezvous for all the people.

Ver. 1. In September. The "cities" were the towns of Judah and Benjamin. The gathering "as one man" was expressive, not only of the general desire, but of the unanimous purpose of rebuilding the temple. (Read Num. xxix, 1-6.)

Vers. 2, 3. Nebuchadnezzar, it will be remembered, put out the eyes of Seraiah, who was high-priest at the destruction of Jerusalem. Jozadak, his son, was one of the captives, and became high-priest on the death of Seraiah, although he could not, in captivity, discharge the duties of his office. Jeshua, or Joshua, was the son of Jozadak, and the regular high-priest by descent. Zeruhbabel was of royal line, being the nephew of Salathiel, and great grandson of Jehoiakim. Salathiel had no son, so Zeruhbabel, as next heir to the throne, was regarded as his son.

The altar of burnt-offerings had stood immediately in front of the temple-porch. This they rebuilt at once, clearing away the rubbish until the base was found, and building up from that.

Enemies were round about. The people needed divine aid. Worship must begin, without waiting for the temple to be made ready. An altar was worth more than fortifications. All real progress begins with an altar. (Concerning burnt-offerings, see Deut. xii, 13, 14.)

Vers. 4-6. The Feast of Tabernacles began on the fifteenth of the month. It was the national feast of thanksgiving. (Read Deut. xvi, 13, 15, and Lev. xxiii, 34-42.)

The daily morning and evening sacrifice were kept up regularly, as well as special sacrifices and feasts. As nearly as possible, the temple being yet unbuilt, all the observances of the Levitical ritual were rigidly carried out. To restore "the religion of their fathers," the stated worship of Jehovah, was the first care on the part of all.

Ver. 7. Read in I. Kings, v, the account of the contract Solomon made with Hiram, King of Tyre, for material for the first temple. Now again, by aid of Cyrus, the Syrian and Tidoulan timber-men are employed, the timber being rafted to Joppa, and then hauled overland to Jerusalem. It is of interest to us that a railroad now connects Jerusalem with Joppa.

Ver. 8. The royal and the priestly heads were united in this movement. In April, 535 B. C. Much time had been necessary for removal of the rubbish and for preparing material for the work. By command of David, the Levites were set to work at twenty years of age. (See Num. i. 47-54, and I. Chron. xxiii, 24.)

Ver. 9. In chapter ii, 40, those three men are mentioned as the heads of the Levitical houses who came back to Jerusalem. In obedience to the call of Zerubbabel the seventy-four who composed the families were called to the work.

Vers. 10, 11. After the foundation was laid, came the songs of rejoicing, led by the trained singers, "the children of Asaph, an hundred and twenty and eight," the whole multitude joining in the response—"for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever." It is not good for any congregation when the faculty and habit of song is lost, or is confined to a chosen few.

Vers. 12, 13. About fifty years before this the temple was destroyed. Some among the older members of this congregation remembered the time. The vision of the "departed glory" came before them, memories of other and better days shut out the gladness of this day, and they wept aloud. But the shout of young and stalwart enthusiasm was louder and longer, and the sound of weeping was soon lost amidst the general joy. And it was well so. Discipline had accomplished its purpose. Idolatry had been finally crushed. The temple was to be restored. Already many of the "ransomed of the Lord" had come home.

The altar had been rebuilt, the foundation of the temple was ready, the priest had resumed his functions. It was meet that they should "thank God and take courage."

Tripartism.

BY REV. G. E. CUNNINGHAM.

The word "tripartite" has reference to anything divided into three parts. Hence the word "tripartism" expresses, therefore, a three-fold division.

Christianity is tripartio. It is redemptive, philosophio, socialistio. It is regenerating, edifying (upbuilding), and preparing (fitting for service to others). As it serves us, furnishes us truth, and addresses us to better temporal conditions; in short, Christianity enters the spiritual, the intellectual, the temporal to redeem man: Christ in the heart, in the school, in the home; for the heart, the head, the hand. This all means that Christian education should be a holy, intelligent, prosperous society. Redemption is the teaching of the Holy Scriptures. Its philosophy is in God; its basis of operation is human; its end is a holy man in a holy kingdom. Redemption touches the spiritual, intellectual and social nature of man. Anything less would be less than redemption. As evidence that Christianity is doing a three-fold work we have but to notice the deep spiritual results of evangelism, and the educational movements among all classes, and the widespread interest in the social (man's relation to man) reforms of the day.

The power of evangelistio service is in itself manifest in the best spirit of Christ's church as never before. The spirit of holiness, of conversion, of faith, of liberality is stirring the church to the noblest activity. Spirituality alone moves to real service. Every religious impulse, every intellectual power, every social relation, to be worth anything must be dominated by spiritualiity. Christian training is, therefore, changing the ideal of former times.

It was said: 1. By the religion—religion alone makes man good. 2. By the teacher, Education alone leads to goodness. 3. By the laborer, The workshop is the only profitable institution. The first represents the religious impulse; the second, the intellect; and the third, the muscle. Religion philosophy, force, impulse, mind, matter, are all good, all needful, all inherent in man. Each is weak by itself, each susceptible of degradation in a narrow nature, each noble and useful when permeated by a deep spirituality. All exist in harmony when divinely consecrated to Jesus Christ. All are spiritualized when sanctified by the Holy Spirit. Religion is sometimes made to answer every human need. This is the better sense in which to use the term. But usually it stands for a part of man's nature, and as this is the common view of the religious nature, we urge its spiritualization, as we do the mental and social characteristics of man.

Tripartism is, then, the work of Christianity as viewed from our standpoint. It is our imperative duty to stand by the penitent, the student, and the working man. These represent actual humanity. Their cry is for salvation, for truth, for normal life in this world. The Christian Church must hear this cry and heed it if it is to hold its place in this world. Courage will find the resources necessary to meet all crying needs. Since this is so we should gladly accept our threefold work and approach humanity in a more hopeful spirit, a more inspiring faith in its possibilities, assuring it of the plentitude of God's provision for the spiritual, the intellectual, the temporal needs of all.—Central Christian Advocate.

For Preachers.

It requires more ability to preach to the young and the ignorant than to preach to the mature and well instructed. In both cases the truth to be impressed is the same; but in the one case the truth can be stated without extra attention being given to its clearness and simplicity of expression, and to its helpful illustration; while in the other case an added demand is made on the powers of the preacher to bring down the grandest thought to the comprehension of the simple-minded, and to enforce it by fitting illustrations and practical applications. A man of moderate ability can do fairly well, without downright hard intellectual work, in preaching what he calls his "best sermons" to an intelligent congregation, and he is very likely to think that he is gaining and growing by sermon-writing of this sort. But if he were called on to reproduce those very sermons in a style suited to the comprehension of children and plain, uneducated people, he would have to gain and grow prodigiously before he could compass that task. And here is where many a fresh graduate from the theological seminary makes the mistake of his life by seeking a congregation of educated people, who can comprehend his theology, commonplaces and his new studies just as he would naturally preach them, instead of taking a congregation of plainer people whose need for an outgiving of himself in behalf beyond anything he has ever experience of. In an address to Yale theological students, Dr. John Hall, of New York, said his first sermons were preached to a very plain people in a mission district in the west of Ireland; that those same sermons, in substance were afterwards found suited to a highly cultivated audience in his Fifth Avenue Church. Love was the basis of those sermons—love for God's truth, love for those to whom the truth bore that truth. He had no thought of his own intellectual growth as he was studying and preaching; therefore, he was making progress all the time. The young preacher who is planning for his own growth in knowledge, instead of planning his own outgiving of love as a means can not grow, although he may be puffed up more and more. Knowledge puffeth up, but love buildeth. Therefore, choose love.—School Times.

Teaching and Preaching.

BY REV. O. P. EACHES.

These two Greek words, didasko, kerusso, outline the scope of the Savior's work. He was both teacher and preacher. He was pre-eminently a teacher. The name most frequently applied to him is, the teacher. What is the dividing line between the two? These words stand in marked contrast in Matt. iv, 23; ix, 35; xi, 1. Cremer in his Lexicon states the difference in this way: to preach is to make the public announcement, to proclaim the way of salvation; to teach is to give continuous instruction in the contents and connections of the message. The opposite of preaching is, to hear. The opposite of teaching is, to learn. Preaching is the work of the public speaker, the orator, the one who moves men by public appeal. Jesus was a preacher. He could move men by persuasive methods. He was also a teacher. Trumbull has shown, in his Yale lectures on the Sunday-school, that the Jewish synagogue provided the means for thorough and systematic instruction in the Scriptures. It had a regular teaching system. When Jesus went on his journeys through Galilee, these teaching facilities were used by him. He taught in their synagogues. This method was interlocutory, question and answer, face-to-face work. We need only look at the pages of the New Testament to see how much use the Savior made of this method of instruction. In three chapters of Matthew (21 23), we see the familiar question and answer. In John xiv, Thomas, Philip and Judas all propound questions that meet with ready answers. The removing of difficulties, the grounding in the truth, the building up in knowledge, the opening of the Scriptures, these formed an integral part of his teaching work.

This twofold distinction in the work of the ministry is found all through the New Testament. Paul speaks of himself as a proclaimer of the glad tidings, also as a teacher. See this distinction brought out in 1. Tim. ii, 7; II. Tim. i, 11. Kerux, didaskalos. Paul shows in Eph. iv, 11, that the same persons are shepherds and teachers.

He is filling less than half his work who simply watches over the flock, or feeds the flock with public exhortation and appeal. There must be a teaching work in duties and doctrines, in explaining the word, in rooting and grounding the people in the foundation teachings of the Christian life.

No plan is so well adapted for the teaching purpose as the question and answer. President Andrews, of Brown University, lately said: "The worst mistake now making in American collegiate life is the relinquishment of the old solid senior year with its tough drill. In the whole history of modern education there has been nothing like it, nothing else so good." Dr. Broadus shows, in his "History of Preaching," that the sermons, the preaching of the first two or three centuries, were largely in the nature of interlocutory conferences between pastor and people. The pastor has lost that opportunity, Ten minutes of a congregational catechism at the end of the morning sermon would do more to clarify the thinking and to anchor teachings than thirty minutes of public appeal. Every pastor must aim to be a teaching pastor. He must edify the people, in the true sense of the word edify. The pastor must be apt to teach. He may not be eloquent, he must be a teacher. The Talmud gives some marks of an educated man. Among them are these: "He will not be in haste to reply; he will ask only fitting questions; he will give fitting answers; he will answer the first things first, and the last thing last; he will candidly confess the limits of his knowledge." The pastor may be a teacher through the Bible school, which he must aim to make more efficient; through inductive studies for enlarging Bible knowledge; through the public ministry that must be instructive as well as moving. Dr. Boardman, of Philadelphia, is a teaching pastor. He has gone through, in public exposition, the entire Bible. A teaching pastor educates the people, brings the people in contact with the Word itself. All need to walk in the footprints of Paul, who everywhere upheld his teaching function. In his Roman ministry he is recorded as "preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ." A ministry will lose its opportunity and the church will lose its strength, unless the ministry be a teaching as well as a preaching ministry.—Record of Christian Work.

Preaching That Never Counts.

Preaching that scatters.
Preaching with pages of poesy.
Preaching lacking in fire and vim.
Preaching always on dress parade.
Preaching that is listless and tame.
Preaching that is full of complaints.
Preaching intended to tickle the ear.
Preaching without purpose and point.
Preaching that lacks system and logic.
Preaching that is sarcastic and cutting.
Preaching that is too long and too loud.
Preaching without tenderness and tears.
Preaching that lulls the careless to sleep.
Preaching not up with the living present.
Preaching that makes the sinner feel easy.
Preaching that fails to arouse and convict.
Preaching that draws from the musty past.
Preaching not preceded by hours of prayer.
Preaching that strives chiefly for human applause.
Preaching that fails to show men their sins, and lead them to repentance and faith.
Preaching that does not depend upon the Holy Spirit for inspiration and power.—Epworth Herald.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. The Divine-Human.

BY PHILIP SCHAFF, D. D., LL.D.

Jesus Christ is the founder of Christianity. His life on earth is the fountain head of its history. His advent marks the turning point of ages, the end of the past and the beginning of an endless future. He is the fulfiller of the Law and Prophets, and of all the noble aspirations of heathendom, the Redeemer and Savior of men. His person is the great moral miracle of history, and rises in solitary grandeur above the surrounding plain of a fallen and sinful race—the one only sinless and perfect man, in whom "dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. ii, 9).

A biography of Christ is the most difficult task of the church historian. It was written by the evangelists only in fragments, but with unsurpassed simplicity, frankness, modesty, and reverence; and it can never be done any better for the general reader and for practical purposes. All attempts to versify or beautify the gospel story are failures. It is above all poetry. But it must be written and rewritten for scholars as well as the common people. Every age must renew for itself the picture of Christ, who is the inspiration of all ages and the model for all classes and conditions of men. He is, in the language of a distinguished man of letters, "our divinest symbol—a symbol of quite perennial, infinite character, whose significance will ever demand to be anew inquired into, and anew made manifest."

The dogmatic theologian may construct his Christology in a descending line, beginning, like John, with the eternal Logos in the bosom of the Godhead, and coming down to the incarnation. But the historian must follow rather the synoptical gospels, which begin with the human genealogy of Jesus, as the son of Abraham and of Adam, thus connecting him with the Jewish race and the whole human family. He must endeavor to construct a truly human history of Jesus of Nazareth from infancy to manhood, and mark the stages of his Messianic consciousness and his ethical development. Jesus lived, spoke, suffered, and died like a man, and became in all things like unto us. "The child grew, and waxed strong, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him" (Luke ii, 40). He "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Heb. iv, 15). He was made "perfect through sufferings. . . . In that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted" (Heb. ii, 10, 18).

But we search in vain for any moral defect in his private or public character. All his biographers (even Strauss and Renan) admit that history presents no parallel to him, and that religion has never risen so high as, nor can ever rise higher than, the Son of Mary. The perfection of Christ's humanity compels the recognition of his divinity, according to his own claim and the testimony of his disciples. The sinless Son of man is truly the Son of God, and all his amazing claims become intelligible and consistent only on the basis of his divine origin and character. With this admission, his miraculous works appear to be the natural and necessary manifestation of his miraculous person.

"Deep strike thy roots, O heavenly vine,
Within our earthly soil!
Most human and yet most divine,
The flower of man and God!"

Both Had Eczema
In Its Worst Form

After Physicians Failed, Hood's Sarsaparilla Perfectly Cured.

Great mental agony is endured by parents who see their children suffering from diseases caused by impure blood, and for which there seems no cure. This is turned to joy when Hood's Sarsaparilla is resorted to, for it expels the foul humors from the blood, and restores the diseased skin to fresh, healthy brightness. Read this:

"To C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"We think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most valuable medicine on the market for blood and skin diseases. Our two children suffered terribly with the

BRIEFS.

It is said that where this country sends one missionary to a heathen land, it sends 13,000 barrels of spirituous liquors.

Holiness is a flower which the world well knows it is incapable of producing out of its own soil; and when it sees it, it acknowledges that there must be another world to account for it."—Dr. Stalker.

If the Bible is no more than any other book, as the enemies of Christianity persist in asserting, then why does every generation witness such a vigorous attack upon it? Why not leave it to its fate, just as any other book is left? There is a very great inconsistency just at this point; but inconsistency is a small matter to the enemies of religion.

The District Attorney seems to be in hearty sympathy with Judges Ferguson and Moise in their fight for the execution of the law in this city. He has influenced the Police Board to require all police officers to execute the law impartially, and has filed an information against the chief of police for refusal to arrest persons when he saw them openly violating the law, and that worthy is now on bond. Let the good work of bringing all offenders to justice continue, and we shall afterwhile see a city under good government.

The Epworth Herald says: "Nothing succeeds like—hard work;" and it is true. Hard work is a talisman. It accomplishes all that is worth accomplishing. This is especially true on religious lines. A hard-working pastor, a hard-working steward, a hard-working Sunday-school superintendent, a hard-working teacher, a hard-working class leader—other things being equal—will achieve the greatest success. What we wish for and pray for and hope for is success. Then let us all work hard, and it will crown all effort. Let everybody in the church go to hard work during this 1893, and keep it up through the days and weeks and months to come, and when the year fades away it will leave all church work advanced to higher and better positions.

"I am doing a great work," said Nehemiah. The greatness of his work filled him with determination and zeal, and he went forward to a glorious achievement. Now, the lowliest worker in the Lord's vineyard is doing a much greater work than building brick and mud walls. He is building not only for time, but for the ages beyond time, and building of materials as indestructible as eternity characters that will last "as long as immortality endures." Will such a builder be negligent or indifferent or lazy? Christian worker, the first thing for you to do is to get a good conviction of the greatness of your work; and if that don't fill you with a restless enthusiasm, then lay down your implements and get out of the Lord's vineyard! If you don't intend to put forth the best that is in you during this year of grace, get out of the way and make room for some one who will do that thing.

We Begin Again.

We Christians ought to begin the work of the new year under a special inspiration of trust in that Savior who has called us to work in his vineyard. The Master has done much for us in the past, for which we should not forget to cultivate a spirit of gratitude. He promises much in the future, for which we should earnestly work in hope. To every Christian upon which this new year has dawned Christ is saying, "Work this year in my vineyard." Every Christian who has ears to hear has heard this injunction, and his peace of mind and progress in religion for the coming months depend upon how he heeds it. It won't do for any man or woman "who has tasted of the good word of God and the powers of the world to come" to say or even think, "I can do nothing." Christ never calls to duty without furnishing equipment. He has bestowed a gift upon everyone which will enable that one to meet and perform all the duties which grow out of his relations with God and man, and he promises "grace according to the measure of the gift." Inability to do duty is the flimsiest excuse that can be rendered, and avails nothing with him who endows with gift and grace.

We begin another year, then, assured by the Divine Word that whatever of divine qualification we need we already have or have promised to us. This ought to inspire us with confidence of success at the very inception of the year's work. Bro. Carradine used to say that the man who had God on his side was always in the majority, and might labor with a perfect faith in his ultimate success, because God always succeeds. Then, as we begin the year with God on our side, we should not only go at the work with courage and confidence, but with a courage and confidence which will inspire us to enlarge our plans and to put more zeal and energy and enthusiasm into the execution of those plans. Let us lay large plans at once, and be done with planning until they are wrought out perfectly. Some people are always planning, but rarely execute their plans. Under such a system solid work is not done. The Christian worker should plan largely and liberally for human good and the divine glory, and then put time and talent and will power and patience and bravery and perseverance and fortitude to work persistently to fill out the full measure of those large and liberal plans.

Some have been in the vineyard a long time, and, perhaps, are growing weary; but length of service is the very reason that they should do the best and most successful work. We have no patience with the silly sentimentalism that constructs a "dead line" for a Christian worker, and especially for a Christian preacher. If there is ever such a line drawn, it is not drawn by the Lord, but by the man himself, and he draws it by neglecting to use properly God's gift and grace. When God draws that line he takes the worker to his heavenly home. Weariness is nothing, and length of service gives experience and wisdom for future use. Let the aged workers remember the saying of the Arabs, that "a horse is never in prime condition to travel long and well until he has sweated and dried three times."

Then let us all, old and young, begin the year's work with large faith in God, large hope for humanity, large plans for work, and place every faculty of our being under contribution to furnish its share of power and persistence to execute our plans completely. If we all do this, "Zion will rejoice and the wilderness be made glad."

Dr. Morton's Birthday Band.

If anyone has discovered what Dr. Morton does not know about church extension, we have not yet come across that one. If anybody has invented an expedient for raising funds for church building, which has not before been suggested by the good Secretary, we would like to see that body. The portly Secretary evidently has church extension not only on his brain, but on his conscience—the place where all good causes should be laid. His brain is fruitful in expedients. It is a kind of "Ways and Means Committee" devising schemes for the furtherance of the great cause which the General Conference committed to his trust, and his pen is indefatigable in laying those schemes before the mind of the church, and his efforts are unceasing in trying to fasten them upon her conscience. The good Doctor looks upon his work, and rightly too, as one of the most important branches of church work. We say "rightly," because just there lies the secret of success. The man who does not regard his work of the very greatest importance will not do any great things on that line. But regarding it as of vital importance, he has a motive and spring to zeal and enthusiasm which will almost invariably carry him to success. Dr. Morton regards his work as of vital importance to the life and progress of the Lord's cause, and his quickened mental energies are continually evolving plans to sustain that life and accelerate that progress. One of his latest devices to raise funds for church building is, what he is pleased to call, a "Birthday Band for Church Extension." For getting up this Band, he has issued a "Birthday Card," the design of which is tasteful and appropriate. On one side is a beautiful picture of a neat church-building, alongside of which is an inscription from Ex. xxv, 8: "Let them make me a sanctuary that I may dwell among them." On the other side is the promise of a birthday contribution to church extension, and it reads as follows:

On my next birthday.....and each subsequent birthday for.....I agree to pay to the Board of Church Extension of the M. E. Church, South, $.....as a thank-offering to God for his continued mercies. To be applied by said Board to the Extension of Christ's Kingdom.

Name.....
Date.....189.... Post-office.....

Fill up the blanks, sign the card, and mail it for permanent register (which we will keep in our office) to David Morton, Secretary, 704 West Chestnut Street, Louisville, Ky., and when your birthday comes remit to him at same address amount of your offering.

While $1 entitles the giver to membership in the Birthday Band, many will give much more, and children will give according to their means. We must have one hundred thousand members who will give to this great cause $100,000.

It will be seen from this card how wisely our good Secretary plans his work, for this is a scheme which works good in two directions and on two different lines. These birthday contributions not only help the cause the Secretary has so much at heart, by providing means to carry it forward, but they greatly assist in sustaining and enlarging the spiritual growth of each individual contributor. Every contribution is a reminder of the special mercies and blessings from the Lord during a year, and no man or woman can have such memories without a spiritual uplift, and each birthday with its thank-offering is a perpetuation of that spiritual benefit. If carried out as it is intended, it is really a "means of grace" as well as of "money-getting" which the Secretary has invented.

We believe Dr. Morton devised this scheme for the special purpose of raising money to build a church in Osaka, Japan. We do not see why he should not get as much as he wants by this plan, if the preachers will present it properly to the people. We hope that our preachers will not lose any time in doing this. The matter is urgent and will be hazarded by postponement. Mississippi and Louisiana ought very quickly to furnish their quota to the one hundred thousand members of the Birthday Band. Send to Dr. Morton's office, 705 West Chestnut street, Louisville, Ky., and get a card and fill out the blanks with a good round sum for a thank-offering and a long term of years or for life, and return it to him, and then don't forget to remit the sum promised on each successive birthday, and if you don't feel better for all time to come, then write down this writer as a false prophet.

A Debt-Paying Religion.

One of the greatest needs of the times is for a quickening of the public conscience with regard to the sacredness of financial obligation. It is simply appalling how carelessly men make debts, and how indifferent they are to their payment. So far has this gone that the question is often asked: "Are there any that are honest?" "Are there any that may be trusted?"

We have not yet lost faith in human integrity. We know that there are many, both in and out of the church, whose word is as good as their bond. At the same time, however, we are painfully impressed with the lax ideas, and laxer practice, that prevail among many in their business transactions. This laxity, or, to put it more plainly, this want of common honesty, is by no means confined to those outside of the church. On the contrary, many church members, and some, too, who make pretension to more than ordinary sanctity, are as indifferent to monetary obligation as the veriest son of Belial; and the reproach that such conduct brings upon the cause of Christ is simply incalculable.

Mr. Wesley was a man of extraordinary wisdom. One of the "Rules" for the government of his societies, and still a rule in the Discipline of the Methodist Church, forbids the "taking up of goods without the probability of paying for them." This rule, if faithfully observed, would save us from uncounted embarrassments and unmeasured shame and reproach. But it is disregarded times without number by a very large proportion of our membership. Men and women "take up goods" and assume financial obligations with as little prospect of the ability of meeting them as there is that the alchemist will succeed in his efforts to transmute the baser metals into gold. If these debts were contracted for bread to keep starvation from the door, there might be some extenuation, if not justification. But how often are they contracted for the luxuries as well as the necessaries of life. The demands of fashion must be met, a false pride must be gratified, it matters not at whose expense. And as debts accumulate and the impossibility of their payment becomes more certain, the indifference to them grows until all sense of obligation and of shame is lost forever.

Is it not time for the pulpit and press to speak out more plainly and pointedly on this subject? The Advocate thinks so. A religion that does not teach men to pay their honest debts is not the religion of Christ. A sanctity that is compatible with a want of common honesty is not the sanctity taught in the Bible. If men are wanting in common probity, they should not be tolerated in the church of God, much less should they be allowed to air themselves before our congregations, as is sometimes the case.

The people must be taught that it is a sin against God as well as man to make debts without the probability of paying them. They must be impressed with the truth that it is better to starve and maintain one's integrity than to live in comfort and affluence at the sacrifice of principle. They must be impressed with the duty and necessity of economy and frugality lest the want of these bring dishonor upon themselves and the church of God. They must be urged to greater industry in order that they may meet the obligations that are already upon them.

In cases where members of the church can and will not pay their debts, they should be dealt with as the Discipline directs. We desire that the world should know that the Methodist Church does not propose to wink at or extenuate dishonesty, whether it be among the lofty or the low. Our mission is "to spread scriptural holiness over the land," and it is no part of holiness to neglect or refuse to pay one's honest debts.

The church and the world need a debt-paying revival, and this revival, like all others, should "begin in the house of God." If we have any preachers who have been careless in this matter heretofore, let them pay up and amend their lives, or else for God's and the church's sake let them surrender their credentials and withdraw from the ministry. If we have any members of the "chief estate in Israel," who are under a like condemnation, let them cease their loud professions of superior sanctity until they are able to lift up the heads of honest men. If we have any members, however humble they may be, who have sinned in this regard, let them repent and make restitution, that times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord.

This may be plain talk, but it is no plainer than the case requires. It is time that some one should speak out on this subject. It has been too much neglected already by pulpit and press, or there would not be the present necessity for exhortation and expostulation. If our religion does not make us honest, of what account is it? If it has not power enough to induce us to pay the washerwoman, how will it avail us "in the swellings of Jordan?" It is high time that there should be an awakening on this subject, and the Advocate cheerfully consents to become a target for many "an arrow with venom flung," if it can contribute to the dawning of such a day.—Southern Christian Advocate.

A Short Sermon to the Membership.

We clip from the Interior a brief sermon which we trust every reader will ponder, especially the stewards.

"Now if Timotheus come, see that he be without fear; for he worketh the work of the Lord as I also do." The obvious duty of the church with respect to the Christian minister. He is to be with you without fear. In order to this: 1. Supply his pecuniary need, and let him not fear as to his temporal support. 2. Give him your confidential and affectionate countenance, and let him be without fear as to the position he occupies in your esteem. 3. Be regular in your attendance on the means of grace, and let him not fear the acceptance of his ministry among you. 4. Unite with him in every holy enterprise, and let him not fear desertion in his efforts to do good. 5. Pray fervently and continually for him, and let him not fear devotional neglect. 6. Exhibit the holy fruit of his labors, and let him not fear losing his reward in that great day.

The firmness of Deputy District Attorney Adams has borne good fruit, and shows what officials can do when they have a mind. Last Sunday, it is reported, everything was closed in obedience to the Sunday law. Good for Adams!

NOTES.

Louisiana gave Cleveland a larger majority than any other State in the Union. It was 62 590.

During this year of grace, 1893, let everybody talk less of saving souls and do more of the work which will bring about that glorious result.

Many of the preachers who imagine themselves too busy with their books to do the work that they have solemnly pledged themselves to do on the outside are not students at all in any effective sense, but simply loungers in libraries.—Nashville Advocate.

"There are preachers talking about their sacrifices to enter the ministry who would have never gotten out of sight of the smoke that curled up from their daddies' cabins if it had not been for the Methodist Church!" Do any of the Louisiana preachers remember to have heard that sentence uttered?

The measure of the ADVOCATE's power for good is the number of people who read it. Then, if we would increase in doing good, let us increase the number of readers. Let all the preachers and lay readers of the ADVOCATE work together on this line and see what a long list of subscribers we can roll up during this year.

Gifts are still flowing largely toward institutions of learning already well endowed. Some people may think us unwise, but we do not believe that it the better way. It may be a good thing to give a great college a million of dollars, but it would be a decidedly better thing to divide that million among half-dozen smaller colleges that are struggling to live, and are yet doing as good educational work as the great schools. We are getting too many universities in this country. If we keep on, we will have to import students for them.

I think the appointments gave general satisfaction, as I heard little complaint. Apart this business of complaining, I noticed that the men who serve the hard circuits and missions and who produce the results desired seldom complain. Complaints, ordinarily, come from those who claim pre emption rights to the prominent stations, whose brilliant genius the church has failed to discover. What a pity the church does not own and use a microscope for the detection of the microbes of genius! But, alas! many of these flowers are doomed to waste their sweetness on the desert air. —C. C. Armstrong, in Texas Advocate.

The wealthy men of the church are not contributing their share toward the support of preachers. We know towns where men give $25, $30, $40 and $50, that ought to give $75 and $100. The poor are squeezed for money they can not spare, and the preacher is stinted and bankrupted. This world will not be taken for Christ by a picayune policy.—Holston Methodist.

"Truth is stranger than fiction." The paragraph quoted above contains one of the strangest facts we knew of. It is as true, Bro. Price, hereabouts as it is in the Holston country. We could name many men and women in Louisiana who are not doing their duty on this line.

The "iron wheel" annually crushes out of existence a full brood of new paperettes, organs of circuits, stations and districts. A few escape, like crippled grasshoppers, and fly over the fence into a neighboring "field," only to be crushed by the "rotary" engine a little later. Some men seem not to live long enough to learn that a few of discolored paper and a handful of dirty and ill assorted types do not make a newspaper. Literature must have a certain degree of respectability in paper, types and ink before it is ready to be served to the public; and in order to secure this respectability there must be an ample bank account somewhere. Even a bank account will not lubricate always. Plenty of paying subscribers will solve the problem of perpetual motion, so far as a newspaper is concerned. Nothing else will.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

Richard Baxter once said: "My rule has been to study to need as little as possible for myself, to lay out nothing on need-nots; to live frugally on little; to serve God on what he allowed me, so that what I took for self might be as good work for the common good as that which I gave to others; and then to do all the good I could with the rest. The more I have done this the more I have had to do with. When I gave away almost all, the more came in, I scarce knew how, when unexpected and unplanned for. When of improvidence I was led to use too much on myself or on things of little importance, then I prospered less than when I did otherwise. If I had planned to give only after my death, then all might have been lost; whereas, when I gave away at present and trusted to God for the future, then I wanted nothing and less nothing."

The Interstate Commerce Commission has made its fourth statistical report, from which we glean some interesting figures in regard to railroads. The number of railroad corporations on June, 30, 1891, were 1,785; mileage, 168 402 miles; number of locomotives, 32,139; number of cars, 1,215,611; men employed, 784 285; total capitalization, $9,829,475,015; gross earnings, $1 092,761,395; operating expenses, $731,887,893; net earnings, $364 873,502; freight traffic produced 67 per cent. of the gross earnings; accidents resulted in killing 7,029 persons and injuring 33,881 persons; number of passengers killed, 293; injured, 2,972. These are interesting figures, and show what an enormous business railroading is in this country.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

It is just sixty years since Mr. Gladstone entered Parliament!

There are in Texas 155 738 Southern Methodists. The increase last year was 7 854.

Dr. W. T. Harris, of the Memphis Conference, gave us an appreciated call last week.

Obituaries without a signature go the way of all other unsigned articles—into the waste-basket.

Be sure to read the article in another column, entitled "A Debt-Paying Religion," and then show it to your neighbor.

Our good Brother Kirkland, of the Southern, has had a tussle with the grip. At last accounts he was in view of victory.

Rev. J. W. Chambers, agent for Millsaps College, spent an hour with us last week, and made it a pleasant hour to us.

There is one silly thing that a great many sensible people have been doing lately, and that is, writing "Xmas" for "Christmas!"

We regret to record the illness of Dr. I. W. Cooper, at Hazlehurst, Miss. We trust that it may be only a temporary matter.

Rev. F. S Parker, our pastor at New Iberia, La., gladdened the hearts of his friends here by spending several days of last week among them.

Bishop Galloway told the Louisiana preachers not to nominate a man for the Board of Stewards who was not a subscriber to the Conference paper!

Dr. Briggs, who has for several weeks been on trial for heresy before the New York Presbytery, has been declared "not guilty" on all the charges made.

We regret to note that the dispatches give the sad intelligence that Dr. C. F. Deems, of the Church of the Strangers, New York City, has been partially paralyzed.

Gov. Foster has appointed Hon. Don Caffery, United States senator, in place of Hon. R. L. Gibson, deceased. This we regard as a very suitable appointment.

How you, stewards, held your meeting and determined your financial course for the year? Don't be late in beginning. The sooner you begin, the better headway you will make.

Poor old Centenary! The Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences gave it a simultaneous whack over the head during their late sessions. With neither Conference to act the parents' part, the old college seems to be turned out to orphanage.

Rev. J. S. Oakley, our new pastor at Greenville, Miss., writes Dec. 31: "We have received a most enthusiastic welcome to Greenville. I was pastor here eighteen years ago, and find many of the friends of former days. Parsonage elegant and commodious—pantry full."

The Christian Endeavor Societies of this city will hold their regular quarterly "Union Meeting" next Sunday, Jan. 8, at 6 P. M., in the lecture-room of the Prytania Street Presbyterian Church, on Josephine street, near Prytania. All interested in Christian Endeavor or Epworth League work are cordially invited to attend.

Our good friend, Dr. J. B. Walker, passed the seventy-sixth mile stone last Monday. For fifty-six years he has been on the walls of Zion proclaiming the gospel of peace. That is not a common record. The Doctor is still busy in the Master's service and expects to do a good deal more labor before he is called away. God bless him and all the other old veterans! What could the church do without them?

One of our Bishops is reported to have said that "some presiding elders were like a sow and a slop tub; you had to pull her ears off to get her to it, and her tail off to get her away."—Texas Advocate.

Rev. A. F. Watkins preached a very able sermon to his congregation at the First Methodist Church, Sunday morning, from the theme of "Christ manifest in the flesh." His introductory remarks touching upon the work before him in the field he was about to enter were well chosen and gracefully delivered—Clarion.

Rev. W. B. Lewis and family leave to-day by the steamer, C. D. Shaw, for Natchez, the scene of his pastorate for the next few years. As minister in charge of the Crawford Street M. E. Church, Mr. Lewis won many friends here who part with him and his amiable wife and children with great regret, a feeling which the community shares with his entire congregation.—Vicksburg Herald.

Catarrh Cures Considered.

THEIR EFFECTS, DEFECTS, AND DIFFERENCES.

Catarrh medicines are of two classes—those that cure and those that relieve. Those that cure are called specifics; those that only relieve are called palliatives. The number of specific catarrh remedies is small indeed; the number of catarrh palliatives is legion. The effect of catarrh palliatives is often immediate, but always temporary; they never cure. This kind of catarrh medicines includes sprays, snuffs, inhalants, gargles, and local applications of all kinds. They seem to cure for awhile, but the disease is sure to return.

Pe-ru-na belongs to the class of catarrh remedies called specifics. Peru-na does not palliate the symptoms, but cures the disease. It is sometimes slow in its action on old cases of chronic catarrh, but it is sure, and its effects are permanent. It is also an unfailing remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, consumption in its early stages, and all the chronic diseases of Winter. An excellent treatise on catarrh will be sent free to any address by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

Notice.

To Friends of Indian Mission:

Dear Brethren and Sisters: My postoffice will now be changed from Barlow, Copiah county, Miss., to Oakridge, Warren county, Miss.

Please note change and govern yourselves accordingly, and I am now ready to receive amounts for second year. You that have paid first installment, please send on your second installment; and you that have not paid at all, please send two payments, if possible. We will have two missionaries instead of one to support this year. With Dr. Carter's permission, I will give a full statement of first year's work soon. Please remit amounts at once. Your brother in Christ,

A. D. MILLER.

Missionary Debt.

Since last report the following payments have reached me on account of Missionary Debt:

SEASHORE DISTRICT.

From Hattiesburg, per M. H. Moore, District Solicitor ..... $ 15 00

This makes $519 55 from the Seashore district, and $1 109 74 from all the seven districts. The Week of Prayer and Self-denial ought to yield, at least, $3,000 from over 40 000 members. Let no preacher fail to lead his flock in the observance of this week set apart by the constituted authorities of our church.

T. L. MELLEN,
Solicitor for the Miss. Conf.

Meridian, Miss., Dec 26, 1892.

Mississippi Conference Minutes.

The manuscripts were all placed in the hands of the printer to-day, with the assurance that the Minutes would be forthcoming as soon as possible. The pages for the postoffices of the preachers will be left open to the last. Where your postoffice is not well known, please forward the name of it to me, at Vicksburg, without delay.

"Honesty is the best policy." Nobody contradicts it. Your dealer can get lamp-chimneys that almost never break from heat, or those that break continually. Which does he get? Which do you get?

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" are tough against heat; not one in a hundred breaks in use. The glass is clear as well as tough. They are accurate, uniform.

Be willing to pay more for chimneys that last till they rot, unless some accident happens to them.

A Literary Sensation!

Written by an Atlanta Clergyman.

"THE MAKING OF A MAN," BY DR. J. W. LEE.

The Sensation the Book Has Produced in Literary Circles.

No Book of Recent Publication Has Been More Discussed or More Praised—Some of the Press Comments.

It remained for a preacher of the M E Church, South—Dr. J. W. Lee, of Atlanta, Ga.—to write the book which created the greatest sensation during the past year.

The first edition of Dr. Lee's book has already been exhausted, although it was first published only two months ago.

Perhaps no book written by an American author ever jumped into such sudden favor.

To show how the book has been received we have been furnished the following extracts from several reviews of the great work:

"It is worthy to be one of the Bampton lectures."—Bishop J. C. Keener.

"In its insight and wealth of thought it is not unworthy to be ranked with the best work of Huxley or Spencer, and in the beauty of its literary form and breadth of treatment it need not fear comparison with Emerson at his best."—New York Tribune.

"It deserves all the Tribune says of it."—Bishop A. G. Haygood.

"It will live and take rank among the great works of our time."—Hon. Henry W. Hilliard.

"None but a high order of man could have written the book."—Judge Logan E. Bleckley.

"It is most lucidly written."—Dr. J. H. Shirling, Edinburgh, Scotland.

"I expect to read it with great interest and delight."—Principal John Caird, University of Glasgow.

"Thought provoking and pleasing in style."—Bishop R K Hargrove.

"Stimulating intellectually and morally."—New York Home Journal.

"Thoughtful people will read the book with intense interest."—Boston Home Journal.

"Sure to attract attention."—Minneapolis Commercial Bulletin.

"A model of elegant writing."—Philadelphia Item.

"A very good book."—Chicago Herald.

"The author has done honest and vigorous thinking."—Boston Congregationalist.

"Clear, forceful and sweet."—St. Paul Church Work.

"Has the clearness of expression that both scholars and those who are not scholars alike demand."—Zion's Herald, Boston.

"Should command a wide reading."—Boston Times.

"This is a remarkable book."—Boston Traveler.

"With a thoroughly modern and progressive spirit is combined a conservative disposition toward historic conceptions of the divine part in human affairs."—Boston Literary World.

"It revolves around the fine idea and true one, that man is the interpretation of nature, and that his evolution is the ultimate end of all the relations which man sustains to life and nature."—New York Independent.

"An elegant style, and the marks of extended reading add to the attractiveness of the volume."—Boston Golden Rule.

"It will be read with interest, and its brilliance can not fail to be good."—San Francisco Chronicle.

"We would rather have written 'The Making of a Man' than to have written any prose work, of which we have any knowledge, from a Southern brain."—Wilmington Messenger.

"Dr. Lee has builded the book of superior stuff, like the blocks in the Washington monument—chiseled, exact, solid, rich."—Richmond Christian Advocate.

"You can not read the classic sentences of the gifted author and follow him as he treads the paths of history and philosophy, pointing out the peaks of progress, without feeling an uplift."—Central Kentucky Methodist.

"Can not be too warmly commended."—Review of Reviews.

"Stimulating, refreshing, broadening and thought-provoking."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"Clearness of thought, satisfactory logic and lucid expression are found in this discussion of the old, yet ever new, question of our purpose and being."—New York Christian Advocate.

"The agnostic notion that man belongs merely to the animal kingdom and has none of his own, is ably combatted throughout the book."—Brooklyn Eagle.

"A strong, analytical work."—St. Louis Republic.

"A work of permanent value."—Augusta Chronicle.

"The author is fully abreast of the generalizations of the scientific thought of to-day."—Buffalo Commercial.

"The discussion is striking and out of the beaten course."—New York Recorder.

"He rightly holds that the meaning of creation is only to be seen in the development of humanity."—Critic.

"Dr. Lee has given to the world a volume as lustrous as gold and enduring like asbestos."—Dr. J. W. Hinton.

"It is literally 'up to date.'"—Chicago Epworth Herald.

"The weakness of the Spencerian 'unknowable' argument is very clearly shown."—Minneapolis Journal.

"The book is well written and well intentioned."—Open Court, Chicago.

"The author at one step has placed himself among the foremost thinkers of the day."—Pacific Methodist.

"It presents an able digest of man's history from the cradle to the grave. The work is written with a boldness which is astonishing from one of the cloth."—American Hebrew.

"It is a valuable book."—Boston Herald.

"'The Making of a Man,' by Rev. J. W. Lee, D. D., is a book that will strengthen many a wavering religious inquirer and bold him to a religious belief."—Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin.

"It is a fresh, vigorous, scholarly discussion—a valuable contribution to the higher thought of the day."—Bishop C. B. Galloway.

"The book is substantial, strengthening, elevating, and will be 'the making of a man,' to such as are in doubt and uncertainty in regard to eternal things."—Anglo-American, City of Mexico.

"Fresh and thoughtful."—Advance, Chicago.

"Dr. Lee may fairly be called the Ingersoll of the new orthodoxy, for eloquence, strength and beauty of presentation which characterize the writing and utterances of the great agnostic are everywhere present in Dr. Lee's inspiring work!"—The Arena, Boston.

"Thoughtful, yet readable in a high degree; stimulating in the best sense of the word; masterly in argument, and sweet in spirit, it will make a way for itself in the literary world to a place of distinguished influence. We never remember to have heard of the author before, but he has produced a book of singular beauty and force which will make him in great demand among scholars."—Kansas City Messenger.

"A wonderfully able book."—Dr. Chas. F. Deems.

"As plain and clear as if written for the young, as profound as if written only for scholars."—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

"One of the most grateful and satisfactory views of mind and man I ever read."—Rev. Dr. A. F. Sherrill.

"It must be a joy to have produced as strong, brilliant and popular a book as 'The Making of a Man.' It is a fine stroke."—Bishop John H. Vincent.

If you have a husband, wife, sister, brother, father, mother, son, daughter or sweetheart or friend, you can select nothing more appropriate than "The Making of a Man." The Cassell Publishing Company, recognizing the great value of the work, have put it into the most attractive, elegant form. It is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. It is on sale at all the bookstores.

We desire to call special attention of our numerous readers to the annual statement of the Southern National Bank, which appears in another column. By comparison with its annual statement of Jan. 1, 1892, there will be seen that this bank has trebled its business. Its success is largely due to the financial ability, as well as the courteousness, of Mr. J. W. Castles, president, and Mr. T. R. Roach, the efficient cashier. The publisher, in visiting different adjacent cities, finds that this bank has numerous friends among the banks and bankers of Louisiana and Mississippi. It is worthy of the large patronage it is now receiving, and we trust that its prosperity of 1893 will eclipse that of 1892.

In the chapter on "Brain and Nerve Foods," contained in his recent work on "Nerve Waste," Dr. H C. Sawyer gives the following unsolicited testimony to the value of Walter Baker & Co.'s Cocoa: "Baker's Breakfast Cocoa is a light preparation which can be heartily recommended. It contains only so much fat as can be digested by almost anyone, and is peculiar in not cloying or palling after a time, as so many cocoa preparations do. Such a beverage is far more wholesome and more agreeable, after one becomes used to it, than tea, which is much over-used. It is especially useful for children. Our little boy has drunk it since he was a year and a half old; has become inordinately fond of it, and has kept as 'fat as a pig,' as we say."

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.—Dear brother, dear sister, sing! Don't sit in church with your mouth closed like a steel-trap, but open it, and open it wide, and sing. And sing all the way through. Don't think that the organist and the minister are to give you a sacred concert, but remember that you, your very self, are to take an active part in the worship of God, and open your mouth and sing. It may be you are not a fine singer—few of us are. You need not attempt to lead the congregation in singing unless you know you can do it. But you can sing well enough to take part. Above all, do not sit and look into futurity while your pastor strains soul and body to have the hymn sung. Get a hymn book and look up the hymns, and sing. And if you will not sing, please do not criticise those that do the best they can. Better a tone that is incorrect than none at all. This word is to all the silent worshipers in our churches.—Moravian.

HOME LIFE.

IT DOESN'T COST MONEY.

BY W. C. DODGE.

It doesn't cost money, as many suppose,
To have a good time on the earth:
The best of its pleasures are free unto those
Who know how to value their worth.

The sweetest of music the birds to us sing,
The loveliest flowers grow wild,
The finest of drinks gushes out of the spring—
All free to men, woman and child.

No money can purchase, no artist can paint
Such pictures as nature supplies
Forever, all over, to sinner and saint
Who use to advantage their eyes.

Kind words and glad looks and smiles, cheery and brave,
Cost nothing—no, nothing at all,
And yet all the wealth Monte Cristo could save
Can make no such pleasures befall.

To bask in the sunshine, to breathe the pure air,
Honest toil the enjoyment of health,
Sweet slumber refreshing—these pleasures we share
Without any portion of wealth.

Communion with friends that are tried, true and strong,
To love and to be loved for love's sake—
In fact, all that makes a life happy and long
Are free to whoever will take.

It doesn't cost money to have a good time,
And that is the reason, alas!
Why many who might have enjoyment sublime
Their lives in such misery pass.

It doesn't cost money to have a good time;
The world's best enjoyments are free;
But those who find pleasure in folly and crime
Will put with these true words agree.

The Exercise of the Spiritual Faculty.

That is a terribly significant confession made by the great scientist, Darwin. As reported by his son in the letter's biography of his father, Darwin tells us how he was a lover of literature in his early days, delighting in Shakespeare and the other poets. But after years of scientific activity and interest, he found, on taking them up again, that he had not only grown indifferent to them, but that they were even distasteful to him. He had, as it were, suffered a sort of atrophy of that side of his nature—the emotional-imaginative, we might call it.

The case of Darwin illustrates a law, a principle, to wit, that the spiritual faculty lives or dies by exercise or the want of it, even as the body. We are well aware, as we meet our fellow-mortals in the world, that the difference between them with respect to spiritual development is enormous; and we incline to say, perhaps, that this difference is a generic one, due to heredity, to birth, although fostered by breeding and life-habits. It is likely, however, that, far more than we imagine, the vigorous state of the higher nature in some, the woful lack of it in others, comes of cultivation on the one hand, and of neglect on the other. The majority, like Darwin, have the matter in their own hands to begin with, are responsive along the ranges of the pure and ennobling qualities of the spirit. All that falls under the head of the religious, moral, spiritual, in them, lies like a fallow field ready for the plow, but demanding the tiller if it is ever to become white to the harvest. But men are engrossed in practical affairs before they know it, and, again like Darwin (save that their interests and passions are neither so pure nor so fruitful as his), they let the potential grain stay forever underground.

It is as absurd to expect the soul to wax and thrive on no exercise as it is to ask the right arm to show a big biceps when always carried in a sling. We hear a great deal nowadays about the proper care of the body; this may almost be called the age of the exaltation of physique. At heart this is a wholesome reaction from the monkish medievalism which saw merit in scourgings of the flesh and a general mortification of the corporeal man. If not pushed too far, it simply means a recognition of the value and dignity of the body as the soul's dwelling. But there is an incidental danger in it: we are apt to forget that the soul needs muscle too, and can not get it without due exercise.

A weekly stipend of spiritual exercise is what many good people give themselves, and even that half grudgingly. And the Sunday newspaper and other like secularities have a tendency to encroach on this hebdomadal activity. But a daily exercise—some bit of noble literature read, some meditation on nature, some uplifting talk with one interested in higher things—will, by just so much, make athletic and alive that principle in man which answers to stern laws of use, abuse, and disuse quite as inevitably and speedily as any part of us whatsoever, physical, mental, or moral. Hence the absurdity of placing a death-bed penitence on a par with a life of spiritual exercise—the assumption that the dwarfed starveling of a soul is as ready for a loftier, more disencumbered life as that which has for years been growing stronger and more symmetrical by the surest of all ways—by actual, ever-repeated exercitation. The choice is before everyone, the chance is given with open hand. Athletes of the soul are as possible as athletes of the body, and exercise is the one road to strength in the one or the other.—Sunday-School Times.

The Gain of Sunday Rest.

Of course I do not mean that a man will not produce more in a week by working seven days than by working six days. But I very much doubt whether at the end of the year he will generally produce more by working seven days in a week than by working six days in a week. The natural difference between Campania and Spitzbergen is trifling when compared with the difference between a country inhabited by men full of bodily and mental vigor, and a country inhabited by men sunk in bodily and mental decrepitude. Therefore, it is that we are not poorer, but richer, because we have through many ages rested from our labors one day in seven. The day is not lost. While industry is suspended, while the plow lies in the furrow, while the exchange is silent, while no smoke ascends from the factory, a process is going on quite as important to the wealth of the nation as the work which is performed on more busy days. Man—the machine of machines—the machine compared with which all the contrivances of the Watts and Arkwrights are worthless—is repairing and winding up, so that he returns to his labors on Monday with clearer intellect and livelier spirits, with renewed corporeal vigor.—Lord Macaulay.

Although flint is so indestructible that the strongest chemical acid is required for its solution, plants possess the power of readily dissolving and secreting it.

The Little Rift.

Watch beginnings. There is always a point where the entering wedge breaks in and after this the progress of disintegration is easy. It is the first quarrel which makes possible the next, and, after one or two fights and reconciliations, those who love each other, it may be devotedly, grow accustomed to strife and no longer feel horror-stricken at the bare mention of it. The little rift is not more than a handbreadth, but it may widen and broaden until alienation and distress and the wreck of all household happiness follow the first tiny fracture of peace.

In the union of husband and wife, which is the most intimate and confidential relationship on earth, there must be something more than mere superficial admiration the one for the other. These two have pledged to one another a life-long consecration. Their interests are to be in common. Nothing can affect one without equally affecting the other. For weal or woe they have joined hands and to the whole outside world they present a united front.

And yet, if testimony could be taken, it would be found that many married people have not been perfectly happy during the early years of wedlock. There has been friction. There has been disappointment. The little rift has been suffered to open the way for estrangement.

"We decided," said a man whose long life has been singularly tranquil and satisfactory; "we decided, my wife and I, when we were married, that we would never let the sun go down on any lack of peace between us. We would ask one another's pardon if necessary, but we would never quarrel. One or the other should always give up a point on which both could not agree, and, whatever else came to us, we resolved to have no discord." Beware of the little rift.

"It is the little rift within the lute,
That by and by will make the music mute."

—Harper's Bazar.

Silent Forces.

Silence is an evidence of power. All great forces work silently. It is only the energy of little things which expends itself in noise and violence. The power which carries millions of worlds through millions of miles of space is as noiseless as the drifting of a bit of thistledown; whereas the engine which crushes a fragment of rock in a corner of the universe sends its vibrations in sound-waves through the inestimable expanse of ether.

So it is with human lives. It is weakness and smallness that make most of the clamor in the world. True power runs deeply and silently. The great soul always has a tendency to repression. Its strength does not lie on the surface, but deep down, so that its action is not readily seen or heard. But it accomplishes the great things of life.

True character—the character that influences the world—is for the most part silent. It does not work by exhortation, persuasion, or any form of words soever, but by faithful living, noble action, sweet and quiet influence. These are the silent, but potent forces which rule the moral universe. Men may preach and exhort, entreat and command, but after all it is silent character which influences and moves the world. One true, consistent, noble, God-like man in a community is like a central sun around which a little universe of humanity revolves. What that man does is more than what all others say; how he lives, is better and more potential gospel than can be preached by any lips. The power of genuine character is both magnetic and dynamic. It attracts, and it compels. But all its action goes on in silence. Its gospel is not proclaimed, but lived. The deed comes before the word, and needs no word to utter it. Such lives, expressing themselves in character, are God's best evangels. They are the silent, but prevailing forces which hasten on the coming of Christ's kingdom.—Zion's Herald.

Personal Responsibility.

None of us are lost in the multitude. Every man must answer for himself at the judgment-seat of Christ. It has been truthfully said that,

"From Adam to his youngest heir,
Not one escaped that muster roll,
Each as if he alone were there
Stood up and won or lost his soul!"

In the fearful arraignment of that day, the character and conduct, the plans and purposes, the words and actions of every man shall be tried by the unerring standard of justice. "The Lord is a God of knowledge, and weigheth the actions of men."

Every man's influence goes before him into eternity. How many of your friends and kindred have died whose character and destiny were fixed by your personal influence. And when you are dead your influence will be left behind for good or evil. You are responsible for your influence whether living or dead.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

Keep Still.

In one of Dr. Burton's lectures the following advice was given to the young ministers: "When trouble is brewing, keep still. When your feelings are hurt, keep still; till you recover from your excitement, at any rate. Things look differently through an unagitated eye. In a commotion once I wrote a letter and sent it, and wished I had not. In my later years, I had another commotion, and wrote a long letter; but life had rubbed a little sense into me, and I kept that letter in my pocket against the day when I could look it over without agitation and without tears. I was glad I did. Silence is the most massive thing conceivable, sometimes. It is strength in its very grandeur. It is like a regiment, ordered to stand still in the mad fury of battle. To plunge in were twice as easy. The tongue has unsettled more ministers than small salaries ever did, or lack of ability."—Workman.

Some remarkably clever person in St. Petersburg has arranged and placed on exhibition a clock with a phonograph attachment that will repeat at an hour set, according to the possessor's desire, any orders or announcements as may be committed to it. This the New York Tribune rightly calls a great boon to the tired house-mother, and adds that in the nursery the solemn time-piece could be made to say, "Children, it is time to get up; dress quickly, and do not dawdle." In the kitchen, at an early hour, it would be ready with, "Breakfast at eight sharp, Mary; don't forget;" and in the breakfast-room, "You must start in ten minutes, or you will lose your train." The dial of this clock of the future is, we are told, a human face, from whose nose any mouth comes the announcement of the hours, as well as any directions that may be left with it.

Mankind is always happier for having been made happy. If you make them happy now you will make them thrice happy twenty years hence in the memory of it.—Sydney Smith.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

SOMETHING FOR CHILDREN.

There's enough for you children to do in the house,
To keep you as busy as any old mouse.
There are errands to run,
Little tasks to be done
That will do much to lighten your mother's hard work,
So, children, don't shirk,
But do what you can;
You'll be glad when you're grown
To a women or men.

There'e enough for you children to do all about,
If you try you will very soon find some work out.
There are chickens to tend,
Little tasks without end,
You will find you can do if you just take a start.
So, children, be smart,
And do what you can;
You'll be glad when you're grown
To a woman or man.

There's enough for you children to do anywhere,
So hurry around and seek do your full share.
And just see how bright
You will feel when at night
You can think you have done what is honest and fair.
So, children, take care
To do what you can;
You'll be glad when you're grown
To a women or man.

People always in looking it over, can tell
If you hurry it through,
Whatever you do,
Not caring at all if it's done ill or well;
So whatever you do,
Do the best that you can;
You'll be glad when you're grown
To a woman or man.

To Japan.

IN CHICAGO.

Japanese students are apt to ask an American if he has been to Niagara Falls, New York, San Francisco, and Chicago. Before the end of next year Chicago will have been gazed at by all the world. Several natives of Matsuyama intend to go to the Fair, and Japanese generally are taking a lively interest in it. At Kioto, in August, I saw in the shops silk embroidery and enamel ware that were to be sent for exhibition; and it is probable that some of them will take prizes. Visitors to Chicago can not be disappointed in their expectations of a magnificent city. And, if the heathen who go there can see as much of the spiritual as they will of the material, the effect will be greatly good.

The Canadian Pacific Railroad and Steamship Company has an office in Chicago. We hastened to it, and bought tickets and arranged for baggage to Kobe, Japan.

Saturday afternoon we went to the Fair Grounds. Anything small would not be noticed in Chicago, where you may go into the twentieth story of buildings, and where the fifteenth story is a common thing. These heights were wonderful, indeed, to Bro. Yoshioka. In Japan the houses are "born of the earthquake," and low. Sunday morning revealed the different delegations to the National Convention marching through the streets. I went to the First Methodist Church. A wind had a few days before disturbed the peace of the city, and the text of the preacher was: "The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet." Chicago people take pride in their public schools. The speaker allured by some reference to these, he informed by illustrations of the mysteriousness of God in his dealings with men and nations. The plan of salvation was announced, and then for 4,000 years there was no sign of development. "Why was not the question involved in the late war settled in another way?" the women of '61-5 ask. "Why is my house lonely? my heart sad?" God will not answer. Shall the monster answer to the minute? It have been able to use this thought in reply to a doubting question of a young Japanese. The speaker then impressed with a desire to be submissive. The storm is the lullaby of God and is only the lifting into his chariot. In the afternoon there was a very enthusiastic consecration service.

H. G. HAWKINS.

Filling a Basket with Water.

An Eastern king was once in need of a faithful servant and friend. He gave notice that he wanted a man to do a day's work, and two men came and asked to be employed. He engaged them both for certain fixed wages, and set them to work to fill a basket with water from a neighboring well, saying he would come in the evening and see their work. He then left them to themselves and went away.

After putting in one or two bucketfuls, one of the men said:

"What is the good of doing this useless work? As soon as we put the water in on one side, it runs out on the other."

The other man answered:

"But we have our day's wages, haven't we? The use of the work is the master's business, not ours."

"I am not going to do such fool's work," replied the other, and, throwing down his bucket, he went away.

The other man continued his work, till, about sunset, he exhausted the well. Looking down into it, he saw something shining at the bottom. He let down his bucket once more, and drew up a precious diamond ring.

"Now I see the use of pouring water into a basket," he exclaimed to himself. "If the bucket had brought up the ring before the well was dry, it would have been found in the basket. The labor was not useless, after all."

But he had yet to learn why the king had ordered this apparently useless task. It was to test their capacity for perfect obedience, without which no servant is reliable.

At this moment the king came up to him, and, as he bade the man keep the ring, he said:

"Thou hast been faithful in a little thing; now I see I can trust thee in great things. Henceforward thou shalt stand at my hand."

SCIENTIFIC.

Sex in Education.

BY SIR JAMES CRICHTON BROWNE, M. D., LL. D., F. R. S.

The purpose of the present paper is to direct attention to certain sexual differences in the brain which have been greatly lost sight of, but which are of peculiar significance in connection with intellectual manifestations.

And first among cerebral differences between the sexes, I would refer to mass and weight, qualities with which one almost insensibly associates power and strength. Now, it is a matter of common observation that women have smaller heads than men, and it is a matter of scientific observation that in all peoples and races, without exception, the absolute weight of the entire brain is, on the average, greater in men than in women. It is certain that the actual difference in brain weight between healthy English men and women, after making due allowance for height, exceeds an ounce, and an extra ounce of brain matter may imply an enormous mental difference. It would do this were it generally and equally distributed, and it would do so in a still more striking manner, were it localized in a certain region of the cerebrum; and there are grounds for believing that there is a difference in the balance of parts in the male and the female brains respectively, and this difference I adduce as the second distinction between them. Broca, no mean authority, has declared that the occipital lobes are more voluminous in the female than in the male, and my own observations confirm his conclusions, and show that while the frontal lobes are equally developed in both sexes, the parietal lobes are larger in the male than in the female, and the occipital lobes, certainly sensory in their functions, are larger in the female than in the male.

The third difference between the sexes to which I would allude, is one of convolutional arrangement which can not yet be accurately defined, but which the examination of a series of photographs of brains of men and women, which have been stripped of their membranes, clearly reveals. The female brain is morosymmetrical, due to its comparative poverty in secondary gyri.

It is in the internal structure of the brain, in the depth and arrangement of its grey matter, in the size, form and connection of the cortical cells in different areas, that the most essential differences between the male and the female brain in all probability reside, but the internal structure of the brain in this relation is, as yet, uninvestigated. During a very laborious inquiry into the specific gravity of the grey matter of every gyrus of the brain, which I carried out some years ago, I succeeded in obtaining three standard brains of perfectly healthy adults—two men and one woman—and in these I found that while the medullary substance of the brain was alike in all, in each region that of the grey matter varied remarkably. In every convolution the specific gravity of the grey matter was lower in the female than in the male. If this is a general law, it must mean that the grey matter in the female brain is a less highly nourished and developed tissue.

And there is still another brain difference between men and women—the vascular supply. The anterior region of the brain is comparatively more copiously irrigated with blood in men, and the posterior region in women. The region of the brain which in men is most richly flushed with blood is that which is concerned, we have reason to believe, in volition, cognitions and ideo-motor processes; while the region, which in woman is the most vascular, is that which is mainly concerned in sensory functions.

The structural differences between the male and female brain justify the conclusion that they are organs broadly distinguished from each other, and that their functions are to some extent different. All through life the male brain differs from the female in capacities, aptitudes, powers. Thackeray has said that little girls make love in the nursery, and practice the art of coquetry on the page-boy who brings the coal upstairs. And as for the page-boy, it is certain that his pugnacious propensities are already well developed, and have brought him into conflict with his brother buttons. And differences are most patent of all in the prime of life when man "for contemplation and for valor formed," by "his fair large front and eye sublime" declares "absolute rule," and when woman, "grace in her steps, heaven in her eye, in every gesture dignity and love," stands conspicuous for softness and sweet attractive grace. And differences subsist to the last. The aged spinster left in "maiden meditation, fancy free" lavishes her altruistic emotions on cat, poodle or parrot; and the hoary veteran, fidgety and irrascible, concentrates his egotistic attention on his own liver. And these differences of brain structure and function which at every stage of existence separate the sexes, have a special pathological significance at the period when sexual divergence is taking place most rapidly, and when education is being pushed forward with most vigor. Education, from first to last, can only be understood in the light of cerebral physiology. The high-school education of girls which is now so popular is full of peril for them. Children have no business with headaches, nor with weak eyes, nor with neuralgia, nor with any form of nervous exhaustion; and I am satisfied, from careful inquiry, that a large proportion of the girls in our high-schools suffer from all these complaints, and as a result of over-pressure. The attempt to educate young men and women on the same lines and in the same coaches can not but be injurious to both. "What has been decided among the prehistoric protozoa can not," it has been well said, "be annulled by act of Parliament," and the essential difference between male and female can not be obliterated by a stroke of the pen by a Senatus Academicus. To essay such work is to fly in the face of evolution. The sexes diverge from each other as we ascend in the animal kingdom, and are most marked in the human species.

And with this divergent differentiation of the sexes has come reciprocal dependence and higher harmony. It is no question of superiority or inferiority of the one sex to the other. Each sex is higher, each is lower; together they make up the perfect whole. It is in the sympathetic accord of the differentiated sexes that human progress can alone be hoped for.—Educational Review.

Beauty often depends on plumpness; so does comfort; so does health. If you get thin, there is something wrong, though you may feel no sign of it.

KITRELL—Sister ELIZABETH M. KITRELL nee Cain was born in Abbeville district, S. C., Dec. 1, 1819, and died at her son's (Dr. Ben F. Kitrell's) in Black Hawk, Carroll county, Miss., Dec 29, 1892. She was married in Tuscaloosa county Ala., Feb. 5, 1835, to Wm. J. Kitrell, and after about twenty-eight years of happy married life was left a widow about twenty-nine years ago. Sister Kitrell was more fortunate than many widows. She had children who were devoted to her, and I dare say this world has produced few examples of true filial devotion comparable with that of Dr. and Sister Kitrell (his wife) to their mother. The doctor's home was his mother's home, and here, surrounded by loved ones, who studied to brighten her life and alleviate her sufferings, her life's lamp ceased to burn on earth to glow with greater splendor in the world above.

Sister Kitrell was a sufferer for nearly fifty years with a severe cough, but, with all these sufferings, there were few repinings and no murmurings. It was the happy privilege of the writer of this obituary to be intimately associated with Sister Kitrell for two years as her pastor—1888 and 1891. Many have been the pleasant calls, and every time the writer was made stronger Christian by his conversations with this saintly woman. She never seemed to have been a shadow pass between her and her heavenly Father. She always expressed herself as having her "house set in order," and daily waiting the Master's call; willing to stay and suffer his will, as she had, in earlier years, endeavored to do his will, or to depart and be forever at rest.

May her transparent Christian life be "more and more" an inspiration to her loved ones to live for God and heaven, in the fond hope of a reunion by and by." Farewell, Sister Kitrell; we will meet you "beyond the sunset's radiant glow."

"Servant of God, well done.
Rest from thy loved employ,
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter the Master's joy."

May God bless and guide her children, comfort and sustain them and save them all in heaven!

B. F. PHILLIPS.

WATTS—JOSIAH WATTS was born in Wain county, Ga., Dec. 9, 1818. In childhood he moved with his parents to Copiah county, Miss.; in 1850 he moved to Claiborne parish, La., He was married three times: in 1840 to Miss Sarah A. Scott, who died in 1844; again in 1849 to Miss Sarah M. Watson, who died in 1855; again in 1856 to Eliza Butler. Twelve children were born unto him of these marriages. Four of these preceded him to heaven. Bro. Watts was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1837, and was faithful till death. He died Nov. 18, 1892, at the residence of his son, Richard Watts, in Bienville parish, La., full of faith and good works. He was seventy-four years old, having been a member of the church fifty-five years.

The writer of this notice was his pastor for a number of years, beginning with the year 1863, and knew much of his Christian life. His home religion well comported with his public profession. He was ever faithful and true. His presence in the congregation was always an inspiration to the preacher in preaching. He was the preacher's friend and help, always ready with a heart of faith and a liberal hand to help him, spiritually or temporally.

For several years before his death he suffered from vertigo, so that he could not ride horseback. He was Sunday-school superintendent and class leader. He would walk three miles every Sunday to meet his Sunday-school and class. His religion was the old-style shouting kind. He seldom ever got through with his class without getting shouting happy.

Before his death, a short time, he wrote with his own hand the notes for this obituary. In speaking of his four children gone before, he says: "They have gone to heaven, there waiting and watching for me; and I am ready, thank God! and I will soon be there," and signed his own name for the last time. Bro. Watts has gone to his heavenly reward. He leaves behind him the savor of a holy life. He was a power in prayer. He was familiar with God; held daily converse with him, and, as a prince, he prevailed with God in prayer. If "thousands lament a hero, and a nation mourneth for its king," "the whole universe should lament the loss of this man of prayer."

His former pastor, JNO. A. MILLER.

DANCE—Died, December 16, 1892, Mrs. REBECCA DANCE, near Athens, La., in Claiborne parish, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. J. F. Harris. The deceased departed this life at the age of eighty years and fourteen days. Her remains were interred at the family graveyard. The burial services were conducted at the grave, in the presence of quite a number of sorrowing friends, children and grandchildren, by Rev. W. H. Bass. The deceased was married to Matthew Dance, in Troup county, Ga., in 1840, with whom she lived till his death in 1867.

The subject of this obituary was the mother of nine children—two girls and seven boys—three of whom preceded her to the spirit-land. The deceased professed faith in Christ at about the age of sixteen, after which she attached herself to the Primitive Baptist Church, of which she remained a member until her marriage in 1840, when she joined the M. E. Church, South, and in which she lived a consistent member until her death.

For quite a number of years she was a great sufferer, and for the last three or four years she was mostly confined to her room, and under the immediate treatment of physicians. But, alas! the ruthless hand of Death did his work, and hence sleeps the righteous. She leaves her sorrowing friends, relatives and six living children to mourn her loss.

Weep not, sorrowing friends, relatives and children as those who have no hope, for she has passed over the river, and is resting under the shade of the trees, and will be there watching and waiting to welcome you where you may ever be with the Lord. G. W. D.

DOHERTY—SARA ANN DOHERTY, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Washington White, was born May 15, 1820, and departed this life Oct. 8, 1892, living out her threescore and ten years. Sister Doherty was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Tunica, 1853, under the preaching of Rev. W. B. Hines, near which place she was born and reared and spent her life in ministering to the temporal and spiritual wants of many. The weary preacher always found in her home a place to rest, and received words of comfort and encouragement.

She leaves only one daughter and three grandchildren, whose hearts were saddened to give up grandmama. Weep not; but be faithful in the Master's vineyard, and you shall receive a crown of righteousness and strike hands with her on the shores of eternal deliverance!

"Beyond this vale of tears
There is a life above,
Unmeasured by the flight of years;
And all that life is love."

J. R. WHITTINGTON.

HOLBERT—FRANCES HOLBERT was born Nov. 11, 1848; joined the Methodist Church when she was twelve years old, and fell on sleep Dec. 14, 1892.

It was not our privilege to know Sister Holbert, having been her pastor but a few days when she died. We went to see her, but on our arrival found she had passed into the spirit-land the night before. Those that knew her have good things to say of her; that she was a devoted wife, a fond mother, and, above all, a meek and gentle Christian. We can but pray her bereaved husband and children will imitate her Christ-like life. Her body rests in Greenwood Cemetery, while we trust her spirit rests with the God who gave it.

W. S. SHIPMAN.

Mr. P. D. D. Delacroix, Cypremort P. O., La., Nov. 30, 1888, says: "Three years ago an agent representing Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a sample bottle of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, asking me to give it to anyone suffering with a cough or cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold, remembering the sample, thought I would try it. Six teaspoonfuls cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. I take pleasure in recommending it at all times." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

The true historical genius, to our thinking, is that which can see the nobler meaning of events that are near him, as the true poet is he who detects the divine in the casual; and we somewhat suspect the depth of his insight into the past who can not recognize the God-like of to day under that disguise in which it always visits us.—Lowell.

The emerald is a green stone, and occurs in seven different shades. It is found chiefly in the south of Asia and Mexico, those from the latter place being often of a better color and superior to the Asiatic stones. The emerald is extremely liable to flaws, so that a really perfect stone is rare, and on that account much prized. There are eleven emeralds in the English crown, and the Czarina of Russia has a necklace consisting of forty magnificent emeralds.—Exchange.

Preaching Down Error.

The way to preach down error is to preach up truth. Never tackle Satan unless you are sure you can lay him. A great many men by opposing error have magnified it, have glorified it, have given dignity to a hitherto unseen and comparatively unknown foe. The most that church-going people have learned of some forms of error they have learned from Christian pulpits. Now, the Christian pulpit is not erected to preach evils, but to preach the glory of God. Infidelity is noisy, but it is shallow. It is a failure, an ignominous failure. A little time ago, in the history of New York, Thomas Paine said: "In five years there will not be a Bible in America." How we smile to-day when we read his words! —Dr. R. S. Storrs.

DOMESTIC.

A collision between a street car and a locomotive occurred in Chicago on Dec. 29. Four people were killed and many seriously injured.

Informations have been filed against several persons said to be implicated in the poisoning of non-union men employed in Carnegie's mills at Homestead, Pa.

The plan recently insugurated of placing army officers, instead of civilians, in charge of the Indian agencies has proved successful and satisfactory to the Indians and to their guardians at Washington.

The Sunday law was conformed to throughout this city during last Saturday night and Sunday as it has never been before. The assistant district attorney is making all possible efforts to have the law observed.

The number of persons carried by the railroads of the United States the last year was, in round numbers, 600,000,000. Owing to the World's Fair, the number for this year will probably be much increased, though it is likely to reach around 1 000 000,000.

The New York World says that the Panama Canal corruption thieves expended over $2 000 000 in bribing American legislators. In brief, the article says: "There is no end to the Panama scandal; $2 000 000 was sent to this country and no explanation has been given of what use was necessary or was made of this vast sum.

Within a day or two after reassembling of Congress the Republican senators will hold a caucus to determine upon the order of business that is to be pursued. It is the intention of the Senate to begin active work and clear up the calendar as much as possible. There are a number of important matters now before it, and some agreement will be reached at this caucus as to the precedence to be given. It is thought that the debate on the Anti Option bill will be closed, and the measure forced to a vote.

The cholera is reported to be again in France and Germany. In Calais and Hamburg new cases and deaths are reported daily.

The Russian government is building on the Clyde several vessels, with iron cages, for the transportation of political prisoners in bulk.

The trouble caused by the strike of lead and iron miners at Saar Louis, in Rhenish Prussia, threatens to have serious results. The strike now extends through the whole district, and the men are displaying a very unruly disposition.

Owing to the improved outlook for cotton goods, on account of the stiffer market, and the great distress among the cotton operatives attendant upon the lock-out, negotiations have been resumed between the masters and operatives with a view of bringing the struggle to an end.

Seven hundred delegates were present at the meeting, on Dec. 30, of the Indian National Congress at Allah Bad, the capital of the northwest provinces of India. The Congress includes many of the ablest native Indians, and the resolutions submitted showed the growing spirit in favor of Indian self-government.

The Colombian Congress has given authority to Dr. Nunez, President of Colombo, to do what is necessary to protect the best interests of all concerned in the isthmus transit. The general opinion is, that owing to the antagonistic attitude of the railroad to American steamship interests, the Panama Canal Company can not obtain further extension of their concessions.

The Orleanists have by no means abandoned the hope of regaining the throne of France through a revolution in public sentiment caused by the revelations in the Panama affair. What the ultimate intentions of the Orleanists are it would be hard to say, but it is evident that some project is contemplated that is intended to lead to the overturning of the republic and the establishment of a monarchy.

The latest advices from St. Petersburg and other parts of Russia show that the persecution of the Jews and the inhumanity of the Czar's officials toward the unhappy race are greater than ever before. Six edicts have been issued aiming to disperse the Jewish subjects of Russia, weakening their position and trading centers and crushing out their religion. These edicts are enforced with the utmost rigor in many parts of the empire, and with severity everywhere.

The Vatican has been informed that at a recent council of the Italian ministry it was decided to take special measures to protect the pilgrims coming to Italy on the occasion of the jubilee of Pope Leo. It is expected that about 40,000 pilgrims will visit Rome in the latter part of January and in February to attend the celebrations in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the pontiff's elevation to the episcopal dignity. Of these it is expected that not less than 4 000 will be from the United States.

The Mexican government is preparing to take vigorous steps to turn the tide of immigration, against which the United States is closing its doors, towards its own country. It is willing and anxious to have all that will come of whatever kind, and will make no restrictions. Several of the Mexican States, it is said, are about to send commissioners of immigration to the European countries from which the greatest number of immigrants come, to lay before the people the advantages offered by Mexico.

The Pew to the Pulpit.

It is the bounden duty of the pulpit to faithfully express to the pew, but in the spirit of Christ, its honest views from its standpoint; and it is equally the duty of the pew to reciprocate, in like manner, with the pulpit. Each should help the other to see itself as the other sees it, and thus mutually benefit each other; but they both should "see that they fall not out by the way, for they be brethren," and each is "his brother's keeper." Perished, forever, be the presumptuous thought of "being lord over God's heritage;" for what has either that it did not receive?—and, if it did receive it, why would it glory, as if it had not received it? Everybody ought to employ the talent received "meekly," gratefully and faithfully, and give God all the "glory." The Savior says, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth!" "He resisteth the proud." The Savior rebuked the vainglory of the disciples for exulting that "even the devils were subject unto them through his name," instead of humbly and gratefully "rejoicing rather because their names were written in heaven."

The pew recognizes the sanctity and importance of the pulpit as a divinely appointed agency in the salvation of the world; but it feels in duty bound to express its painful conviction, that some of the pulpits do not duly appreciate nor properly fill the position they are in. The Savior said as much when he was on earth. Reader, is it true?

The ministry of the pulpit is no unimportant sinecure. On the contrary, it is full of sacred duties and momentous responsibilities, which can not be assumed with unhallowed hand, nor neglected with careless indifference, without the most direful consequences befalling themselves and others; and the pew feels that it is not only its duty, on moral grounds, to express its honest views, in the spirit of Christ, to the pulpit, but that it has also the right, in equity, to do so. Each and every pulpit ought to stand or fall on its individual merits or demerits; and it is a principle in common law that there must be a "quid pro quo"—something for something—and the "quid" must be a real equivalent for the "quo;" and, as the pulpit expects material as well as moral support from the pew, it ought to render a full spiritual equivalent to the pew, and not content itself with simply carrying to a full report to the annual gathering, and receiving therefrom the flattering plaudit, "Well done!" That might to have been done, but many other more important things ought not to have been left undone; and, if it fails to do better than merely that, it might not the pew to be released from voluntary obligation to the encumbrance of that pulpit? The salvation of souls is the sole object of the gospel, and that should be the measure of success, as well as the highest aim and fixed purpose of the pulpit. St. Paul says nothing moves him from that one exclusive purpose. "Neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God."

What ought to be expected of the pulpit? is an important question that should engage the serious attention of everybody, for all are deeply interested in it. Evidently, whoever would presume to enter the pulpit should, first and foremost, have his own heart purified "by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost;" should have a clean-cut experience of the "new birth," that he may be able to instruct others in the way of "life that is hid with Christ in God." That must be an absolute prerequisite and a sine qua non; and yet there are, doubtless, some in the pulpit who have never experienced this qualifying change of heart, or, if so, have evidently lost it, and, therefore, they are blind leaders of the blind, and both are falling into the ditch, and perishing there.

And, furthermore, the heart of the pulpit must be full of love for God and man, or it can not possibly do its duty to either—God or man. It was love alone that caused the Savior to leave heaven and come down to earth, which found him in sorrow and suffering, until he finished his great mission by dying on the cross for the sins of the world, and paid the debt mankind owed to the violated law. And the disciples, which he calls and commissions to go into all the world and preach his gospel to every creature, must likewise have their hearts filled with the "spirit of Christ," or "they are none of his," and must inevitably fail miserably in saving souls—their own as well as others. Trying to "preach with enticing words of man's wisdom," instead of "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," and all other devices and expedients save "Christ and him crucified," are vain delusions and dangerous snares, that must, in the very nature of things, fail most disastrously. And how many, alas! are captivated and ruined, soul and body, for time and eternity, by these very wiles of the devil!

And, finally, the Savior caps the climax, saying: "I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them in the fire, and they are burned. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. . . . As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love." "It is enough," as Israel exclaimed, with overwhelming love and gratitude to God, when he found out that all his providences had been working together for his good; in sending Joseph down into Egypt, and in all the long, wonderful and pathetic train of incidents that followed; whereas he had (like we too often do) complained that "all these things are against me," before he had come to understand the Lord's wise and gracious purposes and plans.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

"Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace:
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

Bible Societies.

At the beginning of this century the church seemed to be just awakening to a sense of the grave responsibility resting upon her of sending forth the Word of God without note or comment, as an independent power in the evangelization of the world. A little Welsh girl went to the Rev. Thomas Charles begging for a Bible, and cried because she could not get it. That piteous cry was heard in heaven, and was answered by the organization, in 1804, of the British and Foreign Bible Society of London. This Society was the first in the field, and in the volume of its business exceeds all others combined. It published last year four million copies of the Bible, Testament and portions, which were distributed to the world from its home in London, and its storehouses in Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, Calcutta, and other cities of Europe and Asia.

At its recent anniversary its total publications were reported to be more than one hundred and twenty-five million copies of the Bible and portions in all the chief languages of the earth.

Second in importance to the great institution in London is our own American Bible Society, organized in New York in 1816 by sixty ministers and laymen identified with the various Protestant Churches, with the sole object to promote the circulation of the Scriptures without note or comment.

The same Holy Ghost that moved upon the hearts of chosen men to write these Scriptures, and through the vicissitudes of ages has preserved them in their integrity, moved upon the hearts of these men to found this institution. Since then three-fourths of a century has passed away, and behold the grain of mustard-seed has become a mighty tree, shooting out great branches, beautifying and gladdening the world! The annual report of the American Bible Society for last year shows total issues at home and in foreign lands, 1,497,637 copies of the Bible, Testaments, Integral Portions, and volumes for the blind. The total issues from the beginning until now are about fifty-five million copies.

There were printed last year for this Society in Bremen, Paris, Constantinople, and in cities in China, in the vernacular of those countries, at its own expense, more than three hundred thousand copies of the Bible and portions.

We have in this country engaged in this phase of missionary work, besides the American Bible Society, the "American Bible Union," and the "Bible Association of Friends in America;" and in Europe, besides the Band F. B. S., of London, there are sixty-six other Bible societies. Foremost among these is the "National Bible Society of Scotland," which was organized in 1861; which has outstripped, in volume of work, all the Continental societies, though some date as far back as 1813. All these societies sprang up in this century; prior to 1804 there were none. The total issues of these seventy Bible societies alone, to say nothing of the many private publishing houses, are set down at 225,000,000 of Bibles, Testaments and portions, which have been printed in three hundred languages and dialects, and distributed to the world through their agency. At the present ratio of increase, the total annual issues of all the Bible societies, by the close of this century, will reach above thirty millions. It may be thought that, at this rate, the world will soon be supplied; but when we remember that more than half the world is yet totally destitute, the rapid increase of population, the perishable nature of books, and the hundreds of languages and dialects into which it must yet be translated, we readily see that the church must redouble her efforts to overtake this vast work. If the three great Bible societies of New York, London and Edinburgh were concentrated upon China alone, near a century would elapse before her 380,000,000 of population could be supplied.

The church ought to be aroused to this great work. Millions must go down to death without this Bread of Life. It was the glory of ancient Israel that unto them were committed the oracles of God, and now, in the march of time and events, they are committed to the English-speaking people in a remarkable manner. Not only has the Bible been placed in their hands, but God has given them the material wealth wherewith they could, if they would, place it in every language, and in every home round the globe, during the next fifty years.

The present annual publication of the three Bible societies in the English-speaking countries aggregate 6,000,000 copies of the Bible and parts—an average of 19,169 every week-day, or nearly 800 copies every hour, day and night.

This is a grand work, for which we are profoundly grateful to God; but it by no means comes up to our ability or our duty. Our American Bible Society ought to have the prayers, the sympathies and the material support of every Christian in America; nay more—of every man who desires the happiness of his fellow men.

All evangelical denominations are represented in its management, and share equally in the advantages of obtaining Bibles for home and foreign church work at minimum cost.

Its valuable building, costing $400,000, electro-plates, large income from rentals, endowments and general benefactions, render the publication of the Bible by denominational publishing houses superfluous, and cost considered, out of the question.

For nearly 300 years the King James' translation has been the accepted standard, and is likely to be for centuries to come. The "New Revision" does but little more than prove the marvelous accuracy of the old. So, then, here is an institution around which Christians of every name may cordially join heart and hand in promoting its good work. There is but one Bible, as there is but one Lord and one faith.

Whatever our differences in matters non-essential, all agree that the Word, through the Holy Spirit, its Author, is in itself a mighty power to arouse the conscience and convert the soul.

The colportage work of this Society also commends it to all hearts. It has one hundred or more colporters in the United States, twelve special agents, and nearly 300 subordinates in foreign countries. These unpretending laborers are carrying the Bible, without note or comment, among the people of Mexico, Cuba, Africa, the Levant and China, preparing the soil for the missionary—selling it where they can, and giving it to the poor without money and without price. The great Baptist denomination claims, and doubtless has, more missionaries abroad than other churches, and should, on that account, be the most liberal in their support of the American Bible Society.

The work of the colporter with the Bible in the vernacular must precede or go hand in hand with successful missionary work. Let one illustration suffice: Alberto J. Diaz, a sick refugee in New York, read the story of blind Bartimeus in a Spanish Testament obtained from the American Bible Society. The eyes of his mind were opened. He was employed as colporter by this Society, and returned to Cuba. He was an educated man, and soon became a preacher of recognized power.

In January, 1886, he was ordained to the ministry, and organized in Havana the first Baptist Church in the Island of Cuba. Since then a score of churches have been organized, and thousands have joined as members. We can not know how much of this grand work is due to the labors of the almost unknown colporter, Mr. Mo-Kim, who preceded Mr. Diaz, but it is manifestly a river of blessing which had its rise in, and has the liberal support of the Bible society, through the agency of these godly men.

The Bible is the religion of Protestants; whatever of excellence or power they have attained is due to this open, free Bible. In Southern Europe, Rome still puts the Bible among prohibited books, and it is because she withholds this precious gift of God from the people, her missions are failures, and countries she has dominated for centuries are slipping away from her grasp. Let the good work of the Bible societies be increased tenfold, and the day hastened when the goal of their ambition shall be reached; when the Bible, translated into every tongue, shall be placed in every home and become in every heart the rule of faith and practice.—W. H. Perkins, in Southwestern Presbyterian.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. D. P. Bradford, Shubuta, Miss., Jan. 3: "We have never had a kinder reception since entering the itinerancy than that accorded us by the good people of Shubuta. Our worthy predecessor, Bro. Drake, had prepared the way before us. We found a nice home, with provisions for a month, and many in waiting. We are observing the Week of Prayer, etc., with service every evening."

Rev. E. F. Edgar, Camden, Miss., Dec. 26, 1892: "Please allow me to express through our paper the profound gratitude that fills and overflows the hearts of the inmates of the Camden parsonage for all the valuable things for man and horse sent us by our many friends of Soule Chapel and Camden. Truly, it may be said that our barn and larder is full to overflowing. The expressions of love and appreciation are too various and numerous for enumeration. May God richly reward all of these generous souls! And the Lord help us to prove worthy!"

Rev. T. B. Holloman, Wesson, Miss.: "We arrived at our new home—Wesson—on the mid-day train, Friday, Dec. 30. We were received very cordially at depot by a delegation of brethren with vehicles, and a most hearty and warm welcome at parsonage by committee of ladies, who soon left us to enjoy the bountiful dinner prepared and to take an inventory of the numerous expressions of appreciation awaiting us. On next day there was an addition of New Year's offerings all ready for the table. Inclement as Sunday, the first, was, the preacher was greeted by an audience of 400 people. This is a big work and everybody 'hustles.' I fear these 600 members have over-cropped me. Pray for us."

R. W. Vest, Learned, Miss., Jan. 2: "It was our happy privilege to have with us on the last day of 1892 and the first day of 1893 our new preacher, Bro. J. N. Tucker, and he says he feels complimented because he was sent to the most Learned work in the Conference; and while we regretted very much to give up our two beloved pastors, Bros. N. J. Roberts and W. H. Lewis, we are glad to know that the Bishop and presiding elder sent us Bro. Tucker. We ask all who read this to pray for us and our pastor, that he may be endued with power from on high to speak to this people in the name of Christ, and may it be as seed sown in good ground, that will spring up and bring forth fruit in due season! May much good be accomplished in bringing souls to Christ!"

Rev. W. S. Shipman, Jan. 3: "Greenwood redeems her preacher's pledge to Dr. Morrison, and sends check to Dr. John for $50. I came immediately to my work after Conference; have preached 8 times, visited 25 families, made 37 pastoral calls, married 2 couples, and attended 1 funeral service. We buried Sister Mary Spiney to-day. She leaves a husband and mother, who seem almost broken-hearted; also a precious little nine-eyed boy. This has been the sad part of our New Year's beginning. Greenwood is a delightful charge. Rev. T. B. Hargrove, wife and daughter have been here three years previous to my coming. I follow after; do not take their place. Who can? But I hope to do some good. This is a growing town, and growing congregation—now one of the largest in the Delta."

Rev. N. J. Roberts, Greenshurg, La., Jan. 2: "We reached the above-named place Friday, Dec. 30, about one o'clock, where we were met by some of the good people of Greenshurg, who welcomed us to our parsonage-home with pleasant smiles, and a pot of hot coffee, while the table was loaded with luxuries nicely prepared—while the safe displayed the culinary art in wonderful variety. Sunday dawns upon us, it being the first day of 1893. I went for my first Sunday appointment, about seven miles north of Greensburg, to Day's Church, where I met a large congregation, who gave good attention to the preaching of the Word. At the close of the service six came forward and united with the church. This was an hour long to be remembered. We go on our way praising God, expecting greater results. May the good Lord bless and abundantly prosper this people!"

R. P. Miller, Indianola, Miss., Jan. 1: "Kindly allow me space to express the kind regards felt for our dear Bro. McCullough, who has so earnestly labored for us at this place for the past two years. We regret that he has been sent to other fields. We feel that we have lost the ablest and most devout pastor that has ever represented the Methodist Church at this place, and bid him God-speed in his new field and to the church fortunate enough to secure the services of Bro. McCullough. We would say: Stand by him, and he will pull you through, if you have any life at all. Do your part, and we know the work of Bro. McCullough will prosper. We welcome Bro. Savage to our homes, and predict for him a bright future, and earnestly trust that he will in every respect prove himself worthy to fill the pulpit of Bro. McCullough. Bro. McCullough has risen above party prejudices, always striving to elevate, to instruct, build up, and lead his fellow-man to see his duty as a Christian, the relation he sustained to Christ, and the duties resting upon him as a Christian. We trust that kind Providence will, ere long, bring him back to us. Until then may the richest blessing attend his labor wherever he goes!"

Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, Crystal Springs, Jan. 6: "I have just entered my fourth year in Crystal Springs station, Mississippi Conference, and have been received cordially. Our first quarterly meeting was held last Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 31 and Jan. 1. Our Board of Stewards have promptly arranged liberally for the finances of another year, and we had a pleasant quarterly meeting. We were glad to see our presiding elder, Rev. R. S. Woodward, in fine health and spirits, and preaching acceptably to the people. We enjoyed his visit. Mrs. Norsworthy, like most other women, sometimes has birthdays. Such an event as a birthday is usually not an event of much notice. But this birthday was noticed by the good people in our charge in a very pleasant and substantial way. Early on the evening of Jan. 5 package after package came, and lady after lady, and gentleman after gentleman, till the good things for our inner and outward comfort were well supplied. Our hearts were cheered and made to rejoice. No one can tell, but a preacher and his family, how far these acts of Christian love go to help us on and encourage. We tender our sincere thanks to all concerned, and pledge our best service for this year."

Rev. C. C. Evans, P. C., Hillsboro, Miss., Jan. 3: "I will give you a few dots about my work, as far as I have been able to see. I started for the town of Hillsboro on the twenty-ninth day of December, 1892, and arrived there the same day. The weather was cold, the ground all frozen, and it was very bad for our teams to travel over the frozen clods and ice; but we landed all safe and well. The weather was somewhat threatening the evening we got to the parsonage. We could see some sign of the approaching storm in the dim distance; but nothing serious happened to us that night—only a few threatening puffs. The morning of the thirtieth still looked gloomy. The approaching storm could be seen somewhat plainer. The lightnings began to flash from hill to hill; the thunder began to roll from east to west, north and south, until at last, about two P. M., the cloud was fully up, the rain began to pepper down, and, by the way, some very large hail-stones came pounding in through the half-open doors, in the shape of whole hog hams, great big hunks of beefsteak, and some right good-sized bundles of sugar and coffee. Well, Mr. Editor, I can't take time to tell you about all the nice provisions we gathered up while the storm was raging, such as sausage-meat, sweet potatoes, lard, soda, soap, cakes, etc. I tell you the good people of Hillsboro know very well how to receive a preacher and his family, and make them feel welcome. Well, Mr. Editor, I have been able to meet my first appointment all right. Congregation small, owing to so much bad weather. One more word, Mr. Editor. I want to tell you that my old work is full of good people. I mean Homewood charge. Two of the good brothers moved us, and never charged us anything. Some one might say that they did this to get rid of us; but I am willing for that to be tested. I hope we will have a glorious year this 1893, and that many souls may be added to the church. May the Lord's blessings rest and abide with those of our loved ones and friends everywhere, and especially with you, Mr. Editor!"

W. T. Kendall, Meridian, Miss., Jan. 1: "The year 1892 closed with us very favorably. We met all of our demands cheerfully, paid up all the assessments, and everybody happy in the knowledge of doing their duty; yet many of us felt sad at the thought of giving up our much-beloved pastor, Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., who labored faithfully and zealously among us for four years, and leaves many warm friends who will ever remember him as a kind friend, a faithful pastor, and a true man of God. May God, in his mercy, bless his efforts abundantly in his new field of labor! Now, we are to thank your city (through our good Bishop) for our pastor for the ensuing year—Rev. C. F. Evans, D. D.—who preached two eloquent sermons to-day from the pulpit of the First Methodist Church, of this city, under very favorable auspices, and his congregation well pleased. We are satisfied he will reap a rich harvest in his new field for the Master. His text was taken to-night from Heb. xi, 30: 'By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days.' It was soon evident that the text was being vividly and forcibly argued in clear and noble sentences, which made a good and lasting impression on his hearers. In conclusion, he asked his congregation to pray for him, to assist and love him—yes, love him. 'God gave not love to bind to earth, but to raise to heaven; not to make earthly idols, but, on the very love we bear each other, to lift up the soul to him; to lighten toil and soften grief; to heighten joy, and bless our earthly sojourn with a bright ray from that exhaustless fount of love which waits for us above. Without some emotion powerful enough to draw us out of ourselves for an earthly brother, how could we ever subject our selfish hearts to the will of God?—how perform those self sacrifices most agreeable to him? Stronger than pain, and toil, and even death, it is the very essence of our being, the spiritual essence, which marks more powerfully than aught else our immortal destiny, and from the reflection of that destiny lends a glow to earth. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and soul, and might," is the command of the Eternal—an important command, yet not given till after his Word had revealed to us that it was possible—nay, that it was a necessary consequence—for those who served and loved him best to love and cleave unto each other. Had not the heart been created with full capacity to love, this command would not have been given; and he who has placed us in a world of beauty, who has gathered around us objects to excite every feeling, demands not that those feelings are to be devoted to him alone, in utter neglect of our fellows.' Yes, we will love each other; we will love and assist our pastor. With the saloons closed, and a healthy and religious atmosphere, we can sing, Hallelujah to the Most High!"

Notice.

The pastors of Woodville district are cordially invited to be present at the district stewards' meeting, which convenes in Clinton, Friday, Jan. 20, at two P. M. Bro. R. W. Tucker will preach Thursday evening at seven P. M. Bro. H. R. Singleton will preach Friday morning at eleven A. M., after which the sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered. Bro. R. W. Bailey will preach Friday evening at seven P. M.

Come, brethren, and let us get well acquainted and a fresh baptism of the Holy Ghost for our year's work. You will be hospitably entertained, as well as the district stewards, by the good people of Clinton.

FOR A WEB BEGUN.

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

"For a web begun, God sends the thread."
Over and over these words I read,
And I said to myself, with an easy air,
What need to burden myself with care,
If this be true?
Or attempt to do
More than my duty? For here is proof
That we are to hold ourselves aloof
Until from the Master we receive
The thread for the web we are to weave.

So day after day I sat beside
The loom, as if both my hands were tied,
With idle shuttle and slackened warp,
Useless as "strings" of an untuned harp,
For I took no part,
With hand or heart,
In the work of the world. To the cry of need,
The voice of the children, I gave no heed.
"When the task is ready for me," I said,
"God will be sure to supply the thread."

Others might go in cellars and slums,
And weave a web out of scraps and thrums,
Finding excuse for the daily toil,
The reckless waste of life's precious oil;
But as for me,
I could not see
How I was to follow them, or believe
That the rightful pattern I'd truly weave,
Unless I waited, however time sped,
For God to send me the promised thread.

I had no strength of my own, I knew;
No wisdom to guide, or skill to do,
And must wait at ease for the word of command,
For the message I surely should understand,
Else all in vain
Were the stress and strain,
For the thread would break, and the web be spoiled,
A poor result for the hours I'd toiled,
And my heart and my conscience would be at strife
O'er the broken threads of a wasted life.

But all at once, like a gem exhumed,
The word "begun" – by a light illumed—
From the rest of the text stood boldly out.
By the finger of God revealed, no doubt,
And shocked and dazed,
Ashamed, amazed,
I saw, as I had not seen before,
The truer meaning the sentence bore,
And read as Belshazzar might have read,
"For a web begun, God sends the thread."

The man himself, with his mind and heart,
Toward the Holy City must make a start,
Ere he finds in his hands the mystic clew
That shall lead him life's mazes safely through.
And if loom and reel,
And spinning-wheel,
Idle and empty stand to-day,
We must reason give for the long delay,
Since the voice of the Master has plainly said,

Groanings Again.

MR. EDITOR: In your last issue some good brother objects "to the groanings and amens indulged in by our ministers during public prayer," on the ground that "it detracted his attention from the prayer that was being offered, and was a great strain on his sense of propriety."

In political campaigns, who has not heard dignified and conservative citizens hurrahing themselves hoarse while listening to the words of the impassioned orator, as shout after shout of approval or disapproval punctuate the utterances of the speaker? During great trials, when issues of life or liberty are at stake, who has not witnessed the inability of the court to preserve silence among the throng, whose emotions are excited by the eloquence of the advocate? In the exchanges men shout themselves hoarse, tear off their clothing, trample upon their hats, and act like demented creatures, as fortunes are made or lost.

In all such cases—when human passion is aroused, when conventionality is forgotten, and men thoroughly in earnest give free vent to their enthusiasm—when has the voice of criticism ever been heard? But when the man of God, shutting his eyes and closing his ears to the whispering and giggling of his unregenerate flock, pours out his soul to his Maker in an agonizing effort to rescue the perishing ones—truly, this is no occasion for enthusiasm, the display of hysterical emotion, or of fanatical zeal!

Brother, if appropriating the words of the speaker, you should feel your heart expand with the love of Christ and your eyes grow dim with sympathy for the impenitent, you should so far forget the time and place as to shout an "Amen!" or a "God grant it!" you have acted rashly and thoughtlessly. When you allowed your enthusiasm to so far get the better of your judgment as to give vent to spasmodic utterances that only served to encourage the preacher, comfort the saintly and strengthen the weak, you gave great offense to that very large class of good people who presume greatly upon the pardoning grace of the Almighty, and who patronize religion because that is eminently the proper thing to do in this day and generation. Nowhere else can idle speculations be better indulged than under the lullaby of a long worded prayer—provided there are no rude interruptions.

This is strictly an age of propriety, and the rights of all classes of people should be respected. While enthusiasm is necessary to success in human affairs, yet, in the worship of Almighty God, the utmost order and decorum should prevail. Therefore, let groanings and amens no longer be heard.

C. F. EMERY

Dec. 29, 1892.

[We say, "Let all the people say, Amen!" at the proper time and place. If any brother criticizes, refer him to I. Cor. xiv, 16.—EDITOR.]

The Liquor Traffic.

Extract from a Speech by Wm. H. La Prade, D. D.

There are features of this traffic which I can not discuss with calmness—features of which I can not think with quiet and composure. When I remember that, more than all other forms of evil combined, it is the representative of prayerless poverty and of conscienceless crime—of blasted manhood and sorrowing womanhood; of the densest ignorance and the most grovelling sensuality—my soul stirs within me in uncontrollable indignation, and my tongue refuses to speak the language of quiet persuasiveness.

Other forms of evil have their measures of compensation. Oppression fires the patriot's heart and stirs him to deeds of valor. Slavery, with all its possible horrors, has more than once been the school where savage ferocity was trained into orderly citizenship; even War, going forth with its baptism of fire and blood, may with its red, right hand weld into permanent oneness the fragments of a dismembered nation—but this accursed traffic offers nothing in return for the injury it inflicts. It is a shoreless sea of ruin; it is a treeless desert of desolation; it is a cloud without "silver lining," from whose black bosom come the forked lightnings of destruction.

Other evils are local in their effects; this is universal. Other evils fall heaviest on certain classes; this crushes all alike. It begrimes the rags of the pauper with one hand while the other soils the silk of the millionaire. It sullies the ermine of Justice and befouls the purple of Royalty. On the face of sleeping infancy, dimpled by the touch of angel lips, it writes its lines of fatal prophecy. From the orange blossom of the bride it steals the perfume of the marriage altar, while it tarnishes the flowers that loving hands have laid on stilled bosoms with the fetid breath of its own corruption. It has no pity for helplessness, no reverence for sanctity, no tenderness for age. It will empty upon the silvered head of a broken-hearted mother the dregs from the cup of her son's degradation, and, hiding behind its "license to sell," it will note with half-concealed sneer the fading cheek of the wife as she watches the man she loves go staggering to his doom. It is the great ulcer on the body of the nation; it is the menace of civilization; it is the anti-christ of the nineteenth century. The price it pays for legal existence is "cursed with the curse of blood," and, like the thirty pieces of silver for which Judas sold his Master, finds its final expression in the skulls and skeletons of the paupers' burial-ground. It is the high priest of incoherence and lust, the oil of whose anointing is the foul drippings from the chamber of death.

It was claimed recently, by a leading paper in an American city, that the revenues from the liquor traffic had paved its streets. After reading the paragraph I sat with closed eyes, when suddenly there seemed to come before me a multitude of men, each wearing the badge of the "Liquor Dealers' Union," and all busily engaged in laying the pavements of a great city. I approached to watch their work; when suddenly I started back in horror—for each stone of that pavement was a human heart; its cement was the mingled blood and tears of the murdered and the suffering; and o'er those quivering human hearts, in staggering procession, the drunkards of that city went reeling to the grave.

From Los Angeles Conference

Perhaps a few notes from the Los Angeles Conference may interest the readers of the ADVOCATE.

The last Conference year was not marked by as large an increase as the three preceding years, yet there was an increase sufficient to indicate a hopeful and healthy growth.

Within the last year we have had quite an addition to the itinerant ranks by transfer from the Eastern Conferences, mainly from Georgia. This has enabled the Bishop more thoroughly to man the territory in our bounds than ever before. Yet there is room for many more if we could only secure a support for them. There are sixteen of these new men. Several of them served charges in the Conference a portion of last year, and showed themselves approved workmen. These men are all young; most of them unmarried. They are educated, zealous and faithful, and we may look for great things in the Los Angeles Conference during the next few years. We still have a number of the old guard who have borne the heat and burden of the past, and are still going forth to battle with all the ardor and vigor of a mature manhood.

Among the new men, Louisiana has sent us young Bro. Knickerbocker, who is serving the Santa Barbara charge. His is, perhaps, one of the most unpromising fields in the connection, yet he has taken hold of it with heroic zeal and faith, is quite popular and bids fair to do a fine work.

We have sent Rev. R. W. Bailey to the Mississippi Conference. Bro. Bailey is a native production of the "golden shore" in every particular, and a genuine son of the Los Angeles Conference. We are safe in saying that the brethren there will find him a cultivated, genial, Christian gentleman, and a preacher of a high order.

Bro. R. I. Allen goes from us, after several years of faithful sacrifice and labor, to the North Mississippi Conference. Bro. Allen is a Mississippian to the manner born. He was admitted on trial and served one year in the North Mississippi Conference. He then transferred to Texas, and after laboring there for some years became here. Bro. Allen is one of our best men. He has great faith, is truly consecrated to the work, is scholarly, a theologian of the true Wesleyan type, and a strong preacher. Bro. Allen has been singularly unfortunate in one respect. Less than five years ago he was happily married to a Miss Jones, of Texas. She died in less than a year after their marriage. About one and a half years ago he was married to a Miss Brubaker, of this county. They had born to them a lovely little daughter, which was buried some weeks since, and one week ago to-day the mother was buried by the babe's side, and he leaves us bereft and alone in the world.

It pleased Bishop Haygood to appoint this scribe to San Luis Obispo. This is one of the oldest towns on this part of the coast, having been settled by the mission fathers as a Spanish-Mexican town. We have a population of a little over three thousand. They are mostly Spanish, Swiss and Portuguese, and are adherents of the Roman Catholic Church. That church has one of the celebrated old mission churches and a large convent here. We have four Protestant Churches—two Methodist (North and South), Presbyterian and Episcopalian. The Congregationalists have an organization, but no church-building. We have a neat church-house, costing about six thousand dollars, and also a very good parsonage, but our membership is very small. Some years since this was a prospering and growing town, and our church was prosperous; but the building of railroads through territory from which it drew its support cut it off, and left it without any connection with the outside world by railroad, and it became a dying town, and the majority of the enterprising people sought other fields, our members among them. They are now actively at work on a railroad that will, in a few months, place the town on one of the most important and attractive roads in the West, and bring us into touch with the world of travel and commerce. It is now conceded that the town is adjacent to the only safe harbor from San Francisco to San Diego. The government is expending large sums improving it, and at an early day it will be made an entry port.

These things lead us to hope for better times, and great improvement in the affairs of the town, in which we expect the church to share. At present wickedness runs riot, and the churches are weak and at a discount. May God send us revival power!

Another Problem.

METHODIST WHISKY.

MR EDITOR: Much is heard in these latter days about problems. Once in a while, after reading about the many problems that have loomed up on the Methodist horizon, one feels so in accord with the author's views of some of the greatest of these problems, that Euclid's exclamation is just on the end of the tongue; but, before that rhapsodical "Eureka" is pronounced, one is confronted with some other problem. In the veriest simplicity, this scribbler, after reading Bro. Boland's "Problem of Methodism," thought he came pretty near being able to use the above much quoted word, when, lo! Bro. Hayes takes the floor, and declares "The Problem Solved," before one-half of "the people called Methodists" know what the problem is; and the other half are somewhat like the little boy that was told he had drawn the prize at a raffle. In an ecstasy of delight he danced around, exclaiming, "Oh, I've got it; I've got it." One asked him what it was he had. He suddenly calmed down, and said, "I do not know what it is."

But the problem that has been uppermost in one head of late was the problem of Methodist whisky, and whether it will have the same effect on the brain as any other kind of whisky.

This scribbler has been told many times by Methodists that it was not any harm to drink egg-nog Christmas. And they said also that it would not make anyone drunk; and, furthermore, they argued that if they did not make egg nog for the young folks at home, they (especially the boys) would go away from home to get it.

You see, Mr. Editor, that the love of whisky is in the very marrow of the bones; and if parents do not get a little Methodist whisky, and cook hen fruit in it, and give it to their children at home Christmas, they will surely gravitate toward the places where worldly whisky, in unwashed gobiets, is sold to quench the hungering and thirsting desire to be manly.

If this is good logic, the temperance problem is solved. All that Methodist parents will have to do will be to feed the babies with toddy, as thousands already do, and make egg-nog for the larger children, and so strengthen the inner man to resist the temptation to drink any other kind of whisky but Methodist whisky; or, if they should happen to drink away from home, it will not make drunkards of them, because they have been inoculated with Methodist egg nog.

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS.

My Dear Cousin Jack: Well, dear cousin, Conference is over and we are at our posts. I rejoice that you passed your examination and that you are given work to do. It's the grandest thing in the world to preach the gospel! I had rather be a poor Methodist preacher than to be President of the United States.

Our last Conference was a gracious time. If all the preachers were not revived, it was their own fault. The love feast was ravishing; glory seemed to hang about the room as old veterans of the cross recounted their trials. Some of the sisters got happy. One said she was glad she was a preacher's wife, and she wanted all her sons to be preachers, and her daughters preacher's wives! All the young preachers smiled through their tears, but, oh, it was a gracious time!

Just before the Bishop read the appointments I felt that I was not worthy of anything. My prayer was, "Just give me a place to labor, Lord, and I'll do the best I can." Well, I got a place, and you got a place; so our prayers are answered. And as the New Year, 1893, is upon us, let us be true to our vows!

It is true our places are both hard fields (an easy place to labor for the Lord in these hard times is like looking for a good place for a boil to come), where we must labor much, "spend and be spent," to accomplish anything for our Lord.

So come, good cousin, let us buckle on the armor and go forth to the work, thrusting in the sickle and reaping the harvest of souls. Let us go at things in a natural way. "Man shall not live by bread alone," said Christ to Satan in the temptation, by which he meant that he would not have a miracle wrought to have himself saved from trial. A learned commentator has said that if Christ had worked a miracle to save himself from hunger, another miracle would have been wrought to save himself from the cross.

Ah, cousin, let us learn self-denial. The self-denials, the toils of earth, will fit us for angelic duties in the ages to come!

Our blessed Savior begun right; so must we follow. Miracles will attend our labors; yes, for what but a miracle can change a sinner's life? But these miracles only come in the natural order. When the Savior cast out devils, he said, "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." So with us, there must be first prayer and labor, then we can charge and know even beforehand that victory will attend our labors! I pity a great many preachers and lay members of our church and all churches who are doing so little to toughen themselves in the Lord's work. Why, I fear that they will be mere babies in heaven—if, indeed, they get there at all! They will be unable to execute anything of importance unless they have a "miracle" performed for their benefit. Let's make things happen this year, Jack. We shall be fed and clothed and sheltered, too; never mind about that. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and the Lord will make them give it to us, or he will send pestilence on their sheep and cattle, or drouth on their crops. The Lord holds his own, don't fear, and we shall be fed.

Happy New Year to you and all your flocks! Your cousin,

O. B. DIAH.

$5,500! $5,500! $5,500! $5,500!

This is the amount we want to finish out our $50,000. Are there not 5,000 Methodists in Mississippi who will send the agent at once $5 each? Are there not 5,000 more who will send $1 each? Are there not 30,000 more who will send fifty cents each? Are there not 20,000 more who will send twenty-five cents each?

Brethren, sisters, send at once, and let us be able to report by the 1st of January the first $100,000 of the endowment secured. If you have already paid something, give us another lift. Send money by draft or postal order on Jackson, Miss. Address your letters to Cross-Bearers' Missionary Reading Circle.

The pastor whose people have an intelligent interest in missions has no trouble in securing contributions to foreign work. The Cross-Bearers' Missionary Reading Circle is aiding ministers by creating in the church a lively interest in the mission cause. This Circle has a three-years' course of daily reading, with examinations on the same.

Members of Woman's Missionary Societies and religious workers will do well to send to Rev. Z. M. Williams, secretary, St. Joseph, Mo., enclosing six cents postage, for a hand-book explaining this movement.

This study of history, travel, biography and peoples is itself an education, supplying a long felt need of the church, and stimulating many to an increased effort for the conversion and evangelization of the world.

Mississippi Association for the Promotion of Education.

The recent meeting of Mississippi educators in the capital recalls some early history in this State on that line. Our fathers were not indifferent to the importance of such an organization, and thereby endeavored to elevate the standard of education, improve methods, and dignify the profession of teaching.

In Millsaps College library there is a file of a magazine entitled the Southwestern Journal, published at Natchez in 1838, by the Jefferson College and Washington Lyceum. The number for Jan. 30 contains the proceedings of the "Mississippi Association for the Promotion of Education," which met in the State House at Jackson, Jan. 8, 1838. A thorough organization was effected, and a copy of the Constitution adopted is published. The Rev. M. Reed presided, and M. R Dudley was secretary.

M. W. Philips, G. T. Swann and R A. Hargis represented "the trustees of the Brandon Academy," President C. L. Dubuisson represented Jefferson College, B. W. Minter appointed as a delegate from the "Sharon Academy," and representatives of other schools were in the body. Messrs. Weir and Tucker, of Lowndes; Hoopes, of Claiborne, and Sims, of Hinds, were among the prominent delegates.

The following officers were elected: Prof. C. L Dubuisson, of Jefferson College, president; Dr. John W. King, of Brandon, vice-president; James Phillips, of Jackson, corresponding secretary; M. R. Dudley, Esq., recording secretary; Dr. M. R. Phillips, Dr. J. L. Montgomery, Solomon Tift, of Jackson; Rev. D. Comfort, of Clinton, and Pryor Lea, of Jackson, directors.

The resolutions adopted and proceedings recorded are full of interest. I thought the scrap of history would not be unacceptable to your readers.—Charles B. Galloway, in Clarion.

BY REV. J. C. W. COXE, D. D.

Encouraging the People

Haggai ii, 1-9.

B. C.—521.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." (Ps. cxxvii, 1.)

LESSON OUTLINE.

It is important to have in mind the order of events, with the successive dates, from the decree of Cyrus to the message of Haggai. The decree of Cyrus was issued B. C. 536; the foundation of the temple was laid the following year, B. C. 535. In 529 B. C. Cyrus died, and was succeeded by Cambysis. He died B. C. 522; the pseudo-Smerdis seized the throne, and by decree forbade the building of the temple. After seven months Darius succeeded to the throne, and in August of the year 521, Haggai delivered his first message to the people, urging the rebuilding of the temple. The present lesson is his second message, some six weeks later.

Haggai was the first of the prophets after the captivity. His contemporary was Zechariah. Not improbably he may have seen the first temple. His prophetic mission covers less than four months. (Comp. ch. i, 1, with ch. ii. 10.) In this time he delivered four messages (see ch. i, 1; ii, 1, 10, 20), all having to do with the rebuilding of the temple. In the interval between the second and the third message of Haggai, Zechariah delivered his first message. (Zech. i, 1.)

We follow the Berean outline in our further study.

For nearly fifteen years work on the temple had been suspended. The jealousy and opposition of the Samaritans (see Ezra iv) and the edict of the Persian king, called forth by false accusations made by the Samaritans, caused this delay. Now there came a message from another King—"the Lord of hosts," as the minor prophets almost exclusively designate Jehovah. That message came by the aged Haggai; how received by him we are not told, nor is it important. His first message was a rebuke; this is an encouragement. It came on the last day of the Feast of the Tabernacles—a day usually of great joy and praise. Now the joy was largely wanting. Crops had failed; the people were poor; they had become discouraged by delay in rebuilding the temple; what cause for joy was there?

All the more need was there of a message from the Lord. It was addressed to three classes—the representative of the civil government, the priestly head of the church and the common people. It recalled the past with its glory; it contrasted the present desolation—Jerusalem in ruins, the foundation only of the temple laid, the great altar the only reminder of the former splendor—and challenged the despondent thought of those who had seen the temple of Solomon: "Is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?" Could it ever be anything worthy their national history and their national hopes? This was the human side of the case—failure, gloom, despondency, hopelessness; what was to be effected with and by such a people?

II.—PRESENT DUTY, V. 4, 5.

It is well to look back—but only for warning and encouragement. A failure may prepare the way for success. Men may rise—

"On stepping-stones of their dead selves,
To higher things."—

if they will be wise. This end Haggai sought. He had pointed out the past in order to incite to present duty. His message of encouragement was a trumpet call to ruler and priest and people. His threefold exhortation was the echo of the divine voice to Joshua nine hundred years before. (See Josh. i, 6, 7, 9.) . . . His promise of nearly a thousand years before was not forgotten. His power, his wisdom, his resources, were pledges of success. What then was present duty?

III.—FUTURE GLORY, V. 6-9.

Yesterday, failure; to day, despondency; to morrow, glory. So God often turns prophecies of defeat into record of victory. Enemies seemed to be powerful; in a little while the Lord of hosts would "shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea, and the very land;" "all nations" would feel his power, and tremble under his authority. Now they antagonize; then they will co operate. Now they hinder; then they will help. Now discouragement is felt because of poverty; then "the desirable things of all nations shall come" to aid in rebuilding the temple and the Holy City. That the current interpretation of the phrase—"the desire of all nations"—which refers it to the Messiah is unwarranted is suggested by the broken and want of harmony which this introduces into the prophecy; and the fact that neither of the evangelists quote the verse as referring to the Messiah. An alternative view has been taken which makes Jehovah the "The desire of all nations"—which seems equally forced; while the view of the Revised Version given above is consistent, harmonious and thoroughly intelligible. It points to the following verse: "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts"—all resources in all realms, which even heathen will bring as tribute to God. And this will result: "The latter glory of this house shall be greater than the former." To the eyes of the people it seemed "as nothing" (v. 3), but faith saw down the ages, and as Herod's temple saw a glory, a splendor, a royal magnificence of architecture and adornment, which were the complete fulfillment of this prophecy, "And in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts." Here the burdened heart could bring an offering and find pardon; here in the "fullness of time" the Prince of Peace would appear with his beneficent message of peace; while in wider view and not out of harmony with this prophetic vision, the temple of human hearts would be glorified by the indwelling Spirit, and the gift of peace be the pledge of eternal good to the soul.—Central Christian Advocate.

Three Dominant Evils.

Three evils there are dominant in this land to-day—the saloon, the brothel, and the gambling den. Linked together in many dark and devious ways by common interests and common ends, these three institutions stand to day as the three most powerful and strongly entrenched organized agencies of evil with which Christianity has to contend. All three have to a greater or less extent the support of our laws and customs, and the sympathy and patronage of many of our legislators, our public officials and our leading public men. Where laws exist for the destruction or suppression of these evils, they are for the most part openly and willfully ignored. In many municipalities, like our own, the proprietors of saloons, brothels and gambling dens are allowed to conduct their vile and shameful traffic under the protection of the authorities on the condition of paying therefor a sum of money which in some cases is fixed according to a regular schedule. In some cities, as in Omaha, Nebraska, two of the institutions named are licensed by the authorities, and the fees are paid into the local treasury. In most cities, however, as in our own, the revenue from this source goes direct into the pockets of city officials.

Of the three evils named, the saloon and the gambling den have, perhaps, the boldest front and the strongest grip upon our political life. They find the most outspoken champions and supporters in respectable circles, and the most open encouragement in our secular newspapers and other public prints. With a few notable and honorable exceptions, there is not a daily newspaper in the country to-day which does not favor the license system for saloons and does not directly assist in the promotion and development of the gambling business by publishing "tips" on horse races and "expert" reports of the operations of such gambling resorts as Gutlenberg and Gloucester. A flagrant instance of this newspaper partnership in the gambling business is that of a certain newspaper of this city which, while making strong claims for public support as the organ of various reform movements, at the same time glorifies, supports, and encourages in daily columns of valuable space the vile practices of such indescribable sinks of iniquity as Guttenberg and other resorts of its kind. In our own State the gamblers have obtained such a strong representation in the State Legislature that they have been able to obtain a law known as the Ives Pool Law, granting them special privileges and immunities. A special representative of the lottery and race-track interests was elected to the Assembly from Westchester county at the recent election, and it is now given out that this man proposes to have the Ives Pool Law amended in such a way as to make it still more favorable to the gambling fraternity. In our neighboring State of New Jersey, the gamblers, it is said, have also captured the Legislature, and it is proposed to pass a law during the coming session modeled after the Ives Pool bill. The special champion of this measure will be one Thompson, the proprietor of the notorious resort at Gloucester, who was elected to the Legislature. These facts only serve to show what a position of power and influence the gambling interests have secured in these States. In other sections of the Union the same elements are at the front, and the situation of affairs is no better.

Of the three agencies and promoters of vice and crime—the saloon, brothel, and the gambling den—the first is the only one against which an organized resistance is being made in a large, persistent and effective way. A strong and noble fight has been waged these many years against the liquor evil; many able and worthy men and women have given up their whole lives to the temperance cause, and a vast amount of literature has been issued for the specific purpose of arousing and educating public sentiment on this temperance question. And from all this much actual good has resulted. The evils of strong drink are still of fearful dimensions, and the liquor power is still bold, aggressive and defiant. But the situation is not as bad as it was ten or twenty-five years ago; some real and satisfactory progress has been made. But the social evil and the gambling vice have encountered no such powerful and organized resistance, and there is reason for the belief that both of them are more prevalent to-day than ever before. It is true that much noble work has been done by local reform societies and religious and charitable institutions here and there to prevent and suppress the evils named, but nothing has been done comparable to the battle against the liquor traffic.

Without stopping further to consider the social evil at this time, it seems quite clear to us that some large and organized resistance should be made to the gambling curse. This evil has been growing, as we have said, fostered by our laws, our business methods and our social usages. The general public, including the great body of our Christian men and women, has only the slightest conception of the magnitude and enormity of the gambling evil, of the ruin and misery which it is causing. It is high time that an organized effort was made to arouse public sentiment on this question. What may be accomplished by united effort in this line is illustrated in the magnificent and successful fight made against the Louisiana Lottery last year. But lottery gambling is only one of many forms of this gigantic iniquity. Larger, more powerful and more dangerous to public morals than the Louisiana Lottery is the gambling institution known as the Race Track. Such vile resorts as Gutenborg, Gloucester, Morris Park and Garfield Park are doing more to-day toward the promotion of vice and crime than all the lotteries now in existence. If the forces of reform are seeking a specific object of attack, they can not do better than to concentrate their efforts on turf gambling. In England a large and effective movement is being made along this line by the National Anti Gambling League, of which the Earl of Aberdeen is president, and in which many other prominent men of England are enlisted. We need a league of this character in America.—Christian at Work.

Gleanings.

Dr. Pentecost is authority for the statement that in India 2,500 persons are baptized every month.

Hon. David A. Wells says that during the last forty years ten thousand million dollars have been wasted in whisky and other intoxicants.

The population of Ireland in the year 1821 was 6,801,827. In 1891 it was only 4 704,750. This is a falling off unexampled in the history of modern times.

The census of 1890 reveals the fact that in the government and mission schools of India 13 000,000 have been taught to read, and this is mainly the work of forty years.

For the first time in the history of the United States Senate a Jewish rabbi, Dr. Silverman, of New York City, offered the prayer at the opening of the session on the 7th of December.

In the city of Rome there are thirty cardinals, thirty-five bishops, 1,469 priests, 2,832 monks, and 2,215 nuns; and yet with all this "teaching power," so called, 190,000 of the inhabitants can neither read nor write.

Michigan University, at Ann Arbor, has increased the salaries of its professors to $5,000 a year. No professional men are as poorly paid as college professors, and this Michigan example should be generally copied.

It is estimated that the Presbyterian Churches of the world have 4,093 000 members, of whom 1,709,000 are found in North America, 1,436 000 in Great Britain, and 753,000 on the Continent; and, therefore, the Presbyterian population, or adherents, can not be much less than 20,000,000.

In the last year the American Bible Society printed and issued 913 678 copies of the Bible, or parts, which is more than 2 books for every minute of the 313 working days, while by the British and Foreign Bible Society 13,000 copies of the Bible, in whole or in part, were issued every working day.

The Methodists have come into possession of a fine site in the city of Rome, on the same street as the King's Palace and the Government buildings, and hope soon to have there a large and commodious building, containing a church, a college, a theological seminary, residences for the faculty, and a printing department. One man, the Rev. G. A. Reeder, of Ohio, will give $10,000.

This is linking the old with the new in a way most impressive. It is said that a descendant of Columbus is to start the machinery at the World's Fair. The aged man can not undertake so long a journey, but, touching an electric button, which connects with one of the ocean cables, and that again with the immense enginery in the Fair buildings at Chicago, the wheels will be set in motion.

Great Britain with 35,000,000 people spends as much for intoxicating beverages as the United States with 65,000,000. But her bequests for religious, educational and charitable purposes, exclusive of Baron Hirsch's benefactions, reached $15 500,000 as against $7,000,000 in the United States. Much of this difference is accounted for by the large amounts given in that country during the life of the benefactor.

There are said to be 3,000 spoken languages. The Bible has been translated into about 200 of them, but is accessible to fully two-thirds of the human race. The Mandarin Chinese affords communication to 200 000,000 souls, the English to 120,000,000, the Hindustani to 82 000 000, the German to 54,000 000, the Arabic to 50,000,000. The English-speaking people have translated most of the versions that now exist.

One hundred and nine thousand locomotives are at present running on the earth. Europe has 63 000; America, 40,000; Asia, 3,300; Australia, 2,000, and Africa, 700. In Europe Great Britain and Ireland take premier position with 17,000 engines; Germany has 15,000; France, 11,000; Austria Hungary, the second largest continental country, has 5,000; Italy, 4 000; Russia, 3,500; Belgium, 2 000; Holland and Spain, 1,000 each; Switzerland, 900, and the remaining European States, 2,600

There are said to be extant not less than 400 000 Christian hymns. Germany heads the list with 100,000. The most prolific writer of hymns was Charles Wesley, who wrote 6,500. Next to him came James Edmeston, who wrote 2 000. Isaac Watts, whose hymns are among the most popular, wrote about 400. Only about one in ten of the hymns written is worthy to be pronounced "classical" and "immortal." Fanny Crosby, the most prolific of living hymn writers, has produced about 2,000 hymns and religious songs.

The World's Fair will be a busy place this year. Nearly 700 acres will have to be swept several times every day, and an enormous force of workmen will be required to do it. The buildings must be scrubbed and swept and the exhibits kept free from dust. Exhibitors will need a large force of helpers. The Columbian guard will be increased to 1 500, and perhaps to 2,000, several hundred ticket sellers and takers will be on duty, and restaurants and booths will employ thousands. Altogether the number of employees on the grounds has been variously estimated from 20,000 to 75,000.

We sometimes overlook a very convincing evidence of the inspiration of the Bible. Dr. Parker, of London, writes: "To me the Bible is inspired because it is inspiring. I can not read it and be indolent. Nor can I read it and be indifferent to the claims of poverty and suffering. All its commandments are outgoing, such as cast, give, sow, heal, go, forgive—wonderful words when carried out in all their meaning; wonderful because the whole book is wonderful. Yes, I see difficulties, and hard questions, and vexing problems about every theory of inspiration. But my concern is with the book itself, and to my very heart it is the voice and the message of God."

How to Determine One's Field of Work.

Our work here determines our reward hereafter.

In each field faithfulness is required, not success.

Our work should be determined by God's will, and not our choice alone.

How his will may be known:

First—By his specific and direct call of the Holy Spirit.

Second—By his call through the church.

Third—By his Word, which is his will.

Fourth—By special providences.

Fifth—By his gift of talents.

Seventh—By his gift to us of reason and judgment.

Ability often determines. No blockheads for preachers or teachers.

Birth and blood often fixes position.

Hodcarriers and philosophers both wanted.

Faithfulness and fruit in one place may give us promotion.

"To every one his work" means:

Some for preachers.

Others for missionary fields.

Some to make money.

Others to spend it.

Some to be masters.

Others to serve.

Some as teachers.

Others as scholars.

Some for the pulpit.

Many for the pew.

"Opportunity" is God's mighty voice saying, "I want you."

Take a view of the whole year, see where you can fit in—there work, win and die.

Be guided by these three: the Holy Spirit, promises and providences.

God never wants anyone in two places at the same time.

Patient waiting is often one's work.

Time and prayer and providences make the field we are to fill very plain.

The following may mislead us:

1. Love of money.
2. Desire for honor and praise.
3. Popularity.
4. Ease, pleasure and power.
5. Egotism.
6. Success of others.
7. A lack of knowledge of self.

Suggestions:

Finish the work in hand.

Do the things right about you.

Some are sowers and some are reapers.

Read the 12th chapter of I. Corinthians.

Finally, get all the light you can from every source, then you settle your life-work with prayer and your own heart.—From C. H. Yatman's Lessons for Christian Workers.

The fund which George Peabody gave thirty years ago to build homes for the poor, has increased from $750 000 to more than $5 000 000. Up to the end of 1891 the trustees of the fund had provided for the artisan and laboring poor of London 11 273 rooms, besides bath rooms, laundries and wash-houses. These rooms were comprised in 5,070 houses. The average rent of these houses was $1 20 a week.

The only practical way to use religion is to use it for the good of our fellow-men.

An exchange asks this pertinent question, and we emphasize it in repeating it to our readers: "Of what use is a law if it is not to be enforced against the rich?"

The time past is sufficient for us to have educated our people for benevolent work by occasional appeals which are answered by impulsive responses. Now let us educate them in the idea that benevolence is best and safest when the practice of it is continuous.

Emerson says: "Eloquence is the power to translate a truth into a language perfectly intelligible to the person to whom you speak." So, brother preacher, you will never be eloquent if you use in preaching words which your hearers do not understand, or put them together in a way which requires study to find out what you mean.

A writer in one of our exchanges says: "I have felt that some —— churches are suffering from eminent respectability and intellectual supremacy, and lack something of evangelistic fervor"! What a power a church would wield if these three harmonized in zeal and enthusiasm in its proper work! Who could guage the power or measure the aggressiveness of such a body of Christians!

What wonderful things have had their origin in the prayer meeting! Pentecost began in a prayer meeting. The power to preach with telling results was bestowed in a prayer meeting. Christian history, as wonderful and thrilling as it is, started in a prayer meeting. These three great things originated in a small prayer meeting! Then don't look askance at the prayer meeting service of your church, but attend regularly and expect great things, and great things you will surely experience.

There is one thing that every fair-minded man ought to remember and to govern himself accordingly, and that is, that every laboring man and woman had a right to one day of rest in the week, and each one wants it. The laboring people who have no Sunday know that they give fifty-two days of work in the year for which they do not receive a nickel. They realize that this is a crime against them, and every fair-minded man ought to cry out against such a crime and against "the greed of gain" that is behind it.

Last year the American Sunday-school Union planted 1,664 Sunday-schools, into which were brought 66,569 teachers and scholars. In the schools it aided and recorded were 474,603 teachers and scholars; 15,614 Bibles and Testaments were distributed to the destitute; 56,582 visits were made to families; 12,474 meetings were held; 6,678 conversions were reported, and 216 churches developed from this work, while the outlay was only $105,988. Can you parallel this in any branch of home or foreign mission work, either as to the importance of work, or the results secured, or the expense incurred?—Christian at Work.

Church Vows.

It is a good time to remember and study over the vows we have made to God and the church. Every member of the Methodist Church has taken, and voluntarily taken, a vow. That is, every member has made promises to God and to the church to do certain things and not to do certain other things. In the whirl of every-day life, we are not always careful to keep these promises in mind. The things of the world take such a hold upon us, and hold on with such a tenacious grip, that the memory of promises made in the past almost fades away and we require to be reminded again and again of them. If these promises had been made to be kept for a certain specified lapse of time, it would not be a great matter to fail to remember them; but they have been made to embrace all time until probation ends. They have been taken in such a way as to include all time and to exclude none of it. The obligation which we have imposed upon ourselves by assuming these vows is continuous from the time they were taken until our life shall go out. "All the days of your life" is the formula by which we have assumed these obligations. There can be no interruption of the continuity of the obligation nor prescription by lapse of time of the responsibility. As, then, the vows bind us all the time, it may be wise occasionally to review the nature and meaning of the obligations we have assumed.

The answers to two questions constitute the vows which we have assumed in joining in fellowship with the church. Perhaps these promises are not as fresh upon our consciences as they should be; therefore, we call attention to them. One is the "vow of repentance, faith and obedience contained in the baptismal covenant." In order to find out what that "baptismal covenant" is, we turn to the ritual for adult baptism and find that we have promised "that we will renounce the devil and all his works, and constantly believe God's Holy Word, and obediently keep his commandments all the days of our lives." This promise, though expressed in few words, is very comprehensive. It is simply a vow to turn away from all evil and to follow after all good. It is a vow which binds us to a constant belief in the Word of God and a continuous practice of its precepts until life shall come to an end. In the great haste of the present we are apt to forget the greatness of our vow; so right here and now let us stop and think it over—this repentance, faith and obedience.

The other vow is, that we will be "subject to the discipline of the church, attend upon its ordinances and support its institutions." This promise includes all church duties, and these are very many and very weighty. To be "subject to the discipline of the church," we think, means that we will keep its rules. If it does not mean this, we do not know what it means. These rules are very plain, and our pastors have read them to the congregations very often; so that we can not plead ignorance, even if we desired to do so, Attendance upon the church services is a part of this promise. Perhaps we have suffered other matters to hinder us from keeping this part of our vow; but while such may be the occasion of a plain violation of promise, such can not be a justification of that violation. Nothing but impossible conditions can excuse the performance of a voluntary promise. We have also promised to support the institutions of the church. Many of us seem to have imbibed the notion that this means we are to give the institutions of the church our moral support. That is not all, if any part of the support, we are to give. It simply means that we are to support the church and her institutions with our money. Some do this well, some do it indifferently, and some do it not at all, seemingly having forgotten that they had promised to support the church with their means.

These are our promises, and they are as binding to-day as they were when we assumed them. Then let us begin the year with the memory the Psalmist had when he exclaimed, "Thy vows, O God, are upon me."

The call has gone forth for reinforcements for China and Japan. Let the passages quoted below from a private letter show the spirit of one who has been to the front, and who, with a dying child, a sick wife and himself broken down in health, is full of devotion for and longing to return to the work.

For twenty-four hours we have bitterly fought death from the throat of our dear little babe. The struggle increases; I fear he must go. His one month in our home and hearts has been like the sojourn of an angel. "The Lord hath given. Blessed be the name of the Lord!"

Doctor, my spirit moves within me when I begin to approach the subject of my return, or not return, to Japan. Don't you think one of those two men who goes to Japan at once should be I? Do you not think I ought to have the right of way? Be the first man to respond, so to speak, to the call of Bishop Key? I am ready to be among the first he orders to the front. I assume the risk of my return from a failure of health under five years, or any other period, if the Board require it. I will, when I go, pay the travel of and support for one year any young lady who knows music, only approved by the Board, who shall be allowed to work with my wife among the women and children at the station I am appointed to open. Or else I will pay my own way out there. This as a thank-offering for my wife's recovery and my own. I believe I am in the will of the Lord. Nevertheless, if those in authority over me do not think so, my convictions will have to yield. As I wrote to Bishop Keener: "The foreign work is my spouse. I am pledged to it for life. If it means a shorter term of service, I prefer it."

Surely throughout this broad land there are others filled with the same spirit of consecration. It has been several months since the call was made; yet we have had but few applications, and none from Mississippi, although a Mississippian has offered to send out a man and his wife to supply the place left vacant by the death of J. W. Lambuth.

In this exigency, with the debt hanging over us, knowing that appropriations for new missionaries can not now be made, there are four persons who have offered to support missionaries. Until the debt is paid missionaries must go out on these specials.

This money has been ready and waiting for months. Why this lack of volunteers? Is there a soldier of the cross who is not willing to go where the need is greatest? May the Holy Spirit bring the need and the call home to the heart and the conscience of everyone in the church.

With regard to the debt, I would say that in reply to queries sent out to Conference solicitors the replies are very favorable.

The Southwest Missouri Conference, to which was distributed $3,272, subscribed $4,406, and has collected up to date $1,069.

The North Alabama Conference subscribed $1,300, and the balance of the $4,228 asked for has been distributed, and Dr. Hosmer says the work of collection is encouraging.

Dr. T. L. Mellen, of the Mississippi Conference, has sent in over $800 of the $3,703 distributed to that Conference.

The Virginia Conference was asked for $7,483, and of that amount has raised over $2,500.

The Tennessee Conference has collected $2,335 of the $7,860 distributed to it, and the balance is in process of collection with the prospect of getting every dollar.

If the pastors and solicitors would only push the matter with one heart and mind, there is no doubt but the entire debt could be lifted.

W. R. LAMBUTH.

Sunday at the Columbian Exposition.

The devil is most persistent in his efforts to obstruct the way of righteousness. This is clearly seen in the effort now being made to induce Congress to repeal the Sunday closing law for the World's Fair, which it enacted last Summer. After accepting the money donated by Congress under the condition of keeping the gates closed on Sunday, the local directory and local press and anti-Sabbath people of Chicago have put in motion the machinery to reverse, if possible, the action of Congress. This is an insult to the Christian people, as well as to Congress itself, and should be resented as it deserves.

In regard to this matter Dr. Butler, chaplain of the United States Senate, has made some very just observations in a recent issue of the Independent, which we republish for our readers:

Congress, the most conscientious and most intelligent legislative body in the world, rightly interpreted the popular will in affixing the closing conditions to its liberal appropriation for the Exposition from the public treasury. No doubt the Commissioners accepted in good faith this money of the people, and must, as honorable, law-abiding public servants, see that this law closing the gates of the Exposition on the Lord's Day, as the laws of quarantine against cholera or crime at our ports, is enforced. A great moral epidemic starts outside the gates of this Exposition, endangering the natives inside, which need the protection and moral influence of this quadro centennial, which, but for our Sabbath and the moral and religious agencies centering in the day and Word and house of the Lord, had not been. Our history and our hope, as a republic, focalize in the Lord's day, the perpetual sign of God's covenant of blessing with the peoples of earth. Our strength is not in wealth and armament, but in the intelligence and virtue and piety of the people. Godly conscience is the fruitful soil of American patriotism. The moral forces of the nation must be fostered by all, whether native or adopted, who love our nation. We have room in our vast domain for all industrious, virtuous, God-fearing people from every land, but for no others.

The conditions which led Congress to affix the Sunday closing condition to the appropriation are substantially unchanged. The emphasis now given to the workingmen, and to the stopping of the machinery and forbidding of barter on the Lord's day, are no greater now than they were when discussed last Summer in the Capitol. When the millennium has dawned and the moral atmosphere of Chicago and of all the cities shall have been purified, we may open expositions on God's day and study art and invention and science with profit for seven days in the week. The time has not yet come in which to treat every day alike. To do so now would be, not to sanctify, but to secularize not six, but seven days of the week. Infinite wisdom appoints the Sabbath. With the gates ajar, even on the Lord's day, God have mercy upon the good people of that wondrous city by the lake! With 50,000 miles of railroad terminating in Chicago, draining a radius of some 400 miles, reaching out into seven States, with a population of 16,000 000 of people, excursion trains pouring in upon the more than million residents of the great city, it requires no vivid imagination to picture a scene of moral desolation—a blasting sirocco, which no pen can paint. Open gates mean demoralization in every city, town and hamlet on the lines of these enterprising railroads—double work for trainmen, to say nothing of the hard-worked men and women inside the Exposition gates. The ruse of religious services inside the buidings is not to be considered for a moment. It is impracticable as it would be unprofitable. The half-dollar entrance fee and the flood of business which would sweep through the streets of the city by this asked-for repeal is, I apprehend, the true measure of the inspiring motive. To sweep away the safeguards of one day's rest in seven would be the saddest day in the history of the workingman's unrest. God made the Sabbath pre-eminently for the workingman. There are workingmen and workingmen. Multitudes of them are Sabbath-keeping and church going and prospered.

It remains for the press, the pulpit and the moral and religious sentiment of the nation to make themselves heard in the halls of Congress. Our legislators and our President are to be applauded for the law now upon the statute books closing the gates of the Columbian Exposition on the Lord's day. It marks an epoch in our nation's history second only to the Emancipation, which made all the land free. That the gospel leaven of truth, justice, righteousness, brotherhood, fatherhood, are molding us more and more as a people, there can be no doubt. Having achieved this victory for the Lord's day, it is for the forty millions of people who asked it, and who now indorse it, to stand by Congress and bid your senators and representatives to stand fast.

The State vs. the Mayor of New Orleans.

The Chief of Police of this city was charged with a misdemeanor in refusing to make arrests of those who violated the Sunday law, and his trial resulted in a mistrial. The jury stood eleven to one in favor of conviction. The case was plain, the evidence indubitable, the judge's charge clear, and yet there was one man who could not be convinced of the Chief's guilt. The Chief claimed to be acting under orders from the Mayor, and would not arrest Sunday law violators without a warrant.

This case brings out the fact that our Mayor has put himself above a State statute. He is the autocrat of the Commonwealth of Louisiana, and no law will be enforced without his nod of approval!

The Picayune says:

Whatever may be the outcome of the mistrial in the case of the State against Superintendent of Police Gaster, the fact seems to have been pretty plainly determined judicially that the police force of the city is under State control in respect to the enforcement of the criminal statutes of the State. This principle was unequivocally declared from the bench, and there is good reason to believe that it is sound in law as well as necessary to the administration of the State statutes concerning crimes in the city.

Certainly the Mayor is authoritative in his control over the police in respect to city ordinances, and the Mayor has power to pardon persons who have been convicted under city regulations; but when a statute of the State comes up for consideration the Mayor has no power to oppose and obstruct its execution. If he has no power to suspend or modify the enforcement of a State law, plainly he has no power to authorize the police to do so. Then the Chief of Police can not excuse his own laches and neglect in the premises by pleading orders from the Mayor.

Such, in effect, is the ruling of the judges of the Criminal District Court sitting en banc, and it should be considered authoritative in the future. Chief Gaster must now realize that, in accepting the Mayor as superior or paramount in dictating his conduct in regard to a criminal statute of the State of Louisiana, he has come dangerously near to serious punishment through sentence of the State Criminal Court. The Mayor, too, should realize that by assuming a power superior to that of the State in enforcing State laws, he has come dangerously near to precipitating upon a too obedient servant criminal punishment and an ignominious fate. But the end of this case has not yet come. There may yet be more of it than the city authorities will relish. The State is sovereign and the city is subject. It is like bearding a lion for the city to assume superior airs in the premises.

We are moved to ask concerning our mighty Mayor: "Upon what doth this Cæsar feed, that he hath grown so great?"

NOTES.

If any young brother is lamenting the fact that he is not a genius, let him remember that genius accomplishes nothing but by hard work. Hard work is a genie which "brings things to pass."

A very curious scientific contest has been going on in naval and military circles for a long time, and has not yet been decided. It is the contest of "gun penetration against armor resistance." Improvements in each have been made continually. As fast as new guns have been invented, new kinds of armor to resists balls have been made. And thus the contest is kept up pretty evenly by each side, until armor and guns have arrived at a remarkable degree of penetrating power by the one and resistance by the other. It looks as if the old question, "What will be the result when an irresistible force strikes an immovable object?" is in a fair way to be answered.

The scientists will catch up with the Bible after while, if they hurry up. The Sanitary Era has this:

Dr. William Hunter, in a recent lecture, characterized the blood as a highly organized tissue—one to which he would assuredly apply the term "living" did he not fear to be asked to define what life was. The relations of the various parts of the blood were, if less close anatomically, no less intimate physiologically and chemically than those of the cells and matrix of any other tissue. Moses made a remark long ago that was still more radical than Dr. Hunter's, viz: "The blood is the life." Possibly there was more in this dictum than modern science has yet overtaken. Or, perhaps it was only a popular way of indicating for a special purpose, the most accessible situation of life.

The enterprising spirit of this age is immeasurable and unquenchable. Two great projects—greatest of all yet broached—are being talked up. One is the connection of this continent with Japan, China, India and Australia by a Pacific cable by way of the Sandwich Islands. The other is the connection of both hemispheres and all the continents by railway. It is proposed to construct a railroad from Cape Horn up through South America, Central America, Mexico, United States and Canada to Alaska; thence across Bering Straits to Siberia, thence westward and southward to Constantinople; thence to Egypt, and thence down through Africa to the Cape of Good Hope. What a stupendous undertaking; and yet it will be done. Difficulties are nothing except they are religious difficulties. Religious difficulties are the only ones that men can not surmount.

The Picayune makes a fine point on the subject of immigration. While deploring the fact that too many undesirable people are coming, and coming too fast, the Picayune makes the point that as undesirable as that fact is there is another fact which is really alarming, and that is, the facility with which these undesirable people are made citizens. Here is the real source of trouble. In a few days, or weeks at most, these immigrants are converted into citizens, and then the party politicians take them in hand and manipulate them as they list. According to the Picayune, while the immigration laws need revision, the naturalization laws stand in greater need of revision. If those people were not made citizens so soon, they might be managed so as to circumscribe the sphere of their hurtful influence. But the laws continue as they are, we are helpless. The Picayune is right.

During this year the preachers ought to inaugurate some scheme to improve our congregational singing, and persist in it until the improvement comes. It is sadly needed everywhere. Have the present generation of Methodists lost the power to sing what characterized the worship of our fathers? It does seems so. Most of the singing now "is with the understanding" by the choir, but with very little "with the spirit." Dr. Clark, of Christian Endeavor fame, gives a brief account of congregational singing in Australia, where he has been visiting lately:

The singing throughout Australia, so far as I have heard it, is magnificent. This adjective is not a letter too strong. No thin, shrill, soprano warblings, no unintelligible bass mutterings, but these hearty Christians, but glorious, full-voiced congregational singing. It is brisk and spirited, too, so that seven or eight verses are sung in the same time that it would often take our congregations to drag through four, with the tedious voluntaries, interludes and postludes to which we are so often treated.

That is the kind we need in all churches—"hearty, glorious, full-voiced congregational singing."

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Closet prayer will settle many difficulties!

There are said to be four hundred theological seminaries in this country!

South Carolina has abolished the saloon, and the State government takes charge of the liquor business.

Brother, you will do your most valuable work in personal contact with your people, especially with the sinners.

Within two years and a half Mr. Rockefeller has given to Chicago University three and a half millions of dollars!

"If you tried as hard to be good as you try to get money," don't you think there would be improvement along several lines?

Don't dwell too much in your thought on the past year. The present year has grave responsibilities and glorious privileges.

If you are a "college-bred preacher," leave out of your sermon, "When I was at college." If you don't, somebody will say you are putting on "college airs."

Every Methodist should take a Methodist paper. "It is impossible," said Wesley, "for people to grow in grace unless they give themselves to reading."

The electoral colleges of all the States met last Monday and voted for President and Vice-President. We have not received full returns, but we presume Cleveland and Stevenson have been elected.

A little boy asked a little girl: "Wot's the difference between high church and low church?" The little girl replied: "Why, don't you know? One says, 'Aw-men,' an' the other says, 'A-men.'"

W. B. Palmore, of the St. Louis Advocate, during this year will take another tour abroad. He will visit England, France, Belgium, Portugal, Spain, Africa, and return through South America.

Dr. Buckley's example may be followed with profit by some preachers we wot of. It is said that he saws wood for exercise. Sawing wood is good for the chest and, therefore, for the lungs and, therefore, for all persons who speak in public.

When you collect money for the ADVOCATE, don't write to the publisher to charge to your account, but send it forward immediately. The publisher pays the expense of remittance, and he needs the money at once; and he does not know that the editor is writing this.

About 300 ministers were received on trial during the past few months into our Conferences. Some of the Conferences are yet to be held, and the records of some we failed to get. According to our count, thirty-six Conferences received 289 preachers on trial, and we suppose, estimating those we failed to get and those Conferences yet to be held, the number will easily reach 300. South Carolina heads the list with 22, followed by Holston with 20. So God is still calling men to the itinerancy, and the church is sending them forth. Amen!

Mississippi Conference Assessments.

There was an error in publishing the assessments of the Mississippi Conference for the expenses of the delegates to the General Conference. The figures published in the ADVOCATE, of Dec. 29, show the assessments for the last year. The Joint Board of Finance recommended, and it was adopted by the Conference, that the districts should be assessed the deficits on their collections for last year. So that the assessments for General Conference purposes for 1893 are as follows: Jackson district, $76.25; Vicksburg district, $71.25; Brookhaven district, $141.00; Meridian district, $97.35; Seashore district, $45.50; Woodville district, $42.05; Brandon district, $62.00.

Letter from Dr. I. W. Cooper.

MR. EDITOR: Fifteen days I have been on the sick list. This illness came upon me in the midst of packing to move. Great nervousness, shortness of breath and indisposition to sleep have produced great weakness. Nearly one hundred sermons preached last year outside of my pastoral charge had something to do with my sickness. Rev. John D. Ellis, a promising young minister, will read in my library this year and help me in my work, and I will take my first rest in sixteen years. The kindness shown me has been like the sunshine breaking through the clouds. Hoping to have your prayers, I remain,

Your affectionate brother,

I. W. COOPER.

The Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

Several of our preachers carried out the programme prepared by our Secretaries for the Week of Prayer, and the results have been gratifying. Drs. Ahrens, Walker, LaPrade, Beard and Sawyer all held services, and we suppose several hundred dollars will come in to extinguish the debt, as the result of these services. We regret that all our pastors here did not do as these older pastors have done. We think when it is sought to make a general movement for a special end by the whole church, that all pastors should co-operate. If the pastors don't, the people won't. If we are connectional, let us be connectional; but if we are congregational, let us quit avowing connectionalism, and every fellow set up for himself.

Notice.

The district stewards of the Delhi district, Louisiana Conference, will meet at Delhi, Jan. 25, 1893. They are as follows: Dr. A. S. Helmick, W. D. Higginbotham, J. B. Riley, D. C. Chapman, James Leggett, T. G. Higgins, Rev. A. W. Moore, C. H. Gill, J. G. Goodson, Jas. Beard, W. S. H. Wailes, L. G. Johnston, S. Whited and R. H. Dollerhide.

Request.

PLEASE GIVE THIS YOUR ATTENTION.

All persons having paid any amount to any person for the building of a district parsonage in the old Winona district in either of the following years—1889, 1890, 1891, 1892—will please send me your names, and the amount and the year in which you paid it. Pastors will confer a favor on me if they will call attention to this matter.

New Orleans, Jan. 10.

Meridian District.

Every preacher appointed to labor in this district was at the post of duty before Jan. 1, and from every direction come cheering tidings. While there are regrets expressed at parting with the former pastors, the new pastors have been right royally received. We thank God and go forward. Forgetting the things that are behind, we will reach forth unto the things that are before, and press toward the mark as we have not done in the days which are gone. God help us all!

T. L. MELLEN, P. E.

Southern University.

We are made glad by the weekly visits of the ADVOCATE to our college library. It is pleasant to note what is transpiring in the native State of quite a number of our boys. When your scribe entered school, less than a week since, he found more than a dozen boys here from Mississippi. One thing is noteworthy: very few new boys are here from Mississippi. The young men who came here before Millsaps College was opened can not be expected to go elsewhere to finish their education. Of course, the tide will be turned to Millsaps; but the old boys can not forget their first love. They are wedded to the university.

But I want to speak especially of the religious condition of the school. There is more religious enthusiasm and more vital godliness in the school than I have ever known here before. In addition to the Y. M. C. A. work done, there is a daily prayer meeting, at 6:30 P. M., in the hall. Such interest I have not seen before. The truth of the matter is, Alabama, together with the surrounding country, is going to be mightily stirred by these promising young men. There is a future for every State that produces such zealous young manhood as has been exhibited here. The two Conferences in this State have been greatly reinforced from the halls of the University, especially so within the last ten years. The school is a great factory turning out finished material for the use of the people. What this school has been to Alabama we want Millsaps to be to Mississippi, and more.

There are almost, if not quite, a dozen young men here preparing for missionary work. They are ready to leave home and native land, friends, and the dearest ties possible to be formed, and go to the heathen worlds that know not God. The spirit of missions is all-consuming in its nature, and the young men have yielded to its mighty influence and are ready to say, even have already said, "Here am I; send me." E. S. LEWIS.

A Literary Sensation!

Written by an Atlanta Clergyman.

"THE MAKING OF A MAN," BY DR. J. W. LEE.

The Sensation the Book Has Produced in Literary Circles.

No Book of Recent Publication Has Been More Discussed or More Praised—Some of the Press Comments.

It remained for a preacher of the M. E. Church, South—Dr. J. W. Lee, of Atlanta, Ga.—to write the book which created the greatest sensation during the past year.

The first edition of Dr. Lee's book has already been exhausted, although it was first published only two months ago.

Perhaps no book written by an American author ever jumped into such sudden favor.

To show how the book has been received we have been furnished the following extracts from several reviews of the great work:

"It is worthy to be one of the Bampton lectures."—Bishop J. C. Keener.

"In its insight and wealth of thought it is not unworthy to be ranked with the best work of Huxley or Spencer, and in the beauty of its literary form and breadth of treatment it need not fear comparison with Emerson at his best."—New York Tribune.

"It deserves all the Tribune says of it."—Bishop A. G. Haygood.

"It will live and take rank among the great works of our time."—Hon. Henry W. Hilliard.

"None but a high order of man could have written the book."—Judge Logan E. Bleckley.

"It is most lucidly written."—Dr. J. H. Shirling, Edinburgh, Scotland.

"I expect to read it with great interest and delight."—Principal John Caird, University of Glasgow.

"Thought provoking and pleasing in style."—Bishop R. K. Hargrove.

"Stimulating, intellectually and morally."—New York Homo Journal.

"Thoughtful people will read the book with intense interest."—Boston Home Journal.

"Sure to attract attention."—Minneapolis Commercial Bulletin.

"A model of elegant writing."—Philadelphia Item.

"A very good book."—Chicago Herald.

"The author has done honest and vigorous thinking."—Boston Congregationalist.

"Clear, forceful and sweet."—St. Paul Church Work.

"Has the clearness of expression that both scholars and those who are not scholars alike demand."—Zion's Herald, Boston.

"Should command a wide reading."—Boston Times.

"With a thoroughly modern and progressive spirit is combined a conservative disposition toward historic conceptions of the divine part in human affairs."—Boston Literary World.

"It revolves around the fine idea and true one, that man is the interpretation of nature, and that his evolution is the ultimate end of all the relations which man sustains to life and nature."—New York Independent.

"An elegant style, and the marks of extended reading add to the attractiveness of the volume."—Boston Golden Rule.

"It will be read with interest, and its influence can not fail to be good."—San Francisco Chronicle.

"We would rather have written 'The Making of a Man' than to have written any prose work, of which we have any knowledge, from a Southern brain."—Wilmington Messenger.

"Dr. Lee has builded the book of superior stuff, like the blocks in the Washington monument—chiseled, exact, solid, rich."—Richmond Christian Advocate.

"You can not read the classic sentences of the gifted author and follow him as he treads the paths of history and philosophy, pointing out the peaks of progress, without feeling an uplift."—Central Kentucky Methodist.

"Can not be too warmly commended."—Review of Reviews.

"Stimulating, refreshing, broadening and thought-provoking."—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"Clearness of thought, satisfactory logic and lucid expression are found in this discussion of the old, yet ever new, question of our purpose and being."—New York Christian Advocate.

"The agnostic notion that man belongs merely to the animal kingdom and has none of his own, is ably combatted throughout the book."—Brooklyn Eagle.

"A strong, analytical work."—St. Louis Republic.

"A work of permanent value."—Augusta Chronicle.

"The discussion is striking and out of the beaten course."—New York Recorder.

"He rightly holds that the meaning of creation is only to be seen in the development of humanity."—Critic.

"Dr. Lee has given to the world a volume as lustrous as gold and enduring like asbestos."—Dr. J. W. Hinton.

"It is literally 'up to date.'"—Chicago Epworth Herald.

"The weakness of the Spencerian 'unknowable' argument is very clearly shown."—Minneapolis Journal.

"The book is well written and well intentioned."—Open Court, Chicago.

"The author at one step has placed himself among the foremost thinkers of the day."—Pacific Methodist.

"It presents an able digest of man's history from the cradle to the grave. The work is written with a boldness which is astonishing from one of the cloth."—American Hebrew.

"It is a valuable book."—Boston Herald.

"'The Making of a Man,' by Rev. J. W. Lee, D. D., is a book that will strengthen many a wavering religious inquirer and hold him to a religious belief."—Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin.

"It is a fresh, vigorous, scholarly discussion—a valuable contribution to the higher thought of the day."—Bishop C. B. Galloway.

"The book is substantial, strengthening, elevating, and will be 'the making of a man,' to such as are in doubt and uncertainty in regard to eternal things."—Anglo-American, City of Mexico.

"Fresh and thoughtful."—Advance, Chicago.

"Dr. Lee may fairly be called the Ingersoll of the new orthodoxy, for eloquence, strength and beauty of presentation which characterize the writing and utterances of the great agnostic are everywhere present in Dr. Lee's inspiring work!"—The Arena, Boston.

"Thoughtful, yet readable in a high degree; stimulating in the best sense of the word; masterly in argument, and sweet in spirit, it will make a way for itself in the literary world to a place of distinguished influence. We never remember to have heard of the author before, but he has produced a book of singular beauty and force which will make him in great demand among scholars."—Kansas-City Messenger.

"A wonderfully able book."—Dr. Chas. F. Deems.

"As plain and clear as if written for the young, as profound as if written only for scholars."—Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

"One of the most grateful and satisfactory views of mind and man I ever read."—Rev. Dr. A. F. Sherritt.

"It must be a joy to have produced as strong, brilliant and popular a book as 'The Making of a Man.' It is a fine stroke."—Bishop John H. Vincent.

If you have a husband, wife, sister, brother, father, mother, son, daughter or sweetheart or friend, you can select nothing more appropriate than "The Making of a Man." The Cassell Publishing Company, recognizing the great value of the work, have put it into the most attractive, elegant form. It is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. It is on sale at all the bookstores.

A Presentation.

The two hundred and twenty-seventh Recital of Pilcher's Studio of Music took place last Wednesday before an immense audience of music lovers and friends of the institution. An elaborate programme had been prepared, consisting of selections from Beethoven, Bellini, Batiste, Buck, Bach, Donizetti, Faure, Gottschalk, Gounod, Dr. Liszt, Weber, Dr. Pilcher, Mills, Dr. Salter, Rossini, Thome, Wagner, Meyerbeer, and others, and was participated in by the following pupils: Misses Fannie L. Chase, Freda Delmel, Katie Cuneo, Bella Bagnetto, Katie Imholte, Isabel King, Camille Hayem, Marie Louise Percy, Carrie T. Pilcher, Dora Oteri, Emma Uthoff, Letitia Preston, Adele C. Uthoff, Mamie P. Wayne, Mrs. Harriet F. Shuber, and Messrs. John D Barthel, B. C.; Chas. H. Pilcher, Geo. J. Adams, J. A. Miller, and Dr. Pilcher.

At the close of the programme, Mr. John D. Barthel, B. C. of the graduation class, of the session 1892-93 presented Dr. Pilcher with an elegant curtain-desk, or secretary, and revolving chair. He said:

Ladies and Gentlemen: The next figure on the programme is a "concerted piece." However, with your kind permission, I will take the liberty of introducing a special figure, an extraordinary number. This composition is composed by the entire class of students, and is most respectfully dedicated to their beloved teacher, Wm. H. Pilcher, Music Doctor and Master of Conchords. It is a Christmas number in the shape of a secretary.

Addressing Dr. Pilcher, he said:

Dr. Wm. H. Pilcher: It is customary that friends should be remembered, especially at Christmas. However, with the class of '92 it is not a question of "custom or fashion." Our hearts prompted us to present to you this curtain-desk and revolving chair as a trifling testimony of our sincerest love and respect towards our beloved teacher. I deliver into your charge this present, which is accompanied by the best wishes for your future welfare, health and happiness and good luck. May this desk and chair often remind you of the class of 1892.

Dr. Pilcher said:

My Ever Dear Pupils and Friends: You certainly have me at a great disadvantage, and I congratulate you for having made choice of so good a general as Mr. Barthel. This afternoon he asked me for permission to put his secretary in the studio, as he wished to do more of his work at composition in the studio, and I, of course, consented. You have accomplished the result desired, and your teacher is surprised and overcome with gratitude. For eight consecutive years the generosity and fidelity of my beloved pupils have been manifested continually by devotion and kindly sentiments of love and esteem. This is the eight annual occurrence of an act of affection on the part of those to whom, to a great extent, I owe my many successes. It is you, my own true friends, who stand by me through all the trials and tribulations of unkindness and intolerance. There are those who owe all that they possess, in an artistic sense, to the training and prestige of this institution, who have done and are doing all in their power to destroy its influences for good in this community; but their efforts have proven futile, and our friends have shown what true friendship is by continued patronage and increased zeal in every direction. You have the honor, my well-beloved pupils, of being members of the first musical institution which has ever been able to become a fixture and power in our city, and, thanks to your constancy, the prospects are that it will continue to grow in importance. All I ask of you in the future is, that you will remain faithful to your art, remembering that music is the greatest of all arts, for it is a universal language and springs from inspiration. Music is the language of the universe; it is God's language, and is more eloquent than anything that can be conceived by man. It is a balm which heals all wounds and cheers the aching heart. The vile tongue of slander may sting with the venom of a poisonous adder; but the holy symphonies from the unseen world come to us from divinity itself, and we are elevated by their angelic strains to the highest heaven, where all is peace and joy. I accept these exquisite tokens of love and esteem with heartfelt gratitude, and my affection for you and longing for your continued progress and success in your chosen art were never stronger than at the present moment. How can I thank you for these renewed manifestations of devotion to art and esteem for myself? When my work of life is o'er, and I go hence to be no more seen, may a kind Providence permit some of you, my dear pupils, to carry on to even a higher state of perfection the work and labor of love which it has been my good fortune and happiness to originate and place, with your kind assistance, on a solid basis. May Heaven bless and protect you, my dear pupils, and may your lives be filled with artistic successes and happiness!

Big Church Buildings.

We think we have some big churches here in America, but few of them have a seating capacity of over 1,500 persons. Compared with some of the big churches of Europe, ours are but as mole hills to mountains.

It's a queer thing

Why everybody doesn't use Pearline. Here and there, though, there's a woman who's been left behind. The world has moved along without her. What she needs to know is this—that in washing clothes or cleaning house, Pearline will save half her work, half her time, and do away with the rub, rub, rub, that wears things out—that it costs no more than common soap, and does no more harm.

And if she wants to know it, there are millions of women who can tell her.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 315 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

WE'VE WORKED WONDERS!

When you make a change with US this Fall, it will be for the better. We have "shaved" the prices until only a tissue of profit covers the cost. Our line of cheapness has been drawn at $12. Worth weighs light below that price. Up to $35 quality grows with every dollar—there is the highest perfection. The Single- and Double-breasted Sacks and Three- and Four-button Cutaway Frocks made up in all the new shades in Cheviot, Thibets, Worsted, etc. The Double-breasted Clergyman's Suit has not been overlooked. HOME LIFE.

CO-OPERATION.

"Help one another," the snowflakes said,
As they cuddled down in their fleecy bed:
"One of us here would not be felt,
One of us here would quickly melt;
But I'll help you and you'll help me,
And then what a big white drift we'll see."

"Help one another," the maple spray
Said to its fellow-leaves one day;
"The sun would wither me here alone,
Long enough ere the day is gone;
"But I'll help you and you help me,
And then what a splendid shade there'll be!"

"Help one another," the dewdrop cried,
Seeing another drop close to its side;
"This warm south breeze would drive me away,
And I should be gone ere noon to-dey;
But I'll help you and you help me,
And we'll make a brook and run to the sea."

"Help one another," a grain of sand
Said to another grain just at hand;
"The wind may carry me over the sea,
And then, oh, what will become of me?
But come, my brother, give me your hand;
We'll build a mountain and there we'll stand."

How Far a Child Travels.

The limit of men's capacity for speed and endurance in travel under given conditions is a matter of record, but who has not witnessed the almost ceaseless activity of a child and been led to exclaim, "I wonder how far that child has traveled to-day?"

A gentleman in Pittsburg recently attempted to answer this query in an ingenious way. He had the floor of his nursery covered with white muslin. He then strapped to the ankle of an eighteen-months' child a "marker" consisting of an ink pad, that made a plain mark for every step taken.

The child was allowed to roam about and amuse itself as usual, and at night the marks were counted. There were the almost incredible number of 6,483 marks, which, allowing six inches to each step, make the sum of the day's journeyings 3,242 feet, or almost three-fourths of a mile.

The child was probably not above the average in point of activity and endurance, and its feat was only that of many another little one whose mother finds it dropping asleep in her arms at night before the nightgown can be coaxed over its head, while the older members of the family wonder "what makes baby so cross and tired to-night."

The gentleman next experimented with his boy of nine years, who was out of school and in a community affording space and attractions for rambling. He purchased a pedometer, an instrument for measuring distances walked, on the principle of the cyclometer used for measuring the distance traveled in a buggy or on a bicycle. This he managed to get into the bottom of the boy's pocket, among the marbles, nails, twine, knives, and other bric-a-bac there collected. Its additional weight was not noticed for a few days, and in that time it did its work.

The first day the instrument registered 9¼ miles, and the boy was at the table for every meal. The second day's record was 10 3-7 miles; the third, a rainy day, 7½; the fourth, 9 8-17.

The family were astonished at the result, and thereafter, when anyone complained of a walk of a mile or so, nobody pooh-poohed louder than Bob. One other noticeable result was that Bob got his monthly pair of shoes without the usual lecture on the sin of wearing them out so fast.

"Sanctified Christians."

They prefer the duty they owe to God to the danger they fear from man.

They seek the public good of others above the private good of themselves.

They have the most beautiful conversations among the blackest persons.

They become as fathers to all in charity and as servants to all in humility.

They mourn most before God for their lusts, which appear least before men.

They keep their hearts lowest when God raises their estates highest.

They seek to be better inwardly in t bstance than outwardly in appearance.

They take those reproofs best which they need most.

They take up duty in point of performance and lay it down in point of independence.

They take up their contentment in God's appointment.

They are more in love with the employment of holiness than with the enjoyment of happiness.

They are more employed in searching their own hearts than in censuring other men's states.

They set out for God at the beginning and hold out with him to the end.

They take all the shame of their sins to themselves and give all the glory of their services to Christ.

The Sabbath.

The world would, indeed, be a dreary place without the blessed Sabbath, with its hallowed rest. Thousands would fill untimely graves, for no human being could long bear the rush and whirl, and the ceaseless fret and worry of the daily work. Insanity and suicide would claim hundreds, where one now becomes their victim. The silent death angel would fly with swifter speed than ever before, if tired hands, heads and souls could not rest one day out of the seven, and there would be one unceasing wail of agony forever sounding in our ears.

The sweet Sabbath breaks this terrible march that would lead to untimely death, and places a halo of peace upon the aching brow. It unclasps the galling chains of labor, and calm, sweet peace holds for a blessed season the fretted human spirit. It wraps its mantle of rest about the wearied form, and the poor child of daily toil is saved.

To the Christian it is the bright mile-stone in his journey toward the eternal city. It casts a golden link in life's wearisome chain, and its calm, restful hours soothe the care and pain of daily living. The doors of the celestial city swing open, and he catches fair visions of his future home.

Oh, holy blessed Sabbath, may thy peace and blessing forever fall upon the tired, toiling world!—Mrs. M. A. Holt.

Praying for More Faith.

I hear men praying everywhere for more faith, but when I listen to them carefully and get at the real heart of their prayers, very often it is not more faith at all that they are wanting, but a change from faith to sight. "What shall I do with this sorrow that God has sent me?" "Take it up and bear it, and get a strength and blessing out of it." "Ah, if I only knew what blessing there was in it, if I saw how it would help me, then I could bear it like a psalm!" "What shall I do with this hard, hateful duty which Christ has laid right in my way?" "Do it, and grow by doing it." "Ah, yes; if I could only see that it would make me grow." In both these cases do you not see that what you are begging for is not more faith, although you think it is, but sight. You went to see for yourself the blessing in the sorrow, the strength in the hard and hateful task. Faith says not, "I see that it is good for me, and so God must have sent it;" but, "God sent it, and so it must be good for me." Faith walking in the dark with God only prays him to clasp its hand more closely, does not even ask him for the lifting of the darkness, so that the man may find the way himself. Mary is all faith when she says, "Do what he tells you, and all must come right simply because he is he." Blessed the heart that has learned such a faith, and can stand among men in all their doubts and darknesses, and just point to Jesus Christ, and say: "Do his will, and everything must come right with you. I do not know how, but I know him. God forbid that I should try to feed you, but I can put your hand in his hand, and bid you go where he shall carry you?"—Phillips Brooks.

The Cross Mother.

At no time in her busy days is an intelligent mother so apt to fold her arms and close the eyes of maternal justice as when she is cross—simply and undoubtedly cross. This crossness is chiefly caused by fatigue, weariness of body and mind, and sometimes of soul. With tired nerves and weary body, she can not endure the common demands made upon her, and ill-temper follows. She sows bitter feelings, and repels loving attentions, with her irritable, hasty words. Broadly speaking, no mother has any right to get so tired. She can not afford it. It takes too much out of her life, and too much out of her children's lives. Such a condition can more frequently be prevented than is generally believed.

The careless or shallow woman says: "I was overworked; it made me cross," and she considers that the sufficient reason and excuse for any amount of similar indulgence. The religious or sympathetic woman worries over it, prays over it, sheds bitter tears, and then the trouble repeats itself. The remedy lies close at hand. Let the mother find out what makes her cross, and then let her avoid the cause. If social pleasures weary her, let them be decidedly lessened; much cooking, or too many household cares, lessen them. If economical efforts cause the severe strain, stop economizing at such a cost. That is the worst of wastes. Let the first economy be of that precious commodity, a mother's strength.—Christian at Work.

Ministerial Specialists.

After referring to the fact that one physician confines himself to diseases of the brain, another to diseases of the eye and ear, and another to diseases of the throat and lungs, and that in the various professions there are specialists, and properly so, the Congregationalist has this to say: "But the minister can not afford to be a specialist. The gospel of Christ is his seamless robe. To separate it into parts is to destroy it. The minister may give special attention to oratory, to exposition, to teaching, to church organization or to pastoral work. He may become honorably known as peculiarly proficient in one of these directions and increase his influence thereby. But he can not with honor to himself proclaim less than the whole gospel of Christ, nor aim at less than the renovation of society through the transformation of its members into the likeness of Christ." These words should be pondered by all ministers: "The minister who makes himself a specialist as a temperance reformer, or an anti-Romanist, or a champion of the laboring classes, or a crusader against tobacco, or a defender of the Sabbath, practically ceases to be a minister of the gospel of Christ. He may be all these, and so subordinate to them to his message, which proclaims the redemption of men and of society through Christ, as not to narrow his calling. He can not be any one of these exclusively and remain in truth a Christian minister."

For Father and Mother.

Do not—mother, at your housework; father, in your study—do not be always "too busy." The little heart wants an outlet, the upraised rosebud wants a kiss, the little hearts have something to tell you, a little grief to bring, a small joy, a game of play expected now and then. Ah, beware! These requirements will slacken and will cease, if it be too often, "Now run away, dear, father is busy." "Don't be troublesome, dear; mother must do her work."

Of course, there must be checks sometimes; of course, over-indulgence is worst unkindness. But be not, as a rule, repellant, unsympathetic; they will go elsewhere, after a while, with their little confidences, their little wants, their little losses, their little griefs and joys, their little winning ways, with the refreshment of their pure, delightful being. Perhaps you will be sorry then—then, when the mischief is done—sorry when the new toy is no longer, as a matter of course, brought first to "father" to see; when the toddling feet seek elsewhere than to "mother" for drying o tears, when the patter of the unsteady feet always passes your door. Ah, you will be sorry then that you were so foolish, sorry that you scared the birds away.—The Quiver.

Bengel's Prayer.

It was in his old study chair that the pious Bengel, one of the post Reformation church fathers, was one night sitting absorbed in the study of God's Word till past the midnight hour. Some friends, entirely unbeknown to him, were watching, for they had said, "Now we shall hear Bengel pray," so gifted was he in prayer that they had coveted to hear him at his private devotions. At length, when nature was entirely wearied with his long-continued study, he was seen to clasp his hands over the open Bible, while he raised his face devoutly to heaven, and exclaimed aloud: "Lord Jesus! thou knowest that we are on the same old terms!" And immediately he threw himself upon his couch to sleep. That was all of Bengel's prayer his friends heard that night.—D. P. Putman, in The Evangelist.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

OFF FOR SLUMBERLAND.

Purple wavos of evening play
Upon the western shores of day,
While babies sail, so safe and free,
Over the mystic Slumber Sea.

Their little boats are cradles light;
The sails are curtains pure and white;
The rudders are sweet lullabies;
The anchors, soft and sleepy sighs.

They're outward-bound for Slumberland.
Where shining dreams lie on the sand,
Like whisp'ring shells that murmur low
The pretty fancies babies know.

And there, among the dream shells bright,
The little ones will play all night,
Until the sleep tide turns—then
They'll all come sailing home again!

To Japan.

THE TRAIN AT WINNIPEG.

I know that you are anxious to be in Japan. So I pass without proper mention the great grain elevators of Minneapolis, The Falls of St. Anthony, beautiful Lake Minnetonka, the whole State of North Dakota, and ask you to consider yourself at Winnipeg, getting on the waiting Canadian Pacific train for the final ride of 1,482 miles to Vancouver—the first thousand to be through plain, the last half-thousand amid the rock-ribbed mountains. A glance or two shows that the old fort of the Hudson Bay Company has been turned into a handsome city built of brick and stone. It is cold; and people, mainly of English descent, are hurrying hither and thither in muffs, and shawls, and overcoats. There boards the train a crowd of ladies and gentlemen bound for a Sunday-school Convention, to open at Brandon, the next day; fifty-two Dakota farmers going to look at land about a thousand miles further northwest; one young Englishman who had spent two years with relatives in Dakota, and now had picked up his gun and was on his way to Singapore; and others unknown.

Already on board are people of Liverpool, New York, Montreal, Yokohama, and Shanghai; some commercial men, others professional people who had decided to spend the Summer in Japan and purchase a few curios. Yonder is a Massachusetts gentleman with his little daughter. They are going as far as Banff Hot Springs and the Glacier House, where they will spend a few days, and then return. And there is a New York merchant and his son who somewhere will get off and afterwards join a party in a Summer excursion to Alaska. Among others must not be forgotten the "globe trotter," and that car full of Chinese en route from Boston to Hong Kong—masters of their situation, too. It is not the first time some of them have returned to their native land after a lengthy stay in America. They feel independent already; and they will be at home and hilarious after they are upon the ship, where numerous others of their motley countrymen will join them.

Most notable along the vast plain were the mounted police, the Indians, the remains of the ancient buffalo sands and lakes. These have a connection, too. The mounted police are 1,000 men stationed at different points, dressed in cheap fancy uniforms, and their principal business is to look after the Indians in the northwest provinces. Indians were at nearly every station, and much of their work seems to be with the remains of the buffalo. The better horns they polish very nicely and make into beautiful hat-racks, curious chairs, and such things, to be sold to the tourists or Eastern furniture merchants. The poorer bones they collect to be sent to the factories and used in the refining of sugar. Twenty-five years ago living buffaloes were eight million; now there are not eight hundred. Railroads and civilization tell much of the tale of extermination. But as they migrated north in Summer and south in Winter, those in the rear of a great herd would push the leaders into quicksands and bogs from which there was no escape. H. G. HAWKINS.

Matsuyama, Japan, Dec. 3, 1892.

P. S.—On the morning of Nov. 30, at five, an English merchant-ship and a Japanese man-of-war collided near Matsuyama. In three minutes the man-of-war sank with seventy-four men. Sixteen were saved. This map-of-war had just been completed in France, and was being brought home. A student who went to look at the merchantship said to me: "But the English did not care. They laughed and sang." H.

The Thimble.

Did you ever take the trouble to look up the history of the curious little bell-shaped indented piece of metal you wear on your finger when sewing, and which you are contented to call your "thimble?" It is a Dutch invention, and was taken to England in 1695 by one John Lofting. Its name was derived from the words thumb and bell, being for a long time worn on that member, and called the thumbel; only within the last 150 years has the word "evoluted" into thimble. All records say that the thimble was first worn on the thumb, but we can scarcely conceive how it would be of much use there. Formerly it was made of brass and iron only, but of late years steel, silver, gold, horn, ivory, celluloid, and even pearl and glass have been used in its manufacture. A thimble owned by the Queen Consort of Siam is shaped like a lotus, of solid gold, thickly studded with diamonds, which are so arranged as to form the lady's name and the date of her birth and marriage. Queen Victoria has a very valuable gold and diamond-set thimble, upon which are engraved many historical scenes from English history.—Christian at Work.

Church Moorings.

An old sea captain was riding in the cars, and a young man sat down by his side. He said:

"Young man, where are you going?"

"I am going to Philadelphia to live."

"Have you letters of introduction?"

"Yes," said the young man, and he pulled some of them out.

"Well," said the old sea captain, "have you a church certificate?"

"O, yes," replied the young man; "I did not suppose you desired to look at that."

"Yes," said the old sea captain; "I want to see that. As soon as you reach Philadelphia present that to some church. I am an old sailor, and I have been up and down in the world; and it is my rule, as soon as I get into port, to fasten my ship fore and aft to the wharf, although it may cost a little wharfage, rather than have my ship out in the stream, floating hither and thither with the tide."—Epworth Herald.

SCIENTIFIC.

The Great "Cold Wave" as an Object-Lesson in the Study of the Seasons.

The gigantic air-wave of high barometer which suddenly formed on Wednesday in the far Northwest and has since overspread most of America is a valuable striking object lesson for the study of the atmospheric currents controlling the seasons.

In the crest of the big wave the barometer rapidly rose to a maximum of 31.10 inches—a height rarely recorded on this continent—while the temperature fell to 36 degrees below zero. A fit analogue for such a surging and vast addition to the mass of air ordinarily overlying the continent may be found if we suppose the sudden formation of a water-wave three hundred feet high over the whole Atlantic area between the New England coasts and the Banks of Newfoundland. The pressure in the crest of this air-wave Wednesday night was sixty-two pounds per square foot over and above the average.

Whence so extensive an aerial wave can come is still very much of a mystery among physicists. The old idea that the towering anti-cyclone is an emanation from the polar regions is untenable. Within and around the Arctic Circle the atmosphere is too scanty, as shown by its low mean pressures, to furnish materials for building up a high air-wave. The Arctic area is one of comparative calms, with no atmospheric force at all adequate to the task of transporting such immense masses of air many hundreds of miles and piling them up on our Northwestern plateaus. Moreover, the sun, the prime motor of the atmosphere, is now at his furthest possible remove from that benighted area, and hence utterly powerless to start or stir the sluggish air from its icy bed. We must, therefore, look for the origin of our enormous "cold waves," not in the far North, but in that portion of the globe where the solar rays are most potent and most effective in mobilizing the atmospheric masses.

Seeking for an explanation of such phenomena we turn, therefore, to the Southern Hemisphere, where the sun is now in full sway. As the atmosphere in that hemisphere is expanded during the austral Summer, it must, of course, be forced northward across the equator in large volumes, and as upper currents, ultimately descending upon our northern continents. Prof. Hann, of Vienna, ascribes our cold anti cyclones to the congestion of the high anti-trade currents moving northeastward from the tropics, which, owing to the contraction of the zones in high latitudes, are partially arrested and forced to return southward in the lower layers of the atmosphere. Doubtless both of these systems of high currents conspire in the genesis of the extensive cold waves." The brief observations of Mr. Edward Whymper on the summits of the equatorial Andes afford some striking indications that, as the seasons revolve, there is periodically an extensive interchange of air going on between the Northern and Southern Hemispheres.

It is highly interesting, therefore, to ascertain the probable effect of an increase of solar activity, during a sun-spot maximum, upon the temperature and pressure extremes. The Herald pointed out last week some reasons for attributing the great "heat wave" of last Summer to an exceptionally large radiation of solar heat. Paradoxical as it may be, the intense cold with which the year 1892 is closing is an additional reason for concluding that the sun is now unusually hot. For it is clear that the greater the amount of solar heat now poured into the Southern Hemisphere the larger and heavier will be the masses of air driven out of that hemisphere and transported northward into our half of the globe to form the gigantic "cold wave" which has just descended upon America. It seems to be well nigh capable of absolute demonstration, as we have before shown, that if violent solar paroxysms mean an unusually hot sun, then years of increasing solar disturbance, as 1892 is, and 1893 presumably will be, should bring us unusually warm Summers and Autumns, followed by unusually cold Winters and Springs. The present indications, therefore, are that the coming Winter will be more severe than the average.

The solution of the great problem of forecasting the seasons is clearly wrapped up in the final determination of the sun's temperature variations during his regular periods of calm and commotion. Astronomers should, therefore, bestir themselves to settle this question, upon which hinges so much that effects the material welfare of all classes.—New York Herald.

The Parthenon.

The Parthenon was one of the most famous buildings in ancient Athens, and its ruins remain the noblest monument of the grand civilization of that city. It was built under the direction of Phidias, one of the greatest sculptors of history. It was made of marble, and stood on a base approached by three steps, the structure being 101½ feet wide by 228 feet long. It was built in the Doric style, with eight columns at each end and fifteen on each side. The temple standing upon the base of the structure was divided into two unequal portions, one being the apartment of the statue of Athens, the goddess of the city, and the other being used as the city treasury. Within the temple of the goddess there were ten columns on each side and three at the west end, forming three sides of a quadrangle, and before them an architrave supporting an upper range of columns which seem to have been the gallery of the temple. At one end of this room was a beautiful polished stone pavement on which the statue of the goddess was placed. Besides the internal decorations of this great building, its outside was ornamented with three columns of sculpture. First, statues resting upon a deep cornice; second, a number of carved groups in relief, ninety-two in all, representing the characters of mythology; third, a frieze around the broad border of the wall, consisting of a procession of figures in relief. All these classes of sculpture were executed in the highest style of the art, and were standing in nearly perfect condition as late as the seventeenth century, when they were visited by architects of England and of France, and a number of drawings were made of them. At this time the Turks held possession of Athens and used the Parthenon for various purposes. Among other things they kept a large quantity of powder stored there. In 1687 the explosion of this powder magazine wrecked the whole interior of the temple. Some years afterward, in the attempt to have a number of the statues removed, they were broken and the appearance of the building was otherwise injured. In the early part of the present century, Lord Elgin removed a large number of the remaining sculptures of the Parthenon and took them to the British Museum, where they are now regarded as the most beautiful treasures of that great collection. In spite of the present ruined condition of the Parthenon, it is yet visited, and the traces of its beauty enthusiastically studied by architects.—Inter-Ocean

SINGLETARY.—Little LULIE just eleven years two months and two days old, departed this life Oct. 29, 1892. She died of typhoid fever at her home, Steen's Creek, Miss.

Lulie was a sweet-spirited child, and by her sweet disposition and winning ways made friends of all who knew her. She was seldom absent from Sunday-school—always bright, modest and pleasant. Oh! how we miss her; but she has gone to rest. God is gathering up his jewels. Yes, another lamb has been gathered into the fold of the Great Shephord, who has her sheltered from the storms of life.

Another home has been made desolate and lonely, for truly little Lulie was the joy and sunshine of that home. She was the favorite among the children, and the idol of a father's heart. Her life was short, but long enough for God's purpose, for "he doeth all things well." His ways are past finding out, but a trusting faith bids us see a Father's hand in afflictions.

Then, dear parents and children, cast all your load of grief on him who says: "My Grace shall be sufficient for thee," and he will sanctify to you your deepest distress. Just think, you are the parents of a child in glory. How comforting! Your child is not lost, only gone before you to the loving Savior. Every little life plucked from earth is transplanted to burst into eternal bloom in the bright fields of Paradise. God knows best. He takes our heart-treasures to add them as links to the golden chain that draws us homeward.

Lulie leaves a twin sister and three others who were baptized by the writer at the same time. May God save all the children; and to Sadie I say, You shall see your twin sister again!

J. F. ROBINSON.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in his providence, to remove from us by death our little friend, Lulie Singletary; And, whereas, by her death our Sunday-school has lost one of its most punctual and devoted scholars; her parents an affectiona e and dutiful daughter; brothers and sisters, a loving sister; therefore be it,

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the will of God in this dispensation of providence, and while we realize that loss is her eternal gain, that we tender to bereaved parents, brothers and sisters our heartfelt sympathy in their great loss.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and spread upon the Sunday-school record.

J. A. TURNER, for Committee.

HUNTER—ROY EARNEST, youngest child of T. J. and Sue W. Hunter, was born Oct. 5, 1880; died at the home of his parents, Sardis, Miss., Sept. 19, 1892.

More than three months have passed since the death-angel crossed our threshold, and from our circle of loved ones bore our dearest treasure, our darling Roy, up to the fold of the Great Shepherd. And yet we can scarcely realize the sad fact that his dear presence will never again brighten the home, where he was so lately the light and life of loving hearts. Can it be his merry laugh is forever hushed, his bright blue eyes forever closed! He was such a noble boy, and his young life so full of promise. How hard to give him up! God only knows the desolation of that home, and especially that loving mother's heart, where her baby boy was so completely enthroned. He was an affectionate child, and unusually bright. His devotion to his mother was beautiful. He would never enter or leave the house without putting his arms about her neck, kissing her again and again. Often during the day, while at school, he would write little notes to his mama and carry them to her on his return from school at noon, or in the evening, telling her how much he loved her, and how he was thinking of her all the time. These little memontoes are dear and sacred treasures now to that sad, disconsolate mother.

Our darling was sick only a few days, nor did we realize how seriously ill he was until just the night before he died. A kind uncle and cousin were his attending physicians, and all was done that skill and loving hearts could suggest to stay the cruel hand of death, and restore our precious one, but nothing availed; and, after a long night of suffering and distress, our darling entered into rest.

As the pearly gates were opened, and our dear one passed through, the love in our hearts which had been so tenderly twined round his young life went up with him, and there it will ever remain, a holy link between our hearts and heaven.

God grant that father, mother, brother and sisters may all meet him in that bright land, where clouds nor sorrow nor partings can ever come! HIS AUNTIE.

HERBERT—Mrs. M. E. HERBERT departed this life on Dec. 8, 1892, in the seventy-first year of her age. She united with the Methodist Church when quite young, and lived a faithful Christian during the long years of her pilgrimage on earth.

For several years before her death she was confined almost entirely to her room, being seldom able to go out of it. She suffered much, but bore her pain and weakness with patience and cheerfulness, fully resigned to the will of God. She was so unselfish, always taking an interest in those around her, always welcoming her friends with a cheerful word and kindly smile. She had words of sympathy for the sorrowful, she rejoiced with the joyful. I visited her during the last years she spent upon earth, and I always found her strong in the faith, ready to go when the Master should call. Her death was one of great peace. She fell asleep like a tired child going to rest.

She was twice married. First to Mr. Myselie. By her first marriage she had three children—two sons and one daughter—who were all with her at the time of her death. Her second husband was a member of the Mississippi Conference, and one of the pioneer men of his day.

She lived in the town of Melrose, Alachua county, Fla., for the last twelve years of her life. Her children ministered to her comfort during her long years of weakness and pain, doing all for her that filial love and duty could prompt them to do. They have laid her to rest with sorrowing hearts, but with the full assurance that all is well with her, and that their loss is her gain! T. J. PHILLIPS.

Melrose, Fla.

HACKETT—FORREST EDWIN HACKETT was born July 8, 1865; died of apoplexy, Dec. 6, 1892.

The mantle of night wrapped the earth, and clouds veiled the starry blue sky, when the white-winged messenger of God came to bear away the sweet spirit of my dear brother to the Crystal City, where there is no night, and no clouds to dim the brightness of the eternal day. In the early part of the year Forrest's health failed, and he was placed under the best medical treatment for three months, after which he returned home feeling greatly benefited, and, we hoped, cured. Alas! our hopes were vain; for in less than two months he was snatched away suddenly and unexpectedly.

My dear brother became an Adventist by profession of faith, and was baptized by Rev S. A. Baker in the Advent Church, in Wilsted, Conn., early in 1891. He was earnest in his religious profession. In his letters home he frequently said, "I feel that I am a changed man. I am happy in serving God; and while engaged at watch-work I am endeavoring to do all the good I can for him."

Our affliction is great, but God knew best, and removed the jewel to a brighter realm. Home is lonely without him, his soft voice is hushed forever; but we know he is with Jesus now at rest, and with the loved ones gone before him is waiting for the sorrowing hearts left on earth. May we find consolation in the blessed Word!—"He doeth all things well." Farewell! loved brother, till we meet on the golden shore. SISTER M.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

$10,000

will be paid for a recipe enabling us to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING at such a price that the retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. At present the retail price is 20c.

This offer is open until January 1st., 1893. For particulars address the undersigned.

ACME BLACKING is made of pure alcohol, other liquid dressings are made of water. Water costs nothing. Alcohol is dear. Who can show us how to make it without alcohol so that we can make ACME BLACKING as cheap as water dressing, or put it in fancy packages like many of the water dressings, and then charge for the outside appearance instead of charging for the contents of the bottle?

WOLFF & RANDOLPH, Philadelphia.

PIK-RON

is the name of a paint of which a 25c. bottle is enough to make six scratched and dulled cherry chairs look like newly finished mahoganies. It will do many other remarkable things which no other paint can do.

R. S. WOODWARD, P. E.

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing it for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results to make it a proprietary medicine. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Hafflefinger, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was in the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and to-day he is well. I know it saved his life." Try it.

Organize every Sunday-school into a missionary society; hold a meeting every month; distribute missionary literature; have stated lectures and addresses; educate and train the children to an intelligent interest in the greatest of all causes. The preacher or Sunday-school worker who does this is sowing seed for glorious harvests in the future; he is laying foundation-stones upon which the church of the next generation will be built. But not only so, he is setting in operation one of the most efficient agencies for raising money for missions now that he can devise. These Sunday-school missionary societies, the Discipline directs, are to be auxiliary to the Board of Missions. All amounts raised by their agency go to the payment of the regular assessment on the charge for the cause of missions. —Southern Christian Advocate.

The application of the factory laws of France reducing the hours of labor in factories, mines, etc., has caused a reduction of wages throughout France. Many strikes have resulted, notably in the Department of the Nord.

A Cold Leads

ITS VICTIM DIRECT TO CONSUMPTION.

There are three roads which lead from health to consumption. Over one of these roads pass all of that great multitude of people who die every year of consumption. Each route begins with health and happiness and ends with disease and death. They are described as follows: 1st road, a slight cold—neglected—settles in the head or throat—chronic catarrh—extends to the lungs—consumption—death. 2d road, a slight cold—neglected—cough—settles on the lungs—cough gradually growing worse—consumption—death. 3d road, a cold—neglected—settles in the throat—hoarseness—short breath—consumption—death.

Thousands have just started on one of these roads, all of whom could be easily cured by Pe-ru-na—thousands more are half way to the fatal end of one of these roads who are still curable by a course of treatment with Pe-ru-na; and yet other thousands are near the end whose last days would be made more bearable and hope of recovery more probable by commencing Pe-ru-na without delay.

Send to The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, O., for a free copy of their latest publication, the Illustrated Ills of Life, a complete treatise on catarrh and all chronic diseases of the lungs.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Sugar Bounty Division sent out, on Jan. 6, $125,000 to sugar prodnoers, over $100,000 going to Louisiana.

An explosion of gas in Pittsburg, Pa., on Jan. 7, wrecked a residence, killing three persons and injuring several others.

The ice gorge moving down the Ohio river has destroyed many coal fleets in its way. The loss up to Jan. 8 aggregated $300,000 in coal and barges.

A bill to provide a temporary government for Alaska was introduced in the Senate on Jan. 7. It provides that the seat of government shall be at Sitka, and that the executive power of the territory shall be vested in a governor and a secretary.

Mr. Watson, Populist, of Georgia, introduced into the House, on Jan. 9, a bill to create the office of national inspector of cotton and grain, to provide for the issuance of certificates of deposit and for the issuance of post-office money orders thereon, and to provide for the payment of such records.

A bill for the establishment of a national quarantine has been reported to the National House of Representatives from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The measure is designed to protect the country from a threatened visitation of epidemic diseases during the coming Summer.

Secretary of State Foster has received a letter from Francis McNutt, charge d'affaires at Madrid, giving the particulars of the trip of the Duke of Veragua to the United States as the guest of this government. The duke is the direct descendant of Christopher Columbus, and as such was invited to attend the World's Fair at Chicago by act of Congress.

Mayor Stewart, of Philadelphia, has vetoed the ordinance passed by the City Council appropriating $1,200,000 to the public building commission for the completion of the City Hall. The structure has already cost the city $16,000,000, and is still unfinished, though it was begun twenty years ago. A bill has been introduced in the Legislature for the abolishment of the extravagant building commission.

According to the report made last week by the Clearing House in this city, the banks now hold $5,361,000 more in deposits than was held at the same time in 1892, and $1,832,000 more legal tenders are held than a year ago. In spite of this large excess in the volume of available money possessed by the banks, the statement also shows that $3,462,000 more in loans is outstanding than was the case last year.

Among the bills now before Congress in which this city is interested is that providing an appropriation for the construction of a dry dock at Algiers. This bill passed the Senate last session through the persistent efforts of the late Senator Gibson, and has already been favorably reported on by the House Committee on Naval Affairs. The bill may, therefore, be considered to occupy a favorable position, and would undoubtedly pass should it come up for consideration.

Heavy timber depredations on United States and other lands are reported along Pearl river, which flows into the Gulf of Mexico, and its tributaries. Log men, it is said, have cut immense quantities of timber and are ready to drift it as soon as the stream rises. The depredations are located in Smith, Jasper, Clarke, Wayne, Jones, Covington, Marion, Perry, Green, Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Simpson, Lawrence, Pike and Amite counties, heavily timbered with yellow pine and other hard woods.

The grain blockade in St. Louis has attained formidable dimensions. For a long time the elevators have been crowded to their utmost capacity and have not been able to handle the receipts. This has led to a freight car famine, as the cars are kept on the tracks for long periods of time, owing to the impossibility of loading them. The cause of the glut of grain is due to the condition of the river for a number of weeks, the stage of water being about the lowest on record and navigation being practically suspended early in December.

FOREIGN.

The strike among the coal miners in Germany is becoming general, and acts of violence are being attempted.

The Pope has declined to receive Senor Valeria, the Spanish envoy recently appointed, on the ground that he has written immoral novels.

John Ruskin, the celebrated writer on art, will never do any more work. The disease of the brain which has for some time affected him is increasing.

Three warehouses containing cotton were burned in Liverpool on Jan. 5. Twenty thousand bales of cotton were destroyed. Three firemen were killed by falling walls, and a number were seriously wounded.

The cold wave in Paris continues unabated. Two persons have been frozen to death at Toulouse and one at Bordeaux. The river Rhone is frozen over at Tarascon, the Garonne at Toulouse, and the canal at Marseilles.

A day has been fixed for the hearing before the privy council of the petitions from Roman Catholics of Manitoba, asking for the interference of the federal executive in the matter of the abolition of the Catholic school system by provincial legislation. It is understood that the Manitoba government will ignore the approaching hearing.

It is said that Charles De Lesseps, the son of the projector of the Panama Canal, has made an unreserved statement of the illegal transactions of the company, and in return is to be treated with great lenience by his connection with the scandal. It is said that the acknowledgements made are of the most startling character, and will create a sensation in America as well as in France.

A Great Revival at Oxford.

A revival of religion has been greatly needed at Oxford, Miss., for many long years. Perhaps not more needed there than at many other places, and yet as much needed there as at any other place in the State. A high standard of religion and of good morals at Oxford means a high standard of religion and of morals in nearly every good neighborhood in the State. For ten months in the year there are boys and young men from every part of Mississipoi in attendance at the university there. The religious and moral status prevailing at Oxford will largely determine the religious and moral characters of the young men educated at the university.

For some years it has been generally known and understood that some forms of evil were fashionable and very strongly entrenched in Oxford. Card-playing—especially the more fashionable form of it known as "progressive euchre"—had come to be the order of the day, and that, too, in many professedly Christian homes. This is true of nearly all our cities, towns and villages, and in many country neighborhoods. Dancing, too, had come to be the rage—the toney thing to do. The tendency in dancing is ever toward the more licentious forms of it. It is in the very nature of this amusement, or of those who engage in it, to go in this direction. The cream of the fun is found in the contact of the sexes. The citizens of Oxford, generally, and some of the members of some of the churches, specially, have been graciously disposed toward the students of the university, and so they winked at, or permitted, or approved the license claimed by the young people. Thus the evil grew. Dancing was dignified—by some deified—and made honorable by the annual commencement ball, paid for in whole or in part out of the funds furnished by the State for educational purposes. I may have been very unfortunate in my points of observation, but I have never yet known a dancing and card-playing individual or community to be very religious. Religion is always at a low ebb in persons and in communities wholly, or even generally, given over to these follies. The love of these things and the love of God are never found in the same heart at the same time. Many persons and many communities are religiously dead or dying from the excessive love of these two worldly pleasures.

Another and worse form of evil at Oxford, as in hundreds of other places, was the "blind tiger" business. Here—more, perhaps, than elsewhere—it had the support and was conducted by men who stood high in public esteem and high in some of the churches of the town. In one way or another these men escaped the clutches of the law. The devil is wonderfully artful in getting his agents and emissaries out of the hands of justice in this world. They will get a full benefit in the world to come. There will be no subborned or perjured witnesses, and no packed juries at the last trial. Justice will be administered then. A few of the citizens of Oxford were willing to ruin and damn the flower of our young men for the paltry sum that could be made out of them while they were at school.

This is as true of other towns in Mississippi as it is of Oxford. The devil knows exactly when, where and how to spread his net to catch unwary souls. There are plenty of men ready to tend the devil's traps for the pay there is in it. There has been a lack of religious tone and of moral backbone in Oxford, as elsewhere, or these whisky-selling men would have been turned out of the church in a jiffy. Such men ought to serve the devil outside of the church, and not inside of it. Perhaps it suits Satan best to have them in the church. A church with members of this kind in it, and honored by it, is a moral pestilence in any community. If the pastor of a church of this kind wants to "cry aloud and spare not," the officers command him to hush, and if he doesn't do it, they cut off his pay, or send the preacher away. They want him to lie low while they pile up their ungodly gains.

Our pastor at Oxford, Rev. John E. Thomas, is gifted in both grace and grit. He also has plenty of "gumption"—a great gift. He sent for the evangelist, Rev. George S. Inge. Inge is fiery, furious, and perfectly terrific on the sins so common at Oxford. He has been there—at Oxford and in these sins—and he knows how it is. He is good at casting out devils of this kind. He took the lay of the land, threw up a redoubt, planted his battery, and opened fire at short range. He took off the hair and hide, and put on the pepper and salt of God's Word, until the sinners were hot all over. He poured on oil, bound up the wounds, and administered the balm of Gilead to restore the health of the daughter of God's people—especially the elect. Thomas and his co-laborers in the other churches will carry on the work.

There has been a great revival of religion in Oxford—a general toning up, a strengthening of back-bones, an increase of moral courage, and a desire and a strong determination to put away these evils and others not named here. The lines were clearly drawn, and the Lord's people and the friends of law and order were mustered on one side, and the agents, friends and emissaries of the devil, in the church and out of it, were left on the other side. May they stay apart—each on his own side of the line.

Dancing, card-playing and whisky-selling members of the church in Oxford are now on the back seats—in fact, if not in form. So they ought to be all over our wide land. Such members hurt the cause of Christ worse than any form of infidelity abroad in the land.

GILDEROY.

The "Whack" on Centenary's Head.

MR. EDITOR: May it not be possible that your devotion to your alma mater has had the effect of producing a sort of color blindness by which the little flag raised at the late session of the Louisiana Conference seemed black instead of the pure white emblem of righteousness?

In a note (NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Jan. 5, 1893) you use this language:

Poor old Centenary! The Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences gave it a simultaneous whack over the head during their late sessions. With neither Conference to act the parents' part, the old college seems to be turned out to orphanage.

As I was an advocate of the action of the Louisiana Conference by which the educational fund of the Conference was ordered to be divided equally between Centenary College and Mansfield Female College, I suppose you may justly reckon me among the whackers.

I can not regard the action of the Conference as a "whack on the head" of Centenary College. The only thing done, which can possibly be so construed, was the division of an annuity of about $500. This division was prompted by the spirit of fairness. Ever since this collection was ordered by our Conference, the entire amount has been given to Centenary College, and that, too, with the knowledge of the fact that Mansfield College offers the same terms to our daughters that Centenary College offers to our sons. This has been allowed because, until recently, Centenary had no material support outside its tuition. This condition is now changed. At our late session the authorities of Centenary reported an endowment fund of "about $90,000." This affords Centenary more than $5,000 to complement tuition fees. At eight per cent. per annum, Centenary receives from this endowment $5 400. Add one-half of the annual collection of $500, and Centenary receives an annuity of $5,650 from the public, and most of it from the Louisiana Conference, as against $250 per annum for Mansfield Female College.

I submit that if this be a "whack" on the head of "poor old Centenary," it is a very light whack, and will certainly not the least hit derange her cranial equanimity. I do not write to defend the Louisiana Conference. It needs no defense, but Centenary College does. It is not so near dead as to be put in extreme feebleness for want of $250 per annum. Centenary is in no such immediate danger of death as some might suppose from the solicitude of its friends.

When the Mississippi Conferences first began the agitation of the college question, I conceived an idea for the protection of Centenary, which I laid before Dr. C. G. Andrews and others, looking to the concentration of the three Conferences on Centenary College. I secured an agreement from the chairmen of the three Conference Boards of Education to meet in Vicksburg. This meeting was objected to, and practically broken up by one of the strongest friends of Centenary College. Now, if we are not allowed to work for Centenary, are we to be barred from working for Mansfield?

Centenary College has not the united sympathy of the Louisiana Conference, and will not have while it remains in the territory of another Conference. This it will not long do, and when, in 1894, the General Conference cedes to the Louisiana Conference the Florida parishes—in which Centenary is located—the Louisiana Conference is going to rally to Centenary College. Meantime it can, and will live, and go on with its good work.

This is the first time I ever knew a parent accused of abandoning a son to orphanage because he gave a small gift to his daughter. Mississippi turned Centenary loose, but Louisiana did not, and can not. This is our only school for the education of our sons, as Mansfield is our only school for the education of our daughters.

No, no. We did not whack Centenary College on the head. She is in our heads and in our hearts to care for her welfare. Let her agent, Bro. Harry, go among the people. Let him increase the endowment—it should be $200,000!—and the Louisiana Conference can and will sustain it. It has an alumni adequate to the task of keeping it alive, and the thousands of friends who have never seen its massive walls, nor its classic halls, are praying and paying for its success.

I do believe, Mr. Editor, if the friends of Centenary College will let it live a few more years, its "enemies" will bear it up to a vigorous success.

As ever, etc., J. A. PARKER.

Onward!

To the Presiding Elders, Preachers and District Solicitors of the Mississippi Annual Conference—

Dear Brethren: It is hardly necessary to remind you of the resolution so cordially adopted at our recent session, approving the plan for paying off the missionary debt, and pledging ourselves to co operate with the solicitors in their efforts to raise the amount apportioned to us; but I do so in order to have a text or a proper starting-point for this personal appeal to each one of you.

1. To the district solicitors I would say: Do not waste postage stamps and trust to letter-writing. Your work is to be accomplished by face to-face interviews and heart-to-heart talks with the brethren blessed of God with ample means, but who have not been responding to the calls of the Spirit and of the church as they ought to have done. Not by public collections, but by private personal appeals; by prayer to God and earnest effort on your part. Where a man is able to pay $10 000 (and there are several in our Conference bounds who are able), do not ask them for $10 or $100, but for the full amount of their ability to pay. When one is able to pay $1 000, do not ask for $50, but according as the Lord hath prospered him, so expect and ask him to contribute. Do not degrade the cause by begging for it, nor help men to compromise with their consciences by asking or accepting trifles from them. If any of you are not informed concerning the needs of the Board of Missions, and the needs of the mission fields, read up and fill yourselves full with information to be imparted to the brethren; and if any of you have any doubts about the propriety of foreign mission work, or of the duty of the church and of yourselves in the premises, then read your Bibles more carefully and pray to God more earnestly. A man can not be a Christian and be opposed to the foreign mission work, and a preacher can not render acceptable work unto God whose heart is not in the work, and who does not realize that "the field is the world," and to "every creature" the gospel must be sent or carried.

2. To the ministry I would say: Prepare new sermons on this great question; saturate yourselves with the theme. Seek a new baptism of fire and of the Holy Spirit, and inform and arouse the people of your charge as never before. Circulate tracts. Talk about and pray for the missionary cause during your pastoral visits. Seek by the help of the Holy Spirit to lay the burden of souls on every heart in your charge. When the solicitor comes, not only bid him God-speed, but go with him from house to house, and from office to office. Don't be afraid of lessening your Conference collections. Not a pastoral charge is assessed beyond the strength of the people, and not a rich church member in our connection is measuring up to the Bible standard of duty. Encourage your people to enjoy the privilege of contributing.

3. To our church members in all the districts I would say: Give heed to your faithful pastors. Be faithful to your church vows and to your God. Respond liberally to the call of the church, and do not imagine that your contributions to missions go to feed or to clothe the heathen, for what you pay is to support the missionaries themselves—men and women who have gone out from our midst, and oftentimes from our sympathies and our prayers. We forget them as we forget their labors and their tears. It matters not whether you and I believe in missions or not; nor yet whether we believe in the Bible itself or not; but the only question for you and me to answer in this matter is, Will we obey God or not obey God?

"And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." (I. John iii, 22) "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark xvi, 15) "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." (John xiv, 21.) "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love." (John xv, 10.)

It is: Go or send; do or die. Which shall it be? Yours faithfully,

T. L. MELLEN,
Miss. Conf. Solicitor.

Jan. 11, 1893.

Judge J. W. McMaster.

In the death of James W. McMaster, at Brandon, Miss., a few days ago, the community in which he long lived lost one of its most modest, upright and valuable citizens, and the church at whose altars he reverently worshiped for so many years, one of its most active, faithful and honored members. He passed away at the great age of eighty-two, mourned by old and young, revered for his many virtues and tenderly loved by a wide circle of friends.

Born in the city and county of Armough, Ireland, on March 11, 1810, he was a child of respectable and wealthy parentage. Carefully trained and well educated, he ever bore the impress of native gentility and high culture. Ambitions for a wider sphere and more inviting field, he early turned his hopes westward, and in March, 1831, crossed the Atlantic for the Province of Quebec, in Canada. He returned to his native land for a short visit in September, and sailed again for America, landing in New Orleans on Dec. 24. In the Spring of 1832 he went out from Natchez into the (then) Choctaw Purchase. Eight years were spent in Covington county, after which he removed to Smith, and remained until 1855. Since that time he has resided in the county of Rankin, and there peacefully sleeps after a long and well-spent life.

For many years he was a teacher, and under his careful instruction many young men and women were trained for the work of life. In person he was scrupulously neat; in manner, genial and affable; in spirit, cheerful and happy; in conversation, chaste and interesting—in every respect a dignified, cultured Christian gentleman. As a county judge his administration was impartial, and his decisions clear and just. His personal and official integrity commanded universal honor. Much of his modest, laborious life was spent as an accountant, in which position he was exact and painstaking. Large interests were often entrusted to his hands, and in every position he showed himself worthy of perfect confidence. He went down to the grave without a shadow on his fair name.

Judge McMaster was a man of clean lips. His thoughts were pure and his language chaste. In no presence did he ever relate incidents or use terms that would in any degree be improper in the most refined female society. As a Christian, he was catholic in spirit, gentle, forbearing, warm hearted, devout, and active in all church work.

For many years he was superintendent of the Methodist Sunday-school in Brandon, and was ever punctual to duty, and considerate of the welfare of all.

At his funeral there was a remarkable expression of the high esteem and affection in which he was held. Old friends and new, the aged and the young, united in words of reverence and praise, and all alike wept at his grave. Such a tribute to worth and virtue, though in modest station, has been rarely witnessed in any land. He leaves a devoted widow and a number of children to mourn their irreparable loss. Peace to the ashes of my old friend and neighbor! His face will fade from view, but his memory and worthy deeds will abide as a priceless heritage to his family and friends.

A Suspicious Case.

MR. EDITOR: A man, by the name of George Newton, hailing from Alameda, Cal., a so-called holiness evangelist, claiming to be a Methodist preacher, but who, until recently, was not even a member of the church, and is now only a private member, having joined the First Methodist Church in Memphis, Tenn., has been making a great deal of trouble for the church and pastors in West Tennessee and North Mississippi. If allowed to use our churches, and not have his own way, he would grow abusive, vindictive, and impudent. If not allowed to use it by the pastor, he would go in anyway, if he could get somebody to open the door for him. His wife is in Alameda, Cal., and he has not been to see her for three years. But he always has a woman, or several of them, along with him. As he was making himself such a pest, I wrote to Bishop Haygood, who made investigations, with the enclosed result. Please publish it, and put every preacher and church in the country on guard against him. He is a disturber, and this letter from H. J. McCoy, general secretary Y. M. C. A., San Francisco, which comes through Bro. H. M. DuBose and Bishop Haygood, makes it reliable.

Your brother, T. B. MALONE.

Dec. 7, 1892.

Rev. H. M. DuBose, D. D., 1170 Market St., City—

My Dear Doctor: Yours, of Dec. 3, came duly to hand, and should have had an earlier reply, only I have been so thoroughly occupied I did not reach it until this morning.

I know Newton very well. He was at one time a regular pastor in the M. E. Church of this State, but got side-tracked on the holiness question, and made himself obnoxious to everybody, as Dr. Malone seems to intimate in his communication he is doing East. He would not abide by the church government, and ignored entirely the church Discipline; so was expelled from the Methodist Church some four or five years ago, I think. Am positive, however, the charges were because he persisted in working independently, and disregarding entirely the rules and regulations of the church. He would pitch his gospel tent right under the eaves of some pastor's charge, and carry on evangelistic meetings, defying the pastors to move him, etc., until it became unbearable, and the church authorities took action in the matter. Personally, I never had any faith in the man. It is a strange providence, my dear Doctor, that calls a man to leave his wife and travel round the country with another woman, as the enclosed letter states. If this be authenticated, it should be sufficient cause for any church or community to ostracize him. Rev. Dr. Hammond, at 1037 Market street, or those associated with him, would be able, perhaps, to give you more detailed facts than this contains. It is my personal opinion, however, that he is possessed of a disturbing element which makes itself manifest wherever he goes. Yours very truly,

H. J. MCCOY.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 12, 1893.

Dear Brother: Within the hour past the inclosed has reached me. I hasten to send to you. He must be a nuisance. Yours truly,

A. G. HAYGOOD.

Rev. T. B. Malone.

FROM THE WORK.

G. M. Hull, Montrose, Miss., Jan. 9: "Our pastor, B. H. Rawls, is ill at present. He has been suffering from a severe attack of tonsorial inflammation and catarrhal fever for about eight days. I am glad to say that he is better, but he is still suffering some. The work of the Lord has begun under favorable auspices this year."

Rev. J. P. Drake, Edwards, Miss., Jan. 13: "We were very kindly received by the people of this place on Friday, Dec. 30. Sunday, though bleak, brought out good congregations. All through that week we held prayer and self-denial services. Collection amounted to $16.75 for payment of missionary debt. From Sunday evening on through this week we have been holding revival services. Bro. J. W. Beville, of Jackson, Tenn.—a good preacher and fine leader of singing—is assisting me. We have some tokens for good. Hope all friends will pray for a mighty outpouring of the Spirit."

Rev. Thos. B. White, Arcadia, La., Jan. 13: "Arrived here Saturday, Dec. 31, at night; heavy rain. Preached Sunday morning and night to large congregations. Held Week of Self-denial and Prayer; preaching every night, with collections for old missionary debt, and amount forwarded. People kind, reception cordial, stewards devise well. No parsonage; will board. Work large and inviting. Hopeful, cheerful, happy. Our presiding elder is moving out on his great rounds. The blessed Master opens up the way, and his servants sow and reap for eternity. God bless you in your arduous work. Correspondents, address me here."

Rev. C. McDonald, P. E., Forest, Miss., Jan. 12: "On the eighth and ninth instant we held the Newton and Hickory quarterly meeting at Hickory. We had a very encouraging beginning for the new year. I suppose this is one of the most pleasant charges in the Conference. The Board of Stewards made the assessment for the pastor in charge one hundred dollars more than last year, and also instructed their district stewards to make an advance in the presiding elder's salary. On the tenth we held the Rose Hill Quarterly Conference at Rose Hill. The attendance at preaching and in Conference was good. We were rejoiced to have Rev. J. T. Nicholson with us, and have him take part in the religious services. He is improving rapidly, and we hope for him a complete restoration to health. We visited Bro. T. Y. Armstrong at his home. He is now so feeble as to be unable to walk without assistance. He is ready, when the summons comes, to go up to his reward. I suppose every pastor in charge in the district was at his post of duty the first Sabbath in January. Some of them moved during the extremely cold weather."

Rev. P. H. Howse, P. C., Meadville, Miss., Jan. 11: "We reached Meadville, Friday, Jan. 6, and spent the night with Bro. T. W. Sullivan. The next day, about noontide, we went over to the parsonage, and found a good, comfortable fire burning in the fireplace, which we enjoyed for a short time, for this luxury was soon interrupted by something better. Dinner was announced, and, in company with one of our faithful stewards and some of our good and thoughtful women—for I believe that Meadville is blessed with good women—went into the dining-room and found the table covered with refreshments of various kinds. And you can imagine how a preacher ate after traveling 165 miles by private conveyance. There has not been a storm at the parsonage since we came here, but a continuous breeze has been blowing toward the parsonage, and in it comes hams, eggs, flour, sugar, coffee, potatoes, vegetables, kind words and friendship. If this breeze continues, the preacher and his family are going to get fat on Meadville circuit. So much for that. I have been talking of a new parsonage to our people, and I feel quite sure that we will either build on the old site, or sell and buy an improved place, which, I think, is better suited for a parsonage. Our aid societies will organize now at once, and render all the assistance possible in the accomplishment of the parsonage project. A word is due my steward of Oak Grove. He visited my crib with fourteen barrels of choice corn, and two bushels of sweet potatoes early Monday morning, and one of our Meadville stewards with two loads of wood. May the Lord bless his Zion this year, and may the ministry be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire! Pray for me, my brethren, in my new field of labors."

The pious man and the atheist always talk of religion: the one speaks of what he loves, and the other of what he fears.—Montesquieu.

WORKING AND PRAYING.

"Faith without works is dead."—Bible.

Said Farmer Jones, in a whining tone,
To his good old neighbor Gray:
"I've worn my knees through to the bone,
But it ain't no use to pray.

"Your corn looks twice as good as mine,
Though you don't pretend to be
A shinin' light in the church to shine,
An' tell salvation's free.

"I've prayed the Lord a thousand times
For to make that 'ere corn grow,
And why your'n beats it so, and climbs,
I'd give a deal to know."

Said Farmer Gray to his neighbor Jones,
In his easy quiet way:
"When prayers get mixed with lazy bones
They don't make farmin' pay.

"Your weeds, I notice, are good and tall,
In spite of all your prayers.
You may pray for corn till the heavens fall
If you don't dig up the tares.

"I mix my prayers with a ll the toil
Along in every row,
An' I work this mixture into the soil
Quite vig'rous with a hoe.

"An' I've discovered though still in sin,
As sure as you are born,
This kind of compost, well worked in,
Makes pretty decent corn.

"So while I'm praying I use my hoe,
An' do my level best
To keep down the weeds along each row,
An' the Lord he does the rest.

"It's well for to pray both night and morn,
As every farmer knows;
But the place to pray for thrifty corn
Is right between the rows.

"You must use your hands while praying, though,
If an answer you would get;
For prayer-worn knees and a rusty hoe
Never raised a big crop yet.

"An' so, I believe, my good old friend,
If you mean to win the day,
From plowing clean to the harvest's end
You must hoe as well as pray."

Mississippi Conference Reports.

PUBLISHING INTERESTS.

Your Committee on Publishing Interests beg leave to submit the following as their report:

We regard the publishing interest of the church as one of the most important factors in the accomplishment of its great mission in the world. The power of the press is proverbial, and the church should utilize this power for all it is worth. The pastor who industriously and judiciously scatters among his people good religious literature, is doing a work that will tell upon the future prosperity and solidity of the church.

In regard to the church paper, your committee desire to say with all possible emphasis that no well-regulated Christian family can afford to dispense with its silent influence. Coming, as it does, with news fresh from the field, with well-written articles from able pens, and with judicious selection from other journals, it spreads before us every week a "feast of fat things."

The annual report of the Publishing House has been considered, and we note with pleasure the prosperity of our connectional organ, and of the Sunday-school periodicals. We feel that the preachers would do well to endeavor to increase the circulation of the connectional organ of our church, as it supplies a need the Conference organ can not supply, in that it gives the general news of Southern Methodism, which it is not the province of the Conference organ to do.

We regret that the Quarterly Review is not yet self-sustaining. Can not we do something to assist in placing this excellent publication upon a self sustaining basis?

We note with regret some things in the annual report of the publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; yet, considering the financial pressure of the country, it is an encouraging showing. D. C. W. Carter is still at the helm, and manages his department with distinguished ability. We can but wish that he was more in touch with us, so as to be able to better represent the interests of Methodism in Mississippi in the columns of the paper. We regret the resignation of Rev. B. F. Lewis as the assistant editor.

We recommend for the Publishing Committee, Rev. W. B. Lewis, Rev. R. J. Jones, Rev. J. W. Chambers.

We offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we are pleased with the business and editorial management of our Conference organ.

Resolved That we have been more than pleased with the special edition for our Conference.

Resolved, That we will use our best endeavors to increase the circulation of our Conference organ, and to collect accounts of the same.

Respectfully submitted,

J. G. CAMMACK, Chair'n.
W. H. LEWIS, Sec.

SUNDAY SCHOOL BOARD.

We submit the following report:

In the absence of our beloved brother, Rev. J. T. Nicholson, whose affliction we greatly deplore and with whose family we deeply sympathize, Rev. J. Wilson Brown was elected chairman in his stead.

The statistics show 403 Sunday-schools within our bounds, with 2 113 officers and teachers and 16,240 scholars. This does not look well, for while there is shown an increase of 5 in the number of schools, there is a decrease in officers and teachers of ninety-nine and in scholars of 811. The statistics show a decline in this field of Christian labor. We believe this decline due to inaccuracy of the reports.

The amount in the treasury with which we began the year was $503.33, and the amount expended, according to disciplinary direction, was $502.50, leaving a balance in the treasurer's hands of eighty-three cents. The amount received during the year from Children's Day collections is $513.99, which, added to the above eighty-three cents balance, gives us $514.82 now on hand. These figures all show a decrease from the last year. The law of our church requires the observance of Children's Day, and we are sorry to report that only seventy-six ministers kept it. This indicates carelessness that is inexcusable. We trust our ministers will "not mend our laws, but keep them."

Seeing that our Sunday-schools were almost destitute of Bibles, we undertook to supply them. Our object was to have each scholar possess his own book and use it at home and in the school. We proposed to furnish them Bibles at ten cents and fifteen cents each; and if they were not able to pay this sum by paying what they could they were furnished the needed number. Those schools that could pay nothing got their Bibles on making proper application. But we have been four months distributing 113 Bibles. The enemies of Christianity are endeavoring to crush out and suppress the book, and the negligence of our ministers and Sunday-schools can furnish them valuable aid. We still adhere to our purpose, and expect great help from our brethren in putting into the hands of the children that which will abide when their sermons are forever forgotten.

The following plan for the distribution of funds for the ensuing year was adopted:

1. The chairman, secretary and treasurer of the Board are constituted an Executive Committee, to whom all applications for aid shall be made.

2 Applications shall be endorsed by preacher in charge or presiding elder.

3. Applications so endorsed shall contain satisfactory answers to questions asked on blank forms furnished by our Publishing House for this purpose.

4 Blank forms of application for aid will be furnished any who may desire them by the treasurer of our Board, W. A. Gunning, of Natchez, Miss.

Respectfully submitted,

J. WILSON BROWN, Chair'n.
H. M. ELLIS, Sec.

STATE OF THE CHURCH.

Your Committee on the State of the Church offer the following report:

We are under the necessity of being satisfied with a general view of the field in which the members of this Conference have been laboring.

From the reports presented to the Conference, and from those more especially which have appeared in our church organ, we have abundant reasons to be grateful to God for his wonderful displays of saving grace in various portions of our ecclesiastical territory. Many of the revivals have been of unusual power, and the baptism of the Holy Spirit, has, in many instances, been experienced with more than an ordinary manifestation. This has been the case more especially where both the ministry and the church have prepared themselves for his coming. We gather from the spirit of the reports of the preachers that there has been an increase of faith and consecration and spiritual power on the part of the ministers, and, consequently, advancement in the spiritual condition of the church. The number of preachers who have presented themselves for admission into the itinerant field shows that there has been a forward movement on the part of the church. There is great encouragement for more zeal and still greater consecration on the part of the preachers. The field is open before us, and we have but to push on the battle with renewed vigor.

The organization of a mission among the Choctaw Indians has been sanctioned by the great Head of the church in the conversion of some and in the calling of one of their number to preach the gospel.

We think that the preachers have been awakened to the great necessity of a more thorough consecration of themselves in the great work to which God has called them, and a better qualification acquired only through the endowment of power from on high. The great want of the Christian ministry is more spiritual power. As under-shepherds, who have the care of souls, that there may be a still greater increase in the spirituality of the church, we should foster those means which would result in the prosperity of the church by guarding the entrance into the church, by establishing class meetings, by fasting, by a stricter enforcement of discipline and by guarding against those worldly amusements which have a tendency to quench the living energy of the Christian graces. We should be careful to keep all the rules of the church ourselves, that we may the better enforce their observance by the membership.

Without disparagement of any part of the work, we commend the zeal and energy of the presiding elder and his co-laborers of the Meridian district, and rejoice in the success which has attended their labors. On the district there has been a large increase both in conversions and accessions to the church.

We offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is with profound gratitude that we render praise to God for the success which has attended our labors during the past year.

Resolved, That, being greatly encouraged by the successes of the past, and relying upon the aid of the Holy Spirit, we will with renewed zeal and consecrated energy enter upon the duties and responsibilities of another year. J. M. PUGH, Chair'n.

Woman's Missionary Society.

Dear Women of the Church: Read the last two chapters of Matthew prayerfully, and ask God, "What wilt thou have me to do?"

Missions is the telling of the old, old story over and over again. A woman first told it, and all women should keep telling it until no one can say, "Nobody has ever told it to me." I decry no good work—all are directly or indirectly for the Master—but while we are hesitating—"some of Paul and some of Apollos"—souls are dying for the Bread of Life. Who is telling the simple old story to those dying today? Who will tell it to those who will die to-morrow? Millions are passing away. Are you, as redeemed women, sending the message? "Awake, thou that sleepeth!" Read the appeal of our own missionary to the women of Louisiana, and if your hearts are not utterly hardened, respond in joyful work. Let every woman who reads feel herself appointed to organize and build up the societies. If you know not how to begin, write to me, and I will aid you to the extent of my ability. May this happy new year inspire noble resolves, which will bring glad fruition!

Mrs. T. P. Fullilove—

Esteemed Friend and Mother: I address you not only as friend, but also as mother, because mother you are in the cause of Christ, in that which is beautiful and good for mankind. I regret much that I have never had ready a letter for your annual meeting. Our State appears so little in missionary works, in comparison with the others. I know so well how you and a few more devoted, worthy women struggle to interest others and make up your assessment of assigned dues; and often I wish that I could be there to help you. I believe, Mrs. Fullilove, if you would send out women in all the towns, cities, and country churches to canvass the country in the cause of Christ, that a lively interest would spring up among the church members and the church-going populace. It was my experience before entering into this foreign work that people did not give because there lacked agents to explain fully to them the work, and they were not interested because they did not know sufficiently about the work. I think, Mrs. Fullilove, you should urge every member who is a mother of a family, and all isolated persons, as old maids, teachers, honorary members, etc., to take the Woman's Missionary Advocate and The Little Worker. People must know before they can do. I feel all that I am writing, Mrs. Fullilove, and am sad over the lack of interest in our own State. I fear that Bible reading is not properly attended to in families. Urge your auxiliaries to take a lively interest in Bible readings when they come together, and the necessity of earnest prayer in public and in the closet. All our children should grow up for Christ in the home-land. This can not be done unless the mothers seek God in earnest, agonizing prayer for their children. I believe that nothing will so spiritualize our women, our mothers and young girls at home, as the W. B. M. societies, and those of the W. C. T. U. The human heart ever needs an enthuser, and if this one be not Christ's spirit in the soul perpetually, the interest, however great it may appear, will flag sooner or later. Christian women meeting together, with no other motive but to seek to advance the cause of Christ, will, as often as these meetings occur, bring new grace, new love, new fervor to the soul. Our lives are either for him or ont of him. We can not be upon half-way ground; and our dear women at home must not be altogether occupied with domestic cares, but give that which is best, holiest and loveliest of their hearts, of their daily lives to Christ. Urge all your auxiliaries to rally and fight for Jesus. If the mothers will open their hearts, really and truly, for Jesus and his teachings, daily, their children will do so also, and "Louisiana will be for Christ." There is a great work to be done at home among our children—our own Protestant children. Why? Because parents do not bring them up in the nurture and admonition of God. Then, there are the unfortunate Creoles in the southern districts, the poor negroes in all parts, and the largely distributed Catholic element in all parts, together with hundreds of the unconverted. Everyone at home can and should do something to convert her neighbor, her kinsman, or her servant. It is time for our women to awake and realize the condition of their homes, their relations, their State and their country. I know the Woman's Missionary Societies will expand and develop our women and children at home, in that they most need, i. e., pure and undefiled religion. I pray for you all. May God give a pentecostal shower of manna, that a live, active, spiritual season will come to every Christian woman in Louisiana, so that all may be aroused to engage in earnest, active labor for him!

My life is passing away in this foreign land for others; yet I do not forget the people of my own beloved State. Here in this distant land I can look over the seas, as it were, and behold the spiritual condition of our people at home more clearly and more anxiously, perhaps, than if I were there again living among you. Sometimes my heart aches and tears flood my eyes for the youth of our own beloved Louisiana. The mothers must save our State from final degradation. The girls must be instructed to become true mothers, daughters, sisters; the boys to grow up in the Lord, avoiding immorality and drunkenness, which are the parents of all vice. Mrs. Fullilove, if children are educated from infancy to think no evil, nothing unkind, obscene, I believe they will grow up pure in God. The Beatitude, "Blessed are the pure in heart," etc., has more in it than the casual reader or thinker may find.

Well, why such a talk for you this morning, I am unable to say, save that it comes from a very sympathetic, loving interest in my native land, and the salvation of the people. The foreign influx of population does not increase spirituality, but they enter there as godless men and women, who need to be converted to the true God. If they are not, then they exert bad influences among our own. The mission and position as wife, mother, daughter and sister must be carefully looked into and studied by our women if they would fulfill that for which God has intended them. Our surrounding sister States are ahead of us; they are living and advancing. Shall Louisiana lag behind in sloth, idleness and ease? Let it not be so. Call every woman to action. The heathen nations need the gospel. We must give it to them; but our home-land needs it first, and in every obscure nook and corner. There must it be planted and continually nourished in the hearts of the people, and the people must not forget their God. I am working there, too, on the wings of prayer. May God bless all in their struggles for him!

This year I have, by his goodness, been of more use in the work out here. The labor has been heavy, steady, and sometimes trying; but in God I have always a mighty helper to conquer difficulties and self. The last, I believe, is the hardest enemy to conquer. I am happy in the work because it is God's work. Often if I considered my own inclinations, I would go home; but such thoughts I do not countenance. May God bless and keep you and yours until that perfect day!

Yours in Christian love,

SALLIE M. PHILLIPS.

Woman's Work.

Miss Sallie Smylie, Meridian, Miss., reported last month:

"Our auxiliary here held a public meeting last Sunday night. Dr. C. G. Andrews, our pastor, was made a life member of the society." (The payment of $20 constitutes a life member of the W. M. S.) "I am not doing very much on my district. Times are so hard that people do not have the money to pay dues."

She had just received a letter from Miss Bettie Hughes, who had reached China and was appointed to teach in McTyeire School, Shanghai: "Miss Haygood is not strong and well."

Being kindly invited, we had the pleasure of attending an auxiliary meeting at First Church, Jackson, Miss., last October. The president had invited Miss Kate Power, of the Clarion, who had just returned from a visit to San Francisco, Cal., to attend and give information she had obtained from personal observation, etc., of the condition of the heathen Chinese (some are Christians) of that city. Oh! that all could realize the extent of our indebtedness to our heavenly Father. Wherefore has he honored us? should evoke prayerful consideration. Oh! may "our heart burn within us" while we ponder the words of the precious Savior, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

From the Union Signal, a most valuable paper, purifying and elevating in its influence, we clip:

The London Times, of July 18, 1789, has the following paragraph: "On Friday a butcher exposed his wife for sale in Smithfield Market with a halter about her neck and a rope around her person. A drover was the purchaser for three guineas and a crown."

Visit San Francisco and see what progress we have made. God, who loves us, permits us to see the degradation of woman. Shall it be to no purpose? If Christian woman measured up to the proper standard, would there not be a general uplift? Then the sobriety of men at religious services would not be the ceaseless cry. Wholesome words of appreciation are helpful and needful, but I shudder when I so often hear the flattery bestowed upon our sex, with withering, disparaging words to the other sex, especially to boys and young men.

We trust the Holy Spirit will move the hearts of all to loving response in some way to the urgent appeals from burdened hearts who are permitted to see the needs of the hour. We sincerely hope all our young women will wisely consider Mrs. McGavock's official call for workers. Will not many avail themselves of the gracious opportunity for being prepared to go in haste to tell the glad news? We have received a pamphlet of instructions, etc., concerning the training-school which richly repays perusal. The addresses of Bishop Galloway and Miss Gibson, beside other merits, contain rich spiritual food.

MRS. E. D. JONES.

From the Other Side of the Question.

Occasionally, for the past few months, there have been published in these columns articles from "Member at Large," and others, on the subject of the itinerant system of our church, suggesting changes in that plan, which, as a means to an end, has wrought more in the last century to Christianize the world than any system in the history of the Christian Church. It is evident to any casual reader that our Brother "At Large" only looks at one side of the question. He supposes a church where he can have his way, call the preacher he wants, and keep him as long, and no longer, than in his unprejudiced (?) mind the good of the cause (member at large being the judge) demands. Our brother does not look at a church all divided about a preacher whom he has no use for, yet he has a popular following, holds on from year to year, till finally the church goes down to nothing. I clip for his benefit from the Christian Observer the following, written by a layman of the Presbyterian Church:

Our church ought to provide for a regular change of pastors. Unless a man has very superior gifts, he can not serve one church with acceptance and success for a great number of years. Since in our church there is no plan for regular changes, and since to vote against a pastor is always construed by him as an act of personal hostility, the congregations of the Presbyterian Church have adopted the plan of freezing out the pastor when they think the time has come for a change. They quit paying and quit attending church, and in due time he takes the hint and resigns. Unfortunately, however, the church is oftentimes nearly frozen to death by this procedure. This is the present plan, and every reader of these lines will recognize at once the truth of this statement.

Another evil of the life-pastorate is, that a few rich churches monopolize the talent of our strong preachers. Men like Dr. Palmer and Dr. Hoge have their light hid under a bushel. Nobody ever gets to hear them preach, and their circle of influence is localized and restricted. The eagle needs to stir up her nest. Our strong preachers ought to be pulled out of their warm places and turned loose on the church. It has pleased God to save the world by the foolishness of preaching, and no talented man should sit down in one place for a life time. We also have strong preachers wasting a life-time talking to a score or two of pupils in some theological seminary. We need these to preach.

It is useless to inveigh against "itching ears." The life-pastorate is a mere tradition of the elders; and, although our ministers cling tenaciously to the theory, they are the great sufferers by the practice which now prevails. The congregations freeze them out, and they have no place to go, because they persistently oppose any plan looking to a regular provision for their change of service. Let us have a reform along this line.

As our brother seemed to find his ideal polity in the way the Presbyterian brethren dispose of their ministers, after reading this from our Presbyterian brother, if he does not fully believe the facts stated, let him come up, and we can introduce him to nine ministers, and more churches, that have suffered at this very point. No one will object to a change, provided it works better than the present system of changing our ministers. I know a minister who enjoys the distinction of a thirty years' pastorate, and at prayer meeting five is a large congregation, and it's a high day if he has twelve at either service on Sunday. Frequently he preaches to not more than three or four, and this in a town of two or three thousand inhabitants, with not more than a dozen Roman Catholic families in the town. Now, let our "large brother" furnish a like example in a Protestant town, under the itinerant system, and I will tip my hat politely, and apologize for writing this note. Now, brother, read this, and stand by your preacher, and never let on like you didn't admire the itinerant system.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Jan. 22, 1893.

BY REV. WM. H. LAPRADE, D. D.

Joshua the High Priest.

Zechariah iii, 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"We have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God." (Heb. iv, 14.)

Let us glance first at some events, not noted in our series of lessons, but associated with the rebuilding of the temple.

Zechariah made known the vision which constitutes our lesson-text today, about B. C. 519, nearly fifteen years after the laying of the foundation of the temple. This long delay was due to various causes. The Samaritans had opposed the work, angry at not being permitted to assist. After the death of Cyrus, B. C. 529, the Persian Court took less interest in the matter, and finally, under the reign of Artaxerxes, issued a decree stopping the work. This was done at the instigation of the Samaritans. In the Autumn of B. C. 520 Haggai urged the prosecution of the work, Darius now being on the throne of Persia, following his exhortation with a prophecy of encouragement, the text of last Sunday's lesson. Under these appeals the work was again taken up.

A few months later Zechariah began his series of messages, in the nature of visions—eight in all. Our lesson to day is the fourth of the series.

No doubt, the Jews were heartily ashamed of their delay, and felt that their sinfulness of heart was the main cause of it. Sense of guilt breeds doubt, and, in the absence of assurance of God's favor, is apt to go through a period of self-accusation into hopelessness.

Let us understand that Joshua stands not for himself alone, but as the spiritual representative of the people.

Ver. 1. Satan—the Adversary. Not an imaginary being, but a real, personal Devil. Read about him in the first chapter of Job. His delight is to be the adversary of God's people. In this instance the neglect of the people furnished ground for accusation.

Ver 2. The Angel does not deny that Joshua and the people were at fault, but calls upon Jehovah to rebuke the malice of Satan. It is as though he had said: "This people is my chosen people. I have let them suffer, but now snatch them from the fire. My purpose concerning them is not yet fulfilled. They have sinned, but I am merciful."

Ver. 3. Filthy garments—a symbol of sin of frequent use in Scripture. Israel was sinful—needed cleansing as well as pardon.

Ver. 4. The end, in so far as man is concerned, of all spiritual processes, is perfect manhood. But this involves cleanness, purity. Israel was not fit for real temple-service until "cleansed from all iniquities." So Joshua, their representative, in this comforting and prophetic vision, has his filthy garments removed.

Ver. 5. Zechariah is intensely interested, and emboldened. He himself suggests the mitre, or priest's turban, as appropriate to a complete dress. The suggestion is accepted—the re-robing is completed, and, symbolically, Israel stands before God, cleansed, purified from all sin. The Angel of authority, the "Covenant Angel," personally superintends, even as to the minutest point.

Vers. 6, 7. Now the Angel of the Lord solemnly charges Joshua, and Israel through him. The charge is a repetition of the conditions of spiritual prosperity, and of favor with God, so often stated since the days of Abraham: "If thou wilt obey thou shalt be blest." And God's people shall stand with the Holy One on high, as well as secure in his favor on earth.

Ver. 8. The Branch—immediately referring to Zerubbabel, the royal representative, whom God would honor as the great civil leader in this work of re-establishing his worship; but also, and in an infinitely more important sense, Christ, the promised Messiah. In him the stock of David should find its culmination, its highest expression, its chief glory.

Ver. 9. Undoubtedly the stone is Christ, the "precious corner-stone." (Read Isaiah xxxiii, 16, in connection with Ephesians ii, 20.) The corner-stone of the temple-foundation furnishes the symbol. 'Seven eyes." Seven denotes perfection. Eyes indicate not simply watchfulness, but vitality. Christ is a living stone, as are all who are built into the temple of which he is the "Chief Corner stone."

Christ died "once for all." In one day he made atonement for the "sins of the whole world." That was the final sacrifice, and in him and his sacrificial offering the office of priest ended, he remaining "High Priest forever."

Ver. 10 This is a prophecy of peace and brotherly love, consequent upon the redeeming work of Christ.

Satan, the Adversary, is a mighty "accuser of the brethren;" and yet some people seem to think that an accusing spirit is a symptom of high spirituality.

All our hope of God's favor rest finally on his mercy.

Even after the soul has been completely cleansed its final triumph is conditional upon obedience to God.

A War Reminisoence.

Wednesday, Dec. 31, 1862, dawned inauspiciously. A fog partly hid the Federals from view on that morning, which was the most bloody day of the battle of Stone's River, Tenn., during the cruel War between the States. Wither's Division of Polk's Corps, to which the writer belonged, was in the center, and on both sides of a turnpike. We were lying in line of battle, and had been for a day and night, and a great part of the time in a steady, cold, Winter rain, and we were so chilled that our teeth chattered, so that we could scarcely speak. At broad daylight our left became engaged with the enemy, and a frightful roar of light artillery and small arms continued about two hours, and we could perceive that the enemy were giving back. About nine o'clock the command came from Gen. Bragg, and was repeated rapidly and nervously along the line as far as we could hear: "Up, men! right up!" We arose, but not very quickly, as we were much stiffened from the cold, and from lying so long in the same position. On we went, and firing soon began, as we could see the enemy like a blue streak far out across an extensive farm, which was lying out and bare. "Greek met Greek," and many soon fell to rise no more. We passed over many a mother's boy rolling in his blood, and some were sitting up, as we left them, trying to free their eyes from blood and brains flowing from their broken skulls. The battle raged the most of the day, and the next day some sharp shooting was done, each army holding its position.

In the afternoon, Jan. 1, 1863, I was taken suddenly quite sick, and was sent to the hospital in Murfreesboro. That night the Confederate Army retreated, and the next morning the town was occupied by the enemy, and I was taken a prisoner of war. After two days, the writer, with about three hundred more, set out on foot for Nashville, which was thirty miles distant. The second morning we arrived, and remained in the city until the next day at nine o'clock, for what I never knew, and were fed meantime by the noble ladies of that city of churches and schools. On leaving, a number of them stood in a cold, heating rain with their baskets of delicacies and clothing, handing them out to us until the train moved off. It was a grab game, and a few got nearly all, in spite of a faithful effort to distribute them impartially. Instead of something better, I got a plug of tobacco, and, as I had no use for that, I readily exchanged it for a fruit pie.

We went from Nashville to Bowling Green, Ky., and there took the little steamer Duke, down the Barren river to Green river, thence to the Ohio, and thence to Cairo at the mouth, and thence up the Mississippi to St. Louis. We were on this little boat eight days and nights, and never felt fire during the time, but passed the time on the lower deck in the snow, slush and mud, sitting, lying or standing, as we might prefer. Our subsistence meantime consisted of raw clear side bacon, government crackers and river water. We reached St. Louis, Jan. 13, 1863, and were confined in McDowell's Medical College on Gratiot St. The college had been converted into a prison by removing the sash and glass from the windows and substituting iron bars instead. There was one stove in each room as a heater, but, the rooms being open and a Winter wind whistling through, the heat could only be felt by those near the stove. No chairs, no benches or seats of any kind. No beds, no cots, nor anything but a freezing room and a bare floor. We were fed twice each day about half enough to satisfy our hunger. The offer of parole was made each day to all regular soldiers, and as from three to five of the Murfreesboro prisoners were carried out dead each morning, I saw it was death to remain, and accepted parole Feb. 21. A young Creole gentleman from South Louisiana and myself agreed to remain together. His family had moved to Lexington, Ky., while mine were living in the southern part of the State. Being at liberty, we walked about in the city for some time, and, as we were thinly clad and destitute and among strangers, we almost wished ourselves back in the prison again. Richly dressed ladies and gentlemen gave us suspicious glances as we tramped the streets. I had $3.25 current money, while my young friend was penniless. I thought it better to leave St. Louis, as I heard of coal mining across the river at Belleville, Ills., where we could, perhaps, get light work adapted to our feeble and half starved condition, and thus earn money enough to pay our expenses home. So we crossed over the great river, and walked out to Belleville, fourteen miles distant. Just as we reached the city suburbs we met a nice-looking gentleman who gave us an inquiring look, and asked: "Have you been in prison, boys?"

We replied in the affirmative.

He next inquired: "Have you any money?"

"Very little," we answered.

"Here," said he, "is a dollar, which will pay your way to-night at a Dutch boarding-house."

We found a house of that character pretty soon, where we supped, and, as we had a curiosity to tumble shed, we retired early. We lay on one feather bed and covered with another. This, we learned, was their usual way of lodging. My young friend was in bad humor, and very profane, as he turned under the weight, but we were soon in the land of dreams, and slept all night without waking.

Next morning was the holy Sabbath, and the weather was bright and clear, but cold. This was no day to work, nor to hunt work, and we were ill at ease. Said I to Mr. Armant:

"Suppose we go to church to-day!"

"You look like going to church with your Rebel gray suit and blue woolen shirt; now, don't you?" he answered.

"Well," I replied; "I had as well be in church, poorly dressed, as anywhere else."

"What church do you wish to attend?" he asked. Said he never had attended any except the Catholic.

As a compromise, we agreed to go wherever we heard the first bell. On leaving our boarding-house, we heard a deep-toned bell not far away, and on inquiry learned that it was a Methodist Church.

"Methodist, North!" I said. "We need not expect any sympathy from them." But we went.

We reached the church near the close of a well-attended love-feast, and the minister conducting it was an army chaplain wearing the government uniform. When all seemed to have spoken, the leader looked over the congregation, and remarked:

"If anyone else wishes to say anything, we will wait a moment."

I was glad of the opportunity to testify, and arose at once, and attracted no little attention, but was well composed, having spoken often before. While talking, Mr. Armant, seated near me, whispered and asked me if he would have to talk. At the close the minister came straight to us and began to ask questions. We told him briefly the facts in the case, whereupon he gave us a cordial invitation to attend preaching there that day, intimating that we should be cared for. We heard the sermon much against my young friend's will, and after dismission a crowd of ladies gathered around us, some of them weeping, and said, "Something must be done for these poor boys." They were Southern in sympathy, and we were the first Rebel soldiers they had seen. A large, fine-looking lady, whose name was West, invited us home with her for dinner. Her husband was Mr. B. J. West, who was a leading merchant of the place. While seated with that elegant family at the dinner table, Dr. Jeffries, a son-in-law, came in and was introduced to us, and told us very politely and pleasantly that he had a call just then. "But this," said he, pointing toward a lady at the table, "is my wife. Come home with her, and stay as long as you please."

As a drowning man will catch at a straw, we accepted that offer. That afternoon I walked with Mrs. Jeffries, and Mr. Armant with Miss Laura West, her sister, through the city to Dr. Jeffries'. How people on the streets gazed at us! They knew the ladies; but what they meant by walking socially and with perfect equality with tramps was something they could not understand. Soon after we reached the Doctor's a bundle was received from Mr. West's, and was found to contain a nice suit of clothes for each of us. After much scrubbing and washing, we donned our suits, which fit admirably and very materially enhanced our comfort. We were introduced to many of the first people of Belleville during a delightful week which we spent there, and each day we dined and each evening we supped at a different place. The most elaborate preparation was made for our reception. At the different homes where we were invited they had our photographs taken; and had we been two generals, we could not have been shown greater regard. On taking our leave, Dr. Jeffries presented us with twenty dollars apiece, and his good lady filled a satchel with something nice for lunch on our way.

The kindness shown us by the noble people of Belleville is a green spot in my life. Was not the sequel of our imprisonment wonderful?

I was a member of the Ninth Mississippi Regiment, Infantry. T. W. White, of Hernando, was at that time colonel. Judge Sol. S. Calhoon, of Jackson, Miss., was my captain, and Peter James (somewhere in Mississippi) was a lieutenant in my company (D). If any of these former comrades in arms should see this, I inform them that for about twenty years I have been an itinerant minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and I love to serve in the army of the great King much better than I loved the Confederate service. My present home is Lafayette, La. H. ARMSTRONG.

Sunday-School Entertainment.

The Sunday-school Christmas entertainment of the First Methodist Church, of Jackson, Miss., under the auspices of the Sunday-school choir, was one of unusual brilliancy. The choir is composed of six young ladies, and to their untiring efforts is due the credit of the following interesting program:

"Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow."

Prayer—By the Pastor.

Chorus—"We Boys and Girls."

This song was sung by the entire school, and evinced to the audience the fact that the children had been well trained, and their fresh, young voices filled the spacious church with the sweet, glad music that only children can make.

Recitation—"Long Ago on Christmas."

"Little Blossoms"—Song and chorus by five little girls, ranging in age from six to eight years.

This was particularly interesting, and elicited much praise from the audience.

Chorus—"I Wonder Who Is the Children's Friend."

"Sacred Pictures"—Song and recitations in which was told the story of Christ's life, from the time of his birth in Bethlehem to his crucifixion on Calvary.

This beautiful piece was rendered by eight young girls, from ten to twelve years of age, and was lovely beyond description.

Solo—"Once in Royal David's City."

Recitation—"The Newsboy's Debt."

Chorus—"Jesus Loves Little Children."

Solo—"The Christmas Angel."

The recitations and solos were appropriate, and the rendition of each was above criticism.

The crowning feature of the evening was, "The Feast of Flags; or, All Nations Shall Serve Him." The hearts of the spectators were thrilled as twelve young ladies of sixteen and eighteen years, all in spotless white, each bearing the national flower and flag of a Christian nation, marched into the chancel, and, with flags waving triumphantly on high, told in song how all nations should "praise," "love," "serve," and "crown" Him. Then each young lady, with an appropriate verse, placed flower and flag of the nation she represented at the foot of the cross. After this they marched back to their places in the choir, singing as they went that grand song of rejoicing, "Joy to the World, the Lord Has Come."

One and all felt the solemnity of the scene, and all went home edified and benefited by the children's entertainment. PHILO.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville, La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep—had night-sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. It had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a cost of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchel, Publisher.

"About seven or eight months ago I was attacked by a cough, and at once began to take a medicine much advertised as an expectorant, and continued using it until I had taken about six bottles. BRIEFS.

It is a bad thing for a minister to let his church "die on his hands," but it is a great deal worse for him to let it "die on his conscience!"

Things do not "happen" in the Lord's kingdom. That kingdom is under law. "The reign of law" does not stop at the boundaries of the material. Spiritual forces act according to law. Hence there are no accidents in the realm in which they act.

We take it that the appointment of a preacher places upon him the responsibility of giving the gospel to every man and woman and child within the limits of his work. It is only when with industry and prudence and courage and faith he endeavors to do so, that he shifts the responsibility and locates it upon them. Like Paul, he is a debtor to all, and, as a Christian minister, he must pay his debts.

A writer in the Independent says: "A church will need to use on its field each year in aggressive work a sum equal to what it requires for its ordinary current expenses." This writer is correct, but we fear he is a long way ahead of the ordinary Methodist steward. Talk to a steward about putting as much in the annual budget for evangelistic work, as will equal the running expenses of his church, and he will throw up his hands in holy horror! And yet it must come to that if we would do home mission work as it ought to be done.

Dr. Judson, in the Independent, says: "We pay the traveling expenses of missionaries to carry the gospel to the heathen, and when the heathen come to us, paying their own traveling expenses, we turn our backs upon them." There is too much truth in this statement. In this New Orleans district our Conference has assessed the churches $2,350 to carry the gospel to the heathen abroad, and $1,800 to carry it to the heathen in Louisiana, and some of our Christian officials are kicking most vehemently against paying the latter, but have no word of objection against the former!

The editor of a religious paper is a seed-sower. He can not expect to see immediate fruits of his labors. He touches minds that are widely separated. He speaks to thousands who are utter strangers to him, from whom he never hears, and to whom he is personally unknown. Ministers receive occasional words of encouragement from those who have been profited from their sermons. But the average reader thinks he does his full duty to the editor, when he tells him what he deems his faults. For this reason, an editor is sometimes tempted to think that his best work is unappreciated, or even fruitless. And yet, he may be exercising an influence for good far beyond what he knows or even hopes.—Christian Guardian.

Ministerial Vows.

We have the temerity to believe that many of our preachers can not tell to a questioner the different points in the vows which they have taken as ministers without referring to the Book of Discipline. Believing this, we will endeavor to refresh their memories on this important matter. It is an important matter; for, as ministers, we have promised voluntarily to do or not to do certain things. Those things make the distinction between ministers, as such, and the laity, and if we lose sight of the things we promise, how can we "make full proof of our ministry?" If we do not continually keep these promises in memory, and make that keeping a matter of conscience, we can not do the things promised; and if we do not do them, what becomes of our solemn vows made to God and the church? Forgetfulness of our vows is simply another form of speech for saying, We do not keep our word. And how can we, if we are not careful to keep our promises upon the heart and conscience?

We have two classes of ministers—deacons and elders—and each of these classes have made specific vows. Before a man is inducted into the office of a deacon, certain questions are propounded. He is at liberty to answer or not. There is no compulsion. If he does not wish to answer, he can step aside. If he answers affirmatively, then he is "ordained a deacon." As there are many of these in our three Conferences, we invite these brethren to consider again which they have voluntarily assumed. They have promised to "read and expound the Holy Scriptures unto the people." Now, to "read and expound the Scriptures" so as to profit the people is no light matter. It is a matter which engaged the mind of our Lord during the whole of his ministry—a special example of which we have in the last chapter of Luke's Gospel. To do this great and all-important work properly requires patient industry, painstaking research, earnest study, and prayerful meditation. The deacon must delve long and deep, with untiring energy, to find the golden nuggets of divine truth, and they pay richly for themselves when found. The object of expounding the Scriptures is to reveal Christ in his fullness as a Savior to the people. To reveal him from the Divine Word is the highest art of the preacher and the best blessing for the people.

The deacon promises "to instruct the youth, to search for the sick, poor and impotent, that they may be visited and relieved." In the instruction of the young people is opened one of the richest fields of labor that anyone ever entered. It is a virgin soil of untold wealth, and faithful work there yields larger and better and richer harvests than are ever garnered from other fields. And it is so large and inviting! The children are everywhere. The preacher meets them at every turn. One of the great old men of the present says: "If I had to go over my ministry again, I would pay more attention to the children." The deacon has vowed: "I will instruct the youth."

Then there are the poor and sick to be searched for, "visited and relieved." What a responsibility this vow has laid upon our young ministers. The poor and sick are in every flock by the score, and let us remember, young brethren, we have promised to search for them in order that they may be relieved. It may be a harder task to seek them out than to seek out and visit those in better circumstances, but our vows say nothing about the hardness of the task we have assumed. We have taken the obligation to do this thing, and if we do it not, verily we are guilty before God and the church and false to our promise.

The deacon also promises to "frame and fashion his life and the life of his family according to the doctrine of Christ, and to make himself and them wholesome examples of the flock of Christ." Mind you, not "to the flock," but "of the flock of Christ." The individual life and the family life are to be regulated—not according to the whims or dictates of society, but "according to the doctrine of Christ." In this great matter of regulating life the teachings of Christ predominate. The Scriptures alone speak with authority here. Individual life and family life are only seen in their true beauty where the Scriptures alone bear sway. And only such living is a "wholesome example" of what the true flock of Christ is. Let us, then, be reminded of this vow, the keeping of which will give onlookers something more than a glimpse of heaven.

The deacon has also vowed to "obey them to whom the charge and government over him is committed," and to follow "with a glad mind and will their godly admonitions." The church is an army—officered and equipped. The first duty of a soldier is to learn obedience to his superior. When the campaign has been planned and each officer and soldier assigned to his post of duty, the obedience of each to his superior is the only thing that will insure success. Anything else will bring confusion, and, maybe, irretrievable defeat. In church operations, as in military operations, there must be authority located somewhere, and this authority the deacon promises to obey.

These are very great vows, and they have brought very great duties and very heavy responsibilities, but the promise of the Lord is, "as thy day is, so shall thy strength be." And as we have promised to do all this "by the help of God," we may be sure when we make a sincere endeavor, his help will not be withheld.

We have the hopeful view that if this article will cause our young brethren to review and meditate upon and pray over their vows, the good results will be seen in their lives and felt in their ministry all through this year. God help us all.

Latent Heat.

There is in iron, cold iron, latent heat—heat that may be developed. The mass of iron now employed in all sorts of uses in all civilized lands is simply stupendous. It is all filled and charged with latent heat, but we suppose not one-millionth part of it has been evolved. If even it was one-half developed, the sum of it would be immense. Heat, we all know, can be utilized as power. How vast, then, is the amount of unemployed power. If it were put to work, how great would be the outcome!

Now, it strikes me that all that I have said of iron is true of the church. There is but a fraction of the power of the church that has been developed. It is lying latent in the great body of the membership. It ought not to be so, for it is written, "Every man shall bear his own burden." There is an individual responsibility—"every one of us must appear before the judgment-seat of Christ to give an account of himself to God."

I know that all skillful generals have reserved corps that they hold until the exigencies of the battle demand them at the front. If a general should attempt to deliver battle against a numerous army with two thirds or more of his own army held in reserve, he would certainly hazard a disastrous defeat, and call down upon himself the just censure of all military critics. But is not this just the thing the church is doing in her great war of truth with error, of light with darkness, of right with wrong? How vast the army of the world, the flesh and the devil! How well equipped with all the munitions and enginery of war! How powerfully sustained by uncounted millions of treasure, and how skillfully officered by bold and able commanders!

How unfortunate the officers of Emanuel's army have not stronger and better equipped battalions to meet and beat and drive back the armies of the aliens! So many are straggling and following far in the rear. The cry should ring through all the church: "To arms! to arms! The foe is nigh! God calls, 'Arise and tread the powers of darkness down.'"

Oh, if the scores of thousands now at ease in Zion, and refusing to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, would only arise in their might, all hell would tremble, the strongholds of darkness would fall, the banners of the cross would go forward, victory would flash along the advancing lines of Zion's host, and the enemy, discomfited and broken, would scatter and fly like chaff when driven by a mighty wind, and the shout would go up from many triumphant fields: "Alleluia! the Lord God Omnipotent reigns."

Dr. Talmage has said: "If the whole church would do its best for one month, the results would be so great and glorious that heaven itself could not hold the halleluiahs." The tide of praise would swell until, like a boundless, irrepressible crevasse, it would pour over the walls of the New Jerusalem, and roll far out into distant space and fill its solitudes with songs of rejoicing. Alas! that this glorious possibility should seem so far from fruition! Shall so many, then, in all the branches of the church militant live at the poor and dying rate they have so long?

"Awake, Jerusalem, awake!
No longer in thy sins lie down;
The garments of salvation take,
Thy beauty and thy strength put on."

J. B. WALKER.

Lawlessness.

This foul spirit seems to have broken loose, and, like a devil, "goeth about seeking whom he may devour." There really seems to be an epidemic of law breaking. In many places in Mississippi and Louisiana there have been enacted scenes of crime which are a disgrace to our country's honor and a reproach upon all good citizens. That men should band together for the purpose of committing crime, and that they should be able to carry on their plans so long without hindrance, shows a condition of affairs that is as deplorable as it is dangerous. The things that make civilization possible are law and order, and where these are ignored and set at defiance there is a reversion to barbarism. Where "White-capism" prevails there is a general disorder which overturns public confidence and brings about a condition of things subversive of every good interest of the community. We are glad to note that Gov. Stone, of Mississippi, has taken the matter in hand, and we sincerely trust that all good citizens will co-operate with him in rolling this reproach off the fair name of Mississippi. We append the Governor's proclamation in regard to this matter:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
State of Mississippi.

Whereas, information deemed to be reliable has been received at this office to the effect that there exists in the southwestern part of the State, to-wit: in portions of the counties of Amite, Franklin, Lincoln and Pike, an organization or organizations known as "white-caps," and that the purpose of said organization or organizations are unlawful and dangerous to the peace and good order of the State and to the safety of citizens thereof; and

Whereas, it has been reported to me that divers acts of lawlessness, such as disturbing the families of peaceful and law-abiding citizens at their homes, threatening them with violence and driving them from their homes, and in some cases committing arson and even murder; and

Whereas, the poor and helpless are entitled to the protection of the law;

Now, therefore, I, J. M. Stone, Governor of the State of Mississippi, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the constitution and laws of the State, do issue this, my proclamation, commanding all such assemblages or organizations, by whatsoever name called, to disperse, and the members thereof, and all others who may have been engaged in any such acts of lawlessness, to desist from and after this date. And I do hereby offer a reward of $100 for the arrest and conviction of each and everyone who may have been guilty, or who may hereafter be guilty of any of the crimes herein specified, or any of a kindred nature. And I do moreover enjoin it upon all peace officers, more especially the sheriffs of the respective counties whose duty it is to preserve the peace, and who for that purpose may command the power of their counties, to be vigilant in the discharge of their duties, that the majesty of the law may be maintained, and the good name of the counties and State preserved.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State of Mississippi to be affixed.

Done at the city of Jackson, this the twelfth day of January, in the year of our Lord, 1893.

J. M. STONE.

By the Governor:
GEORGE M. GOVAN,
Secretary of State.

Turn on the Light.

There are many persons in nearly all of our congregations, who, to say the least, are not as well informed concerning the great movements and enterprises of the church as they might and ought to be. Some of them do not take our church papers. Others take one or more papers, but they do not read them intelligently. So that, from some cause or other, there is a great deal of ignorance in the church about the church and her efforts to save the world.

Wherever there is ignorance there will be want of interest. We are satisfied that much, if not all, of the opposition to foreign missions is born of ignorance. You very seldom find a man opposed to missions who has studied the question with any degree of intelligence.

What we need now, it seems to us, is some plan for the diffusion of information concerning the various enterprises of the church. Our people will very likely appreciate what they understand, and they will contribute liberally to those causes which they approve. But how is this information to be given? The newspapers and printed reports, valuable as they are, will not entirely fill the need. We must reach the large class who do not read, or read to little profit. And we know of no way of reaching them, except through the spoken work of the preacher in charge.

We therefore suggest that each preacher prepare a number of plain, practical discourses, giving the history, condition, need, prospect, etc., of each one of our great enterprises, connectional and local, such as foreign missions, domestic missions, church extension, publishing interests, educational enterprises, etc. Let these discourses present all the information our people need, and let them be delivered to every congregation at such times as may be convenient.

Two things will result. In the first place, it will help the preacher. We preachers do not know too much of these matters ourselves. Many of us will be surprised to find how little we really do know when we come to prepare these addresses. In the second place, it will help the people. They will receive just the information they need, and for the lack of which their interest in these causes does not manifest itself.—Southern Christian Advocate.

NOTES.

Abraham did not put even a small proposition between God and himself. "He believed God and it was accounted to him for righteousness."

The Mid-Continent says: "The world judges the church from the criterion of the weakest member." It is just like the world to do just that way.

Human souls are God's jewels; therefore, let all Christian workers put heart and soul into a supreme effort to save them. Try by all lawful means to save some.

Luther was accustomed to say, "The devil hates good music." If that is true, let everybody co-operate to have good music in our churches, for the devil is in them and must needs be dislodged before we can make the success we ought to make during this year of grace.

These questions from the Christian at Work we refer to the preachers: "When was an impassioned plea for a human life in criminal courts ever made from the cold written lines of a manuscript? And what is a minister attempting in the pulpit but to save lives? And not only so, but to induce his hearers to bring in a verdict against themselves?"

The Pittsburg Christian Advocate gives the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania a deserved rap for doubling a case against the Sunday newspaper and then preaching "a short homily to the people against a too rigid enforcement of the law" against such papers. When courts go to preaching they ought, at least, to make the preaching coincide with their own decisions.

The tendency to secularize everything is one of the worst signs of the times, and is one of the great obstacles in the way of the progress of religion. And what is worse, is the ease with which religious people give way to this tendency. A contemporary remarks that "one of the hardest things in life is to make men believe and feel that anything is sacred. The tendency to secularize the sacred itself has to be fought with constant watchfulness and struggle; this in personal experience and in the general condition of things."

Anent early collections to meet the Conference demands, we call the attention of the preachers to the following from the Texas Advocate:

A brother in reporting his charge said a storm came and blew down his church, and the people had to rebuild it, but that all his collections were up. "How is that?" said the Bishop. "I took them before the storm came." "Ah!" said the chair, "there is a lesson in that; the man who takes his collections before the storm comes will never be behind on account of cyclones."

So, brother, take your collections before the cyclone comes.

The Chief of Police has had a second trial for not arresting violators of the Sunday law. This time he waived trial by jury and was tried before Judge Moise. He claimed to be acting under the Mayor's orders, and the Judge, after an able review of the law and evidence in the case, found him guilty and sentenced him to pay a fine of $301, or one hour's imprisonment. A suspensive appeal was taken to the Supreme Court, and the Chief was required to give a new bond. It seems to us that the contest is simply whether the Mayor is above a statute of the State and can say or not whether the police shall arrest persons caught in the act of violating the statute!

The following incident, which is related by the United Presbyterian, describes an experience with which some of our church people are not unfamiliar: "Two families came from a foreign country a few months ago, and settled in Allegheny City among strangers. The members of one family either did not bring their certificates of church membership, or neglected to use them, and because they were strangers did not attend any church, although called upon by the pastor of one church at least. The other family inquired for a church of their own denomination, brought their children to the Sabbath-school, attended church regularly, were called upon by the pastor, then by members of the congregation, presented their certificates, and soon felt at home among a people whom they found to be true friends. Adversity in the form of sickness and lack of employment came to both families, but with what different results may be imagined from the testimony of each. The mother of the church-going family said to her pastor, with emphasis: 'The Americans are the kindest people in the world.' The father of the non-church-going family declared his deep conviction that, "This is a heathen country." Comment is unnecessary.—Mid Continent.

The same thing has occurred in this city.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

ev. R. B. Downer passed this way week, en route to Pearlington, s., his charge for this year.

on't look upon any man as hopely beyond recovering grace. Even ggar among the swine may be resd.

ro. Lal'rade, of Carondelot Church, this city, has had quite a severe t with the grip, but he is now imving.

n the Southwestern Christian Advoe, of last week, eleven obituaries ocied thirty six lines of space. Cemndable!

looks a little curious that an Anl Conference should order a collecn for the benefit of a college which Conference has leased to a private ty!

We have determined to give berer more space to our young folks. hope the parents will call the ng people's attention to this determnation.

Bro. F. S. Parker and his people ve finished one of the handsomest k churches in Louisiana, and proe to have it dedicated, Sunday, . 5, by Bishop Galloway.

There has been a steady increase in attendance at Millsaps College since pening of the session. The enrollnt has reached 145. The faculty re- it gratifying progress in the studious bits of the boys.—Clarion Ledger.

If anybody ought to work earnestly pull the church paper in the homes the people, the stewards of the rch ought, for a church paper in homes helps them wonderfully in ir finances.

Brother pastor, do your level best Christian work among the children d young people. The time to make ting impressions upon human char- er and conduct is during the formve period of life.

Do not be satisfied, brother preacher, preach satisfactorily to yourself. at is a very poor result. Aim always preach for the "edifying of the body Christ" and the conversion of sinrs, and don't be satisfied with anying else.

We hear that our young friend, Wal- Lipscomb, of Luling, Texas, is a ndidate for the position of postmasr at that place. He is a graduate of nienary College under the presiency of Dr. C. G. Andrews, and is every way qualified for the position.

The distinguished German scholar, rnich Ewald, said to Dean Stanley, he took up a Greek Testament from table: "In this little book is conined all the wisdom of the world." Then let us in our reading and eaching remember it well and as ng as we live.—Southern Churchman.

A card from Bro. Woodward, presidg elder of the Brookhaven district, ings the cheering news that Dr. I. Cooper is "up and improving and nning and working for a new urch, which he hopes to have cometed for the use of the next Annual nference, which meets in Hazlehurst."

One of our earnest women, in a prite role, says: "I must add that the DVOCATE grows in interest year by r. Either it grows better or I am owing more appreciative. In either se, I am the gainer and render thanks here thanks are due." As this comes om one of the foremost women in our urch, it is highly appreciated in this ffice.

We have the pleasure to inform our aders that we have secured the servces of Rev. A. F. Watkins, of the Mississippi Conference, and our pastor at rst Church, Jackson, to take charge our Sunday-school Department for e year. We believe this will give neral satisfaction, and we trust that l our readers will profit by this arngement.

You understand that here in Mississippi the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE is e first and best paper in Southern ethodism. After that and the conctional organ, the Nashville Christian dvocate, we do not care how many apers our people take. The more ey take and read the better it is for em.—"Gilderoy," in Tennessee Methdist.

That is just what we expected of Gilderoy." His loyalty is unquesioned and bold, in the good sense. ould that we could say the same of me others!

Rev. J. E. Harrison, in a chatty letr to the Tennessee Methodist concernng the recent session of the Louisiana Conference, says this:

Dr. Carter makes the NEW ORLEANS DVOCATE strong and round. He has eavy work upon him in that he undertakes two men's work, the presidng eldership and the editorial chair.

While grateful for the compliment, r. Carter must say that he did not undertake" two men's work. He was ppointed to the eldership against his xpressed wish. Dr. Carter can hardly o one man's work, and to voluntarily undertake" two men's work would e folly; but when he is appointed by he legal authority over his own wish, what can he do but, as an obedient son n the gospel, go to his work, asking he prayers and sympathies of the hurch?

We were pleased this week to make the acquaintance of Rev. Harry May, who will fill the pulpit of the Broad Street Methodist Church. He is a gentleman of pleasing address, and his congregation was delighted with his sermons last Sunday.—Lake Charles Echo.

Rev. R. M. Blocker, who has been pastor of the Plaquemine Brulee and Rayne Churches, left last week for his new charge in Claiborne parish. His many friends in Acadia, where he has been engaged in work for the Master, are sorry to lose him, and wish him much success in his new field of labor.—Rayne Ranger.

Rev. J. A. Ellis and family are comfortably quartered in the Methodist parsonage at Moss Point. He will fill the Methodist pulpit this year. We are glad to hear that the gentleman is in better health than usual. He preached Sunday at 11 o'clock and at night to large congregations. He is a good man and a fine preacher.—Democrat Star.

Rev. V. V. Beone and wife were agreeably surprised when they returned home, Saturday, to find that the good ladies of the Methodist Aid Society had replenished their larder with the choicest edibles. They begin the new year with renewed strength, and we trust will have the hearty support and co operation of every member of the church.—Magnolia Gazette.

Rev. B. S. Rayner, who will fill the appointment of Bro. Bradford in the Methodist Church in this place, comes highly recommended as a strong pulpit man. For a number of years he was presiding elder on the Seashore district, and was stationed for awhile at Enterprise. He comes from Vicksburg here, where he did excellent work. We bespeak for him a cordial reception, and hope during his stay here his lines may ever fall in pleasant places.—Scott County Register.

Rev. J. S. Parker preached his initial sermon at the Methodist Church, Sunday morning, from Matt. xiv, 27. Notwithstanding the severe cold weather, the congregation was large, and by the earnest attention displayed it was evident that the discourse was feelingly appreciated, and that the speaker had at once won the hearts of the members of his congregation and those of the general community. Mr. Parker also preached an excellent sermon at night to a full house. May success attend his labors here!—Poplarville Free Press.

BOOKS.

THE WONDERFUL COUNSELOR. By Rev. Henry B. Mead, M. A. With an introduction by Rev. F. E. Clark, president of Christian Endeavor Society. A. D. F. Randolph & Company, New York. For sale by E. S. Upton, 91 Camp St., New Orleans. Price, 50 cents.

This is an excellent little book. It contains all the recorded sayings of the Lord Jesus, chronologically arranged on a plan for easy memorizing, in single passages—one for each day in the year—with brief notes connecting words and phrases.

Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh, 106 Camp St., has favored us with the following books, published by the Penn Publishing Co., Philadelphia:

SHOEMAKER'S BEST SELECTIONS FOR READING AND RECITATIONS—No. 20. Price, 30 cents.

HOLIDAY SELECTIONS. Price, 30 cents.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SELECTIONS. Price, 30 cents.

ETIQUETTE. By Agnes H. Morton, B. O.

The first is a thrillingly interesting story which everybody who sees it will devour with avidity. The "Selections" are good and quite readable. The "Etiquette" is a book that should occupy a place in every family and be read by all. These books can all be procured of Bro. Van Valkenburgh, 106 Camp St.

Revival at Oxford, Miss.

LAW AND ORDER LEAGUE FORMED.

Rev. George S. Inge commenced a meeting at the Methodist Church in Oxford, Miss., Sunday, Dec. 11, which continued for twenty two days. The reputation of Bro. Inge as a strong and courageous preacher of the truth had preceded him, although, so far as I know, he had never before delivered a discourse of any kind in this town. The congregation that greeted him on the first day was an unusually large one; the house was filled, and persons were turned away for lack of room. The congregations continued very large throughout the entire time, notwithstanding the fact that the weather was extremely severe, some days intensely cold, and there was an immense fall of rain.

Bro. Inge is a graceful and eloquent orator, a speaker of fascinating power, wonderful versatility, wide range of information, deep sympathy for the world that lies in wickedness, profound conviction of the ruin of sin, and the need of Christ as a merciful and perfect Savior. His arguments are unanswerable, and his appeals are profoundly and tenderly moving. With a brave voice he cries out against the sins of intemperance, dancing, gambling and all those iniquities that drown men's souls in perdition.

He stirred Oxford as I have not seen it stirred during a residence here of thirteen years. Strong men who had lived in sin for years, men who had backslidden, and young people were so wrought upon that they resolved to follow a new life.

The fruits of the meeting in conversions and additions to the churches, while important, were not commensurate with the power and fervor of the preaching; and yet we thank God for what was done, and will always give Bro. Inge a most cordial welcome back to this church and town.

It is truly refreshing to associate with a minister who is so intensely in earnest in preaching salvation, and who is delivering such a brave battle against sin in all its forms. Such an evangelist as he is will do incalculable good in any community. He does not ridicule or in any way weaken the regular pastors.

Dr. J. W. Price was present nearly all the time, preached once, and had charge of the music, which he conducted with admirable skill, rendering it one of the most attractive features of these services. Since these brethren left a large public meeting has been held, a Law and Order League has been organized, and the citizens realize the importance of uniting their influence against the violations of the statutes which forbid the sale of liquor here, and gambling. We have had in this town for many years a strict law against the sale of intoxicating liquors. There have been evasions and violations of this law, which have resulted in much evil. These violations have been greatly exaggerated in the reports that have gone over the State. The citizens mean to claim the reputation that is due to Oxford, and a large number have united together to suppress the infractions of the laws, and to throw around the young men who come to the university protection from temptations to dissipation and safeguards from all the forms of vice and sin, so far as is possible.

Verona and Nellieton.

Our reception by the good people of this charge was most cordial and fraternal. And the indubitable evidences of appreciation have continued almost from day to day without cessation or remission of ardor. How inspiring these words and acts of fraternal greetings! What boat-oords do they not touch! What magic influences do they not wield! What promptings do they not beget! A cold, disinterested reception is absolutely deadening, and is keenly felt by the heart of the weary itinerant.

My prayer is, and shall be, God bless pastor and people, and make this the happiest and most successful year of our being.

WEEK OF PRAYER AND SELF-DENIAL.

Shubuta circuit, Shubuta Church, D. P. Bradford, P. C.	$11 52

This is the first item reported to me. I am glad it is from the Meridian district. There ought to be many more. Many have deferred the observance of the week. Do not defer altogether, brethren beloved! Let the people learn to pray and pay for the cause of missions. It is needful to do both. The cause we pray for we love or soon learn to love; and what we really love we are willing to deny ourselves for the good thereof. That to which we contribute we are interested in, and always in direct proportion to the amount we contribute.

World's Fair and 1893.

The January issue of the WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION ILLUSTRATED is fraught with rich illustrations and interesting information of the great Exposition which will be opened to the world on May 1, 1893.

Among the leading articles is "Paris Exposition Was Open Sunday," "World's Fair at Chicago," "Catholic Congress at the Exposition," "Transportation Exhibits," "Rules for Shipping and Labeling Exhibits," "Louisiana at the Fair," etc. The Woman's Department contains interesting information concerning the Woman's Exhibit. The frontispiece is Ex-Governor Penn of Louisiana.

Among the illustrations are Gov. Flower of New York, and staff, Gov. Boies of Iowa, and staff, as they appeared at the dedication parade; Live American Flag, composed of public school children; large views of the interior of the Great Building and full page cuts of the Louisiana and Virginia State Buildings.

The object of this publication is to make a complete History of the Fair. A single number is worth an entire subscription. Its pages will make a complete guide to the Exposition and by studying the same the Fair can be visited much more satisfactorily and economically. The publisher wants good agents in each town. Regular subscription, 12 copies, $2 75. Single copies, 25 cents.

HOME LIFE.

SORROW.

Sorrow came to him with a pleading face;
He would not rise and bid her enter in;
She seemed to claim in him too large a space,
And he was careless, full of mirth and sin.
So passed she onward. Then it chanced one day,
When Autumn winds in woods were making moan,
Again did gentle Sorrow fare that way,
And heard him mourning, for his love had flown.
So once again she sought him. Reckless, rude,
He bade her enter. Then with stately mien
She passed, and took possession like a queen,
And seemed not sorrow, but a joy subdued;
Bringing a shadow, yet, as shadows are,
A blessing, cast from some great light afar.

The Modern London.

PHASES OF LIFE IN THE GREAT METROPOLIS.

London is not a city; it is a nation, a world. Several worlds, indeed, are included in its limits; and one may live in London a long time without seeing all of them. Mrs. Humphry Ward says that Manchester has what London has not—a common life. London and New York are alike in this respect. In neither city is the life homogenous. It is made up of a congeries of little worlds each revolving on its own axis. And the inhabitants of one of these worlds know little about the life of the other.

I was hospitebly entertained one night by a resident of Finsbury Park—an Englishman who, with his family, had resided in London many years. He had taken a drive that afternoon through Hyde Park with his wife. They passed many houses which it must cost a large annual income to maintain; and the mystery was to know who the owners were, where they came from, and what they did. Nobody hears of them. They are not felt in the life of the city. They are the obscure rich, not entitled to so much sympathy or interest as the obscure poor; able to take care of themselves, but not taking care of anybody else to any great extent. Not all of these are Englishmen. People of other nationalities, who have made money, come to London to live and spend it, as others come to make it.

The centralization of life in London is indicated even in a phrase. To go to London from any point of the compass is going "up;" to leave it is going "down." This is the prevalent usage except to the Oxford (and, I presume, to the Cambridge) students, who go "up" to their halls of learning. But this centralization in London is something more than a phrase; it is commercial, legislative, social and personal. The city is a great emporium of the nation and the world. The commonest and most insignificant matters of local and provincial interest are adjusted in Parliament as well as the weighty affairs of the nation. The beating of this great heart of England is seen in the pulsing tide of human life which flows in every morning and flows out every night.

One who happens to be at the railway stations when the local trains arrive in the morning and leave at night may see this mighty pulsation going on—vast currents of life pumped out into the suburban arteries at night and pumped back again in the morning. This flow and reflow of masses is as impressive as anything in the way of magnitude in the life of the great city. The ease with which the transportation of this multitude of people is effected is surprising. Our English brethren have one good reason for clinging to their compartment cars in the rapidity with which they may be filled or emptied. No sooner does the train stop than the doors fly open, and in a quarter of a minute the train has discharged its entire human freight upon the platform.—Christian Register.

Work.

Work is a law of human life. Exertion of mind and body is necessary to development. Flabby muscle and brain are penalties of idleness. Comparatively few do not need to work to live, and they are to be pitied. They "kill time" with frivolous amusements or sinful and enervating pleasures, which alternate with ennui and disgust with life. Work is a blessing. It keeps people out of the mischief which Satan finds for idle hands to do. It furnishes preoccupation and diversion in disappointment and trouble. It is the best way to throw off a crushing burden of sorrow.

Christian work is necessary to the maintenance of the Christian life. An idle Christian is an anomaly and a contradiction. God the Father works. Christ works. The Holy Spirit works. We must work or die spiritually. To all Christians Christ says: "Go work to-day in my vineyard." A working church is the appointed agency for the salvation of the world. A church that is not instrumental in saving anybody has no right to the name. Call it social club, and entertainment society—anything you will except a church of God.

Many people seem to think that when the work of repentance and conversion is over and they have joined the church, little remains to be done but to sing hymns, enjoy sermons, attend social meetings, tell their experience, and have any easy time. They do not have a true conception of the facts that the church is a place for work, and that its members are an association of workers. They forget that conversion is only the beginning of a life of religious activity; that the best use of the social meeting is to devise ways and means for promoting the work of the Lord; and that a religious experience that is not kept fresh and vigorous by daily work for the Master becomes stale, flat, and unprofitable, both to the hearer and the teller. We ought to have a superlatively joyful Christian experience. The service of God is not irksome. His commandments are not grievous. But it is in keeping them, not in neglecting them, that there is great reward.

Work is the condition of spiritual growth. As well might you expect a boy to grow tall and strong by tying on his back in his bed, as to suppose a Christian can grow in grace by watching his own spiritual state and doing nothing for the salvation of others. "Exercise thyself unto godliness." Do something. Do all you can. Help and bless others. Then you will grow strong. One of the pass-words of a great society is, "Work your way." It is a good motto for every young Christian.

The salvation of the world depends upon the consecrated activity of Christians. It is the grandest work under the sun. To be instrumental in saving one soul is a greater achievement than to win fame, wealth, or power. "He that converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." To this work we are "laborers together with God." What an exalted fellowship! What a glorious privilege! Work, then, with joy. Abound in the work of the Lord, "forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Be up and at it now. "The night cometh when no man can work."—Epworth Herald.

How Shall a Woman Speak of Her Husband?

One of the questions which a married woman often finds herself uncertain upon, says The Courier-Journal, is just how to speak of her husband by name to others—when to speak of him as Mr. Jones, when to use his first name, and when to give him his title. Instinct will usually guide aright any woman of gentle breeding. Most women may be trusted, for example, never to use their husband's Christian name in speaking of him to anyone except a near relative or a very dear friend of both. But sometimes women who should know better address their husbands in company or before servants by their given names.

In speaking of her husband, a woman never makes a mistake if she calls him "Mr." or "my husband." It is sometimes difficult to decide, when the husband has a title, just whet the wife should do with it. This is the severest rule: In speaking of her husband she should not say, "Gen. A.," or "Doctor B.," but "Mr. A.," "Mr. B." No matter what he is—judge, governor, captain—to her he is, and should be, plain "Mr. A." Mrs. Grant never, even when her husband was President, spoke of him as other than Mr. Grant, though it is the custom of the President's wife to speak of him as "the President."

The one exception to this rule of ignoring her husband's official or professional titles, is, when the wife presents him to anyone else. Then she says, "My husband, Senator Smith," or, simply, "Doctor Jones." The reason for this is evident. It gives the proper clue to the stranger, who would wish, of course, to address the new acquaintance with the proper title.

Last of all, let any woman take heed how she wears her husband's title, and allows herself to be spoken of as "Mrs. Gov. Jones," or "Mrs. Secretary Smith." No matter what title her husband has, she has no more right to wear it than she has to wear his shoes.

A Vision of the Great Salvation

I was upon the seashore, and my heart filled with love, it knew not why. Its happiness went out over the wide waters, and upon the unfettered wind, and swelled up into the free dome of blue sky until it filled it. The dawn lighted up the lace of the ivory cliffs which the sun and sea had been blanching for centuries of God's undying love. The miles of noiseless sands seemed vast, as if they were the floor of eternity. Somehow the daybreak was like the eternity. The idea came over me of that feeling of acceptance which so entrances the soul just judged and just admitted into heaven. To be saved! I said to myself, To be saved! Then thoughts of all the things implied in salvation came in one thought upon me, and I said, This is the one grand joy of life—and I clapped my hands like a child, and spoke to God aloud. But then there came many thoughts, all in one thought, about the nature and manner of our salvation. To be saved with such a salvation! This was a grander joy, the second grand joy of life; and I tried to say some lines of a hymn, but the words were choked in my throat. The ebb was sucking the sea down over the sand quite silently, and the cliffs were whiter and more day-like. Then there came many more thoughts all in one thought, and I stood still without intending it. To be saved by such a Savior! This was the grandest joy of all, the third grand joy of life. And it swallowed up all the other joys; and after it there could be on earth no better joy. I said nothing, but I looked at the sinking sea as it reddened in the morning. Its great heart was throbbing in the calm. And methought I saw the precious blood of Jesus in heaven throbbing that hour with real human love of me.—F. W. Faber.

Kind Words.

A distinguished preacher uttered the other day this remark to a friend: "I endeavor to make it my business to diffuse all the happiness I can, not only among my fellow-men but among the brutes—our dumb companions. It is not always safe to pet a strange dog with one's hands, but I always speak kindly to dogs, and often get their appreciative tail-wags in return. And as for cats, I seldom pass one without stooping to stroke its fur the right way, if it seems willing to make friends." Such a spirit is undoubtedly that of a Christian gentleman. If everybody were animated by it, what a different world this would be! Sometimes men and women are ready to die of despair for lack of the sympathetic, brave, kindly, hopeful, cheering word. Kind words cost nothing, yet they are electric, full of life-arousing power and grace. Carlyle was remorseful and wretched enough because he had failed to speak affectionate and helpful words to his wife. She yearned for such expressions, and died without hearing more than one of the ten she ought to have heard. And how do you treat the members of your family? and what is your bearing toward the dumb companions around you? Charles Dickens once saved a young author from contemplated suicide (though Dickens did not know it until afterwards) by whispering the single word "courage," "courage," into the ear of the despondingman as he was saying goodbye. O these kind words and kind deeds, how blessed they are! Why, then, should they not be multiplied?—for

"Howe'er it be, it seems to me
'Tis only noble to be good;
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

In dealing with boys, he is a wise man who studies boy nature. He should remember enough about himself when young to be in sympathy with them and to give hints as to the best methods of managing them. There are ways of rallying boys so as to respond with entire heartiness to efforts in their behalf. That fact has been notably shown in an experiment which was begun in Glasgow in 1883. A gentleman there, finding it hard to get hold of the street Arabs by distinctively Sabbath-school work alone, organized them into a company for military drill. He now has in Scotland and England 433 companies with an enrolled membership of 18,000. In connection with this brigade are clubs for football, cricket, swimming, and gymnastics. Every drill is prefaced and concluded with prayer, besides the exertion of an influence which exalts the Sabbath-school. Professor Drummond speaks thus strongly and sensibly of this movement:

"Call these boys, boys, which they are, and ask them to sit up in a Sabbath class, and no power on earth will make them do it; but put a live penny cap on them and call them soldiers, which they are not, and you can order them about till midnight. The genius who discovered this astounding and inexplicable psychological fact ought to rank with Sir Isaac Newton. A class it was confusion, depression, demoraliz don, blasphemy, chaos. As company, it is respect, self-respect, enthusiasm, happiness, peace."—The Baptist Teacher.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

ROBIN RED BREAST AND THE CHERRIES.

BY GEORGE W. BUNGAY.

"You are a little thief," I said
To Robin Redbreast, blithe and fat,
"You stole my cherries, ripe and red,
Now what have you to say to that?"

In songful speech he sweetly said,
His bosom glowing like the morn,
"I take my pay in cherries red,
For working in your vines and corn."

"My sweetest strains I sing for you,"
He said in music, low and soft,
And then his brown wings shook the dew
In showers from his green organ loft.

Like tears the dew fell, and I said,
When came the pauses of his strain,
"Sweet Robin, eat my cherries red,
I will not call you thief again."

Now every year, when Spring returns,
He perches on the topmost spray,
And there his tinted bosom burns
With songs of cheer at dawn of day.

The robin is my choice of pets,
I wish him joy and length of days;
He pays me well for all he gets,
In skillful toil and songs of praise.

ALONG THE CANADIAN PLAIN.

The railroad company's guide-book for passengers tells many wonderful things in favor of the regions along its line from Halifax to Vancouver, none of which we found false, though it, of course, omitted the dark side. For forty miles west of Winnipeg, and for great distances in other regions, hardly a house is visible, some of the land being held by speculators who will not sell it. Portage La Prairie is the first town of any note passed; then comes Brandon, and here we quote the guide-book:

BRANDON.—Alt. 1,150 ft. Pop. 5,400. A divisional point; the largest grain market in Manitoba; and the distributing market for an extensive and well-settled country. It has five grain elevators, a flouring-mill and a sawmill. The town is beautifully situated on high ground, and, although only seven years old, has well-made streets and many substantial buildings. A railway is being built northwestward towards the Saskatchewan country, and a branch line of the Canadian Pacific Railway runs southward for about forty miles to Souris and Hartney. The standard time changes here to "Mountain"—one hour slower. Beyond Brandon the railway draws away from the Assiniboine river, and rises from its valley to a "rolling" or undulating prairie, well occupied by prosperous farmers, as the thriving villages at frequent intervals bear evidence. Virden is the market town of a particularly attractive district; but beyond it, for forty miles, the lands within a mile or two of the railway are chiefly held by the speculators, and the farms within sight are scattered. A mile east of Fleming, the Province of Assiniboia is entered. A little beyond Sintaluta the celebrated Bell Farm, embracing one hundred square miles, is entered; and from Indian Head, near the centre of the farm, the headquarters buildings may be seen on the right. The neat square cottages of the farm laborers dot the plain as far as the eye can reach. The furrows on this farm are usually ploughed four miles long, and to plough one furrow outward and another returning is a half day's work for a man and team. The work is done with an almost military organization, "ploughing by brigades and reaping by divisions." Rush Lake is a large area of fresh water and a favorite resort of water fowl—swans, geese, ducks and pelicans—which at times congregate here in myriads. At Rush Lake the railway passes through the first of the large farms recently started by Sir John Lister Kaye, and now controlled by an English company. These farms, ten in number, occur at intervals of thirty miles between this station and Calgary. Each of them contains an area of 10,000 acres, and it is the intention ultimately to have 4,000 acres under cultivation at each point.

H. G. HAWKINS.

To the Penny Helpers of Oak Ridge, Miss.

Dear Little Friends: We have sent out to the children of the church 40,000 Penny Helper Cards; but, alas! we have not received $40,000. Yours is the banner Sunday-school so far, having ordered thirty-six cards and sent in $36. Well done! Are there not other Sunday-schools that will follow your good example? Yours is the only one that has sent a dollar for every card ordered except the children in our own Japan Mission. The eleven children sent $11 to help pay the debt, and of this number seven or eight have never been in America, and only one is old enough to know anything about it. Is it no good to think of the children away off there uniting with the children here to get rid of this debt? Ah! I suspect their parents feel the debt more keenly than almost anyone in the home-land, for they are breaking down from overwork and pleading for reinforcements; but they know help can not come while this debt burdens our Board.

We owe many thanks to Mrs. Cameron and Mrs. Austin, who have encouraged you and kept you interested in the work. Thanking you very much, and hoping you may continue in well-doing, I am, Yours cordially,

KATE HARLAN.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 5 1893

To the Penny Helpers of Jeanerette, La.

Dear Little Friends: Not long since I received a letter from Mrs. J. W. Richardson, enclosing $7 and we wish to thank you very much for this contribution towards lessening the missionary debt. We are glad you have begun in your youth to "shine for Jesus," and we hope you will continue to labor for the advancement of his kingdom.

When Mrs. Lambuth thought of these cards as a plan for interesting the children of the church, and getting them all to help pay the debt, she did not want to obtain money alone. She hoped that each child who filled out a Penny Helper Card would begin to feel an interest in those little heathen boys and girls who know nothing of the Savior's love, and that you would never cease to do all in your power to send them this knowledge. Perhaps, when you get grown some of you may go yourselves to tell them the glad tidings. Whether you go or send, may you everyone know the joy of being numbered among those "that turn many to righteousness." Yours cordially,

KATE H. HARLAN.

Recent Advances in Oceanography.

Despite the large increase of deep sea navigation within the last quarter of a century, accessions to our knowledge of the great oceanic movements and the laws governing them have not been correspondingly numerous or rich. Hydrography has generally been limited in its researches by the lack of observers other than those who were willing to snatch a few moments from repose or from the arduous toils of a mariner's life to secure specimens of sea water, to note the varying colors of the deep or to record the passage of floating sargassum—one of the few forms of the higher algæ that deck the surface of the ocean with living vegetation. But now and then some earnest student, collecting the too scanty material furnished by log-books of the merchant service, has been enabled to make interesting discoveries which throw more or less light on the mysteries of ocean circulation—a matter of most intense interest, especially to the practical navigator.

One of these earnest workers in the labyrinths of oceanography is Prof. O. Krummel, of Berlin, a luminous report of whose labors, together with a valuable resume of recent like researches, appears in the current number of the London Nautical Magazine from the pen of Mr. Richard Beynon. Dr. Krummel's special study has been the vast Sargasso Sea, lying in the vortex of North Atlantic currents, which was first discovered by Columbus. Insignificant as the distribution of gulf weed in this region and its surroundings may appear to the unthinking, it gives some invaluable hints as to the periodical changes in direction and intensity of the whole system of ocean-currents. The area of maximum weediness, as determined by Dr. Krummel, is an ellipse of the ocean south of 35 degrees north latitude and west of 35 degrees west longitude, the major axis lying near the Tropic of Cancer from the 40th to the 73d meridian and the minor axis lying on the 55th meridian. Around this ellipse is an oval ring six or seven degrees wide, in which the weed is more thinly distributed; but the northernmost limit of the Sargasso drift is in latitude 52 degrees north, longitude 45 degrees west.

But, as Mr. Beynon says, most interesting is the difference of distribution noticed in the various seasons. In the region northward of latitude 45 degrees north the sargassum is observed only in Summer and Autumn, while it completely disappears from this region in Spring. The further south the greater the frequency of the weed through all seasons. Near 30 degrees north the maximum is reached in Winter, but south of the 25th parallel most weed is encountered in Spring.

The significance of this seasonal drift of the sargassum lies in the fact that it reveals an annual north and south oscillation of the whole system of ocean-currents, almost in direct response to the sun's movement in declination. The vast elliptical marine meadow, teeming with vegetable matter, torn originally by the waves from the shores of the Carribean Sea and the Mexican Gulf, also from the West Indian, and our South Atlantic littoral, makes its annual excursions in obedience to the same law which causes seedtime and harvest, Winter and Summer, to succeed each other. But this variation of position is effected mainly by the agency of the several wind-systems of the globe, moving also north and south with the sun in declination. One of the most important of Columbus' discoveries was that within the tropics "the waters of the sea move from east to west, as do the heavens" (con los cielos)—referring to the apparent motion of the latter. It was this happy deduction that robbed the voyage from the Old World to the New of half its terrors. Scarcely less important, however, is the generalization which may be drawn from the data furnished by Dr. Krummel, because it supplies a clear explanation, not only of ocean climates, but of the various phenomena and distribution of storms and hurricanes, fogs and icedrift, with which navigators have to contend. As Humboldt long ago suggested, since two-thirds of the atmosphere rest upon the sea, the prevailing ocean winds, as so beautifully signalled by the drift of the sargassum, with its golden olive tint, furnish us a much clearer interpretation of the general laws of the atmosphere than can be gained by meteorological observations on land.

The excellent use which has been made of many thousands of detached and seemingly insignificant marine observations ought to stimulate mariners in every part of their voyages to vigilance and painstaking in securing all the information which the waifs of the sea are capable of imparting to really scientific questioners. Much has been done in this direction, but, as the writer in the Nautical Magazine whom we have quoted says, finality on this subject is still far off.—New York Herald.

Early Electric Railways.

According to Mr. Edward Trevett's book on Electric Railroad Engineering, the first electric railway was constructed by Thomas Davenport, a blacksmith, of Brandon, Vt., who exhibited in Springfield, Mass., in 1835, a small model electric engine, running upon a circular track, the circuit being furnished by primary batteries carried in the car. The invention was crude and of little practical value, "but the idea was there." Three years later, Robert Davidson, of Aberdeen, Scotland, began experiments in order to supplant the steam railway locomotive by the electric locomotive. He constructed a powerful electric motor which was run successfully on several railways in Scotland, attaining a speed of four miles an hour. In 1849 Moses Farmer exhibited an electric engine which drew a small car containing two persons. In 1851 Dr. C. G. Page, of Salem, Mass., constructed an electric engine of considerable power, which drew a car on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, between Washington and Bladensburg, with a highest speed attained of nineteen miles an hour. In the same year Thomas Hall, of Boston, built an electric locomotive in which the current was conducted from a stationary source through the rails and the wheels to the motor. Dr. Joseph R. Finney, of Pittsburg, about this time devised a trolley apparatus. In 1879 Messrs. Siemens and Halske exhibited their electric railway at Berlin. The car carried about twenty passengers at about eight miles an hour. In 1880 Mr. Edison worked an experimental road at Menlo Park, N. J. The first commercial electric railway was constructed at Lichterfeld, Germany, in 1881. It is operated by the third rail system, since then the development of the electric railway has been rapid.—Popular Science.

The sunshine of thy gentle presence and the e of thy voice are gone; but the sweet in- ce still lingers, and its beautiful alter- is shining still o'er hearts and home.

ttie was a consistent member of the M. E. rch, South, and Sunday-school; but her y character shone brighter in her beauti- ful devotion to a widowed mother, for to e was always attentive, kind and gentle. y the memory of this pure, sweet life be nspiration in her home, and to the heart of er, sister and aunt, now so sorely be- ed; and may our Father's richest benedic- and grace be given abundantly to these ones so bereaved and stricken!

lls, Miss. A FRIEND.

RNAGE—OLIVIA, infant daughter of Bro. nd Sister Lou Turnage, was born Feb. 16, died Nov. 25, 1892, aged nine months nine .

"Go to thy rest, fair child;
Go to thy dreamless bed,
Gentle, and meek, and mild,
With blessings on thy head.

"Fresh roses in thy hand,
Buds on thy pillow laid,
Haste from this blightening land,
Where flowers so quickly fade."

M. L. WHITE.

MANGUM—CLARA MAY, youngest daughter of Rev. R. A. Sibley, of the Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South, was born in Jefferson county, Miss., April 10, 1860; was baptized May 30, 1860, by Rev. W. B. Johnson, of Mississippi Conference; was, from infancy, loving and obedient to her parents. She was religiously inclined from early childhood. She was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in early girlhood, always consistent as a Christian. Was married to Page A. Mangum, in the Methodist Church in Trenton, Smith county, Miss., Oct. 18, 1876, by Rev. W. H. Leith, P. E., Brandon district. She was the mother of seven children, one of whom preceded her to heaven. Her husband, P. A. Mangum, dropped dead Feb. 2, 1889, leaving her with six small children. In the Spring of 1891 she had la grippe, from which she never fully recovered, finally terminating in dyspepsia and bronchitis. As a result, she gradually wasted away to a skeleton. She suffered long and much, but without complaint or murmur until her end came, on Dec. 20, fifteen minutes after 9 o'clock A. M., 1892, in Trenton, Smith county, Miss., in the home of her parents, in the full hope and prospect of an eternal home with God in heaven.

May the blessings of God ever rest upon, the Holy Spirit direct, and the loving arms of Jesus encircle, the orphans. Father, mother, sisters, brother, children and friends, sorrow not; but let us all meet her on the shore of eternal blessedness. R. S. GALE.

FRAZIER—Mrs. MARY FRAZIER (nee Perry) was born in Lincoln county, Tenn., March 19, 1860. She was reared principally in Monroe county, Miss., and departed this life near West Point, Clay county, Miss., Nov. 6, 1892. She was married to Mr. Sidney C. Frazier, Oct. 22, 1885, with whom she happily lived until the day of her death. She was an affectionate wife, a devoted mother, a kind and obliging neighbor, and held in high esteem by all who knew her.

She joined the M. E. Church, South, when quite young, in which communion she lived until dismissed by death. Everything that an affectionate husband and a skillful physician could do was done to arrest the fell destroyer; but to no avail. She was a great, but patient sufferer the last year or two of her life; but in her lucid moments she bore testimony to the value of our holy religion. She was conscious up to the time of her death, and just before departing this life expressed herself as being ready and willing to die.

May God ever be with her bereaved husband and motherless children while on earth, and finally give them a home in heaven around the throne of God!

B. B. SULLIVAN.

PEELER—LOUIS KENDRICK, infant son of Louis K. and Allee Peeler, was born Feb. 2, 1891, and died of membraneous croup, at their home in Booneville, Miss., Dec. 16, 1892.

Little Louis was a bright child, and by his death much light and joyousness has gone out of the home of Brother and Sister Peeler. But they have the comfort which comes alone to those who have faith in him who said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me." They look forward to the time when they shall meet their little one again.

May the God of all consolation bless, preserve and save them all in heaven.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

The Minister's Wife.

"And are we to expect nothing of a minister's wife?" said Miss Lane in a very subdued voice.

"Nothing more than her duty as a woman. If she have qualities that will give her a leading social influence, and have time to spare from her home duties, which are always first, she ought to let these qualities become active for good. But no more can, with justice, be required of her than any other woman in the congregation. Your contract for service is with her husband and not her; and you have no more just claim upon her time, nor right to control her freedom, than you have over the wife of your lawyer, doctor or schoolmaster.

"If you think my services absolutely essential to the prosperity of the church, just state the amount of salary you can afford to give, and if, for the sum, I can procure a person in every way as competent as myself to assume the charge of my children and household, I will take into serious consideration your proposition. Beyond this, ladies, I can promise nothing.

"I could wish," she continued, in a lower voice, "to number you all as my friends. I have come among you only as a stranger seeking no pre-eminence, but desiring to do my duty as a woman. The fact that my husband is your minister gives me of right no position among you, and gives you no right to demand of me any public service. If my husband fails in his duty, admonish him; but, in the name of justice and humanity, do not establish any supervision over me. Let my private life be as sacred from intrusion as that of any other woman. This I have a right to demand, and will be satisfied with nothing less."—Woman's Magazine.

"What do you think of that artist who painted cobwebs on his ceilings so truthfully that the hired girl wore herself into an attack of nervous prostration trying to sweep them down?"

"There may have been such an artist, but never such a hired girl."

Your dealer in lamp-chimneys—what does he get for you?

You can't be an expert in chimneys; but this you can do. Insist on Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass" whichever shape you require. They are right in all those ways; and they do not break from heat, not one in a hundred.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

The Universal Language.

A vigorous writer in the London Contemporary Review claims that "the world is passing into the hands of the English-speaking races. Already the English tongue is becoming the lingua franca of the planet. Already the territories over which the laws are made and justice administered in the language of Shakespeare and Bacon exceed in wealth, in extent, in the number of their populations, and in the limitless latent possibilities of their development, all other lands ruled by all other nations on the earth. In a hundred years, unless the progress of this marvelous transformation is suddenly checked in some manner as yet inconceivable, the English speakers will outnumber all the men of other tongues in the world." Not only so, but English ideas are becoming as universal as English speech; the English alone "have escaped the curse of universal military service;" they alone "have learned to combine liberty with law"—in short, the "future of the world is English."

This accords with what Sir Edwin Arnold said to President Harrison the other day. In urging the appointment of five Americans and five Englishmen of high character as a Permanent Board of Arbitration for the settlement of all matters of dispute—not a bad idea, by the way—Sir Edwin said: "We are practically one people, with destinies alike, and we can not afford to be at variance. I hope to see our two countries united and dictating the peace of the world. Then we will have the world speaking our language—the language of Shakespeare." Yet there are those among us who object to laws requiring that English be taught in the public schools. All children in the United States should be compelled to learn English—rather, their parents and guardians should be required to see that the children are taught it.—Christian Standard.

"I'm giving my people some plain preaching these days." So the brother said, and so he thought. But he had mistaken plain preaching for scolding. A member of the congregation remarked to us the same day that his pastor had given them a big scold five weeks long. Plain preaching is one thing. Scolding is another. People know the difference.

Industrial Growth of the South from 1880 to 1892.

From the annual number of the Chattanooga Tradesman we clip the following:

Taking the statistics published in regard to them, and the other full figures of production in regard to some industries, and after carefully considering the large mass of evidence before it, The Tradesman is able to give the following figures of production by industries for 1880 and 1892:

Alabama	$ 50 249,242	$ 13 565,504
Arkansas	27 749 796	6 766,159
Florida	11 645,919	5,516,418
Georgia	72,800 598	36 440,348
Kentucky	138,516 971	65,423 877
Louisiana	63 926 897	24 005,183
Mississippi	20 813,756	7 518,802
North Carolina	47,868,371	20 095,037
South Carolina	42,154 015	16,738 008
Tennessee	79 576,124	37,074,886
Texas	51 211 456	20,709 928
Virginia	75 391,869	51,786,992
West Virginia	76. 55,041	22 867,126
Totals	$729,778,934	$340,791,892

There is an improvement of 114 per cent. It is most marked in Arkansas, where the lumber product alone far exceeds all the manufactures of the State in 1880; in Alabama, where the increase is nearly four-fold, and where the iron turned out by the furnaces exceeds the total product of ten years previous; in South Carolina, thanks to the development of the cotton goods industry: in Tennessee, where there has been a great increase in production in iron, and indeed in almost all kinds of manufactured goods; in Texas, where the growth of the State in population has given vitality to a number of industries.

Without doubt the most wonderful remedy for pain is Salvation Oil. It sells for 25 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Mr. C. P. Huntington has donated $100,000 to the free library at Westchester, N. Y.

The House Committee on the eleventh census have adopted a resolution declaring in favor of a permanent census bureau.

Arrangements are being made for a grand reunion of California pioneers, generally known as "Forty-niners," at the Columbian Exhibition next Summer.

The Pope has decided to establish a permanent apostolic delegation in the United States and has nominated Mgr. Satolli, now in this country, to be the first delegate.

Members of the Appropriations Committee have under consideration a proposition to abolish all pension agencies for the payment of pensioners and the disbursement of this money from the Treasury directly by means of checks.

The total value of the crops of the United States during 1892 is estimated at $3,000,000,000, of which the largest item is $750,000,000 worth of hay. The animal products, including meats, dairy products, poultry and eggs and wool, are placed at $965,000,000 more.

The continued cold weather has increased the suffering at Homestead, Pa.—the scene of the late strike—and it is stated that nearly 300 people are on the verge of starvation. Contributions are still coming in, but the aggregate amount is so small it will not procure the bare necessities.

There has been a rapid advance during the past few weeks in the price of pork and packing-house products. Barreled pork has advanced practically to $20 per barrel, while cut meats have advanced to 9½ and 11 cents per pound. The scarcity of hogs is the main cause of the advance.

The next session of the Trans-Mississippi Congress is to be held at Ogden, Utah, on the second day of May, 1893. The object of this congress is to discuss and to bring before the national councils at Washington matters and measures especially concerning the vast region west of the Mississippi river.

The Edna Rice Mill, at Mermantau, Acadia parish, La., was destroyed by fire on Jan. 15. Four warehouses, the rice mill, eight cars of coal, 3 000 barrels of clean rice, four freight cars, the mill's office, and a lot of mill supplies were totally destroyed. The mill was valued at $55,000, and insured for $37,000.

Mr. Boatner has introduced into the House a bill to authorize an increase of national bank circulation by allowing banks to receive from the comptroller of the currency notes based upon the deposit with the United State treasurer of State bonds and the bonds of municipalities having over 100 000 population.

The executive committee of the Southern Railway and Steamship Association at a meeting, held in New York City, discussed ways and means for securing special legislation in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, South and North Carolina exempting the railroads in those States from taxation, at least for one year. The straightened circumstances financially of the railroads in these States is urged as the reason for this movement.

FOREIGN.

A band of robbers set fire to a temple in Kam Li, Shin Hing district, China, in which the inhabitants had fled for refuge, and in the confusion which ensued about two thousand men, women and children were burned or suffocated.

The St. Petersburg government is about to cancel the decree prohibiting Russian railway companies from buying material abroad. The iron and steel trades of Germany expect to immediately benefit from the revocation of the decree.

Pope Leo is said to be greatly interested in the situation in America and desirous of putting an end to the ecclesiastical differences existing there. With this purpose the Pope is preparing an encyclical to the American episcopate advising harmony and union.

The Panama Canal scandal is still under investigation in Paris. Recent developments tend to strengthen the cause of the republic, as the revelations made implicate persons belonging to the opposition. It is now evident that men of all parties are involved in the frauds.

Driven to desperation by the futility of their strike, which promised to result disastrously to the men engaged in it, several hundred of the miners at Portmund, Germany, made an attack upon the overseers and the men who refused to quit work. A fight resulted between the gendarmes and the strikers, in which the latter were repulsed and several of their leaders captured.

The opposition is now beginning to admit that the army bill has a fair chance of passing the Reichstag. It is generally conceded that the chancellor's speech before the Reichstag committee was a most powerful and skillful plea for a united action on the part of all the German parties in the matter that involves the safety of the fatherland. His speech was an appeal to the patriotism of the country, and, notwithstanding the statements made by some members of the Reichstag, it is believed that it will not have been in vain.

Real Merit

Is the characteristic of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it is manifested every day in the remarkable cures this medicine accomplishes. Druggists say: When we sell a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla to a new customer we are sure to see him back in a few weeks after more—proving that the good results from a trial bottle warrant continuing its use. This positive merit Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses by virtue of the Peculiar Combination, Proportion and Process used in its preparation; and by which all the remedial value of the ingredients used is retained. Hood's Sarsaparilla is thus Peculiar to itself and absolutely unequaled in its power as a blood purifier, and as a tonic for building up the weak and weary, and giving nerve strength.

SKINS ON FIRE

With torturing, disfiguring eczemas, and every species of itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, crusted, pimply and blotchy skin and scalp diseases are relieved in the majority of cases by a single application, and speedily, permanently, and economically cured by the CUTICURA REMEDIES when the best physicians, hospitals and all other remedies fail. To those who have suffered long and hopelessly, and who have lost faith in doctors, medicines, and all things human, the CUTICURA REMEDIES appeal with a force never before realized in the history of medicine. Every hour every expectation awakened by them, has been more than filled. Their success has exceeded the wonder and admiration of physicians and druggists, familiar with the marvelous cures daily effected by them. They have friends in every quarter of the civilized world. People in every walk of life believe in them, use them, and recommend them. They are in truth the great skin cures, blood purifiers and humor remedies of modern times. Sale greater than the combined sales of all other skin and blood remedies. Sold throughout the world.

WHITTIER'S DEATH.

BY S. J. FOXWORTH.

Thou art not dead, sweet singer,
Nor silent is thy song—
But grosser sounds that linger
Our cold, dull ears doth fill.

. . . . . .

The broken urn but moldors
And mingles with its dust,
When cold the spark that smolders
The spirit wings its way.

And we our eyes are bending
On earth that nothing holds
Of him whose love is blending
With love of those who mourn.

For he in realms higher
Now wears a victor's crown,
And sings the praises, nigher,
Of Him "who all things gives."

Fresh burns the fire, glowing,
That filled his breast with zeal,
Whose magic power—none then knowing—
Has wrought a nation's change.

In sweeter measures flowing,
His heaven born thought doth move,
'Mong flowers' ethereal blowing
Lives in their fresher bloom.

No more of Misery's weeping
His verse divine doth tell,
'Tis Joy's sweet story sweeping
Love's golden chords above.

His soul doth drink the pleasures
That here he longed to taste;
More perfect now it measures
The love of Christian grace.

TALMAGE—EPWORTH LEAGUE WORK.

Our city was recently visited by Dr. Talmage, who delivered his famous lecture on "Big Blunders." Though the night was very disagreeable, he drew, perhaps, the largest pay audience that has assembled here for some time. In spite of falling rain and splashing mud, the approaches to the doors of the Gospel Tabernacle were early thronged with a multitude bent on seeing and hearing the great preacher. After some considerable delay the doors were finally opened, and the huge auditorium was quickly filled. After a brief introduction, the lecturer began, and for one hour and twenty minutes talked plainly, practically and pathetically about the common every-day affairs of human life. Nothing very profound (nor, in fact, anything extremely original) could be discovered in what was said; but the charm of the speaker lay in the ease and beauty with which the prosaic details of home and business life were made to take upon themselves new meaning, and glow with a halo brighter than that with which they are usually invested. Really, from a single hearing, one would almost be forced to conclude that this is the source of Talmage's power as a public speaker. His voice is far from ideal; his gesticulation is by no means graceful; his dramatization is most frequently too intense to be thoroughly effective. Yet, in spite of these drawbacks, the people hear him, and hear him gladly.

Aside from all the rules of the schools and the arts of the rhetorician, there seems to be something else that is necessary in order to make an influential appeal to popular assemblies. The ideal has long exercised a potent influence over men's sympathies and aspirations; but the actual, under the skillful manipulation of a master, can be made just as powerful in awakening feeling and stimulating action. He is the true orator that can take the unattractive and commonplace, and transmute them into the beautiful and inspiring. This power must, to a great degree, be accorded to Talmage; and, however much regret we may have as to some other characteristics of the man, yet, in this phase of his development, he is surely worthy of study from all who aspire to be public speakers.

Nashville is justly regarded as the centre of Southern Methodism. Here our books and periodicals are printed, our mission work transacted, our Bishops meet in annual convocation, and our great university has its seat. In such surroundings it is to be expected that all new developments in our church economy will present a most favorable showing. And, so far as limited observation goes, it can truthfully be said that Methodism here is not a whit behind in taking hold of and developing the Epworth League idea. All the churches are represented through their young people in this work. Of course, the system, as put into practice here, is not ideal. Nashville, though so full of Methodism, is hardly heaven as yet. However, there are some features of League work prominent in our city, the study of which may be of profit to other organizations.

To begin with: One of the good moves on foot here is what is called "the Nashville Conference of Epworth Leagues." This is an organization composed by uniting all the different Leagues in the city. It is the great trunk of which they are the individual branches. It is but a particular application of a principle so widespread in our day—union ensures strength. In this time, when everything from the sedate lawyer to the messenger boy has his co-operative association, it is high time that those who follow the profession of being Christians should do likewise. This Union League has its own officers and time of meeting, assembling once a month. To make the idea all the more helpful, and, at the same time, to evince its Methodistic pedigree, it itinerates, like our Conferences, from one place of hospitality to another. This gives each League a chance to "entertain" about once a year. Thus there is being supplied continually a fund of inspiration for the work as a whole. These meetings are opened with devotional exercises of an attractive character, after which a short report is heard from each League represented. In addition to this, there is usually a paper on some live topic by a live member. Then, too, a short musical program is frequently given. By these simple means the leaguers learn each other's names and faces, become interested in each other's work, and thus are brought into fuller sympathy and more hearty co-operation with the general advance of the cause.

Directing our minds now to individual Leagues, we shall note one or two characteristics. Several of our stronger bodies have recently developed a very good idea in regard to how to extend their membership. One of the attractions they offer is from time to time to give an informal social in some private house, or their meeting-room, to which all, especially the young people of the church, are invited. This has a good effect. Besides engendering a stronger feeling of mutual helpfulness on the part of members, it exercises an appreciable influence on the roll of membership. Of course, the "attractions" offered on these occasions are all legitimate. A short program of music and recitations, followed by some slight refreshment, and interspersed all along with social conversation, are the means employed to make strangers and visitors feel at home.

This attempt to develop the social element of our young people is one of the most important features of League work. The church to-day is dying of seclusion in some quarters. Not the seclusion of monasticism, so dominant in early ages, but rather the seclusion of nineteenth-century pride and self-satisfaction. Anything that will bring people out of themselves and their own selfish interests is, at its heart, Christian, and should be accorded the largest sympathy and co-operation. This is one of the tendencies that Epworthians are taking in our city, and their example is surely worthy of emulation.

TEECEE.

Jan. 14, 1893.

The Lost Is Found.

To the Brethren of the Mississippi Conference:

You remember that on the eve of adjournment of our session at Natchez the Missionary Board, in paying off the brethren who had served us during the year, discovered that $132.25 was wanting to complete the payment even on the meager basis of 82½ per cent. of the appropriations earned and allowed. There was no time for tracing the error, while one of our faithful brethren and the widow of another had been practically left out because the funds were exhausted, down to a few dimes and nickels. The trustful and hasteful brethren authorized the treasurer to negotiate for an amount sufficient to meet the demand, and take same out of this year's contributions. Of course, all this unexplained caused various comments and surmisings. Very naturally, as the bald fact of an apparent deficit was all we could announce on the floor. You can easily guess that it gave me, and the one or two other brethren who had sole charge of the fund, no little anxiety. A similar thing had never occurred in our experience. We knew the money had not been swallowed by any of us. We knew also that there had been unusual confusion in the receipts given and taken ad interim by some of our worthy presiding elders. My own change of postoffice—that of a number of others concerned—with noticeable tardiness in the mails, united to prevent my tracing all the errors until last night. We have now accounted for every nickel of the puzzling deficit. Most of it had been overpaid to several different brethren through the double confusion of presiding elders' receipts missing, and the fact that considerably less than was expected had to be paid to the brethren. This prevented their discovering the mistake at once. As much as $113.15 has reappeared in this way. Again, Conference asked of us $17.50 for printing the Minutes. This had been taken out of our treasury (tin box) after the money had been carefully counted, and found to tally with the figures received and reported by the various districts, and the one-half of anniversary collection due the domestic fund. And on this count we based the amount to be paid on each appropriation at 82½ per cent. After this $17.50 had been taken from our fund, the per cent. should have been lessened by one-half of one per cent. Though this sounds like a trifle, yet a moment's calculation will show that on the full amount appropriated, $3 475, one-half per cent. foots up $17 37½. So we had proceeded on the basis of 82½ per cent. till we had paid all but two out of thirty-one missionaries. Now, this sum of $17 37½ added to the amounts overpaid, $113.15 (and returned), plus the little surplus on hand, $1 75 in change, foots up $132.27½, the full amount supposed to be lost, with 2½ cents to spare for postage.

Now, brethren, let's make the "application" in exhortation. Those who serve our missions and all presiding elders should receive and disburse our missionary money according to regular business ideas, giving separate receipts for each transaction.

Secondly. The rule of the Board should be adhered to, and no brother paid more than sixty per cent. of his appropriation prior to the meeting of Annual Conference.

Thirdly. Our Conferences should never attempt to rush through two days' work in half a day, as was tried at Natchez, Monday morning, Dec. 18, 1892. A political gathering would hardly have been excused for such undue haste. We ought to quit such ways, or call ourselves a "mass meeting" instead of a "Conference." I blush (mentally) whenever I think of God's cause having been treated with such disrespect.

Lastly, and above all, let all the preachers in charge take collections for both foreign and domestic missions early, and as often as needful, for securing the full amounts, and an excess if possible.

Respectfully submitted.

J. P. DRAKE,
Sec. Miss. Conf. Board of Missions.

Edwards, Miss., Jan. 18, 1893.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. D. Gaskins, Montgomery, La., Jan. 17: "Owing to sickness in my family, we did not get moved into the parsonage until Jan. 10; and on the evening of the eleventh, about 7 P. M., a great many of the good people of Montgomery called to see us, and showed their appreciation for their preacher and his family by bringing a lot of nice things, such as ham, flour, sugar, rice, butter, towels, tablecloth and napkins, and also a nice dress, a pair of shoes, with some other nice things for the wife of their preacher, for which we return many thanks, and pray that God's richest blessing may rest upon them, and also upon the editor."

Rev. F. M. Williams, Tryus, Miss., Jan. 16: "I see from last week's ADVOCATE that in some of the charges in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference they have had storms, cyclones, and hail. But my people have not intimated that they desired or expected any notice in the ADVOCATE of their donations to the Providence parsonage; therefore, I did not publish the Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year turkeys received at this parsonage, and the wagon-load of sundries from Georgetown, and sacks and baskets from others who live in the vicinity of the parsonage, and no thunder. But I will say this is my third year on the Providence circuit, and both the financial and spiritual outlook are encouraging."

Rev. Isaac L. Peebles, Enterprise and Stonewall: "We reached this work time enough for service on the first Sunday of the new year. This work consists of three appointments—Enterprise, Stonewall, and Mayerhoff. Stonewall is three miles south of Enterprise, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, and Mayerhoff is four miles north of Enterprise, on the same railroad. We are domiciled in the most comfortable parsonage in which we have ever fortuned to live before. During Bro. J. W. Chambers' pastorate here a new cooking department was added, which makes the parsonage complete in comfort and convenience. In these respects it has been most thoroughly tested since our possession of it. We have had expressions of appreciation, in one form or the other, from the people, and, of course, that is encouraging to us. Please pray daily, that we may be able to do much work this year, and, too, that we may do it well."

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jan. 20: "We are moving off nicely on Caseyville circuit, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference. Our first quarterly meeting was held on Jan. 14 and 15. All the churches were well represented, and a liberal salary fixed by the stewards for preacher and family, and nearly one-fourth of it paid. In church finances our people are moving off well. Our presiding elder was with us in fine trim, spiritually and physically. He gave us two splendid sermons; presided with dignity and grace over the Quarterly Conference, which was one of the best this writer ever attended. The good Lord was with us in Quarterly Conference as well as in the preaching of the Word. Now, if stewards and others will co-operate faithfully with the preacher in the work, with God's blessing upon our labors, we shall expect good spiritual results."

F. M. Glass, Sallis, Miss., Jan. 14: "Permit me, through your columns, to express our regret for the loss of our worthy pastor, Rev. R. M. Evans, who has served us for three years, faithfully and profitably to the church and community. He is a close student, faithful pastor, and a fine preacher, full of energy, very prompt in the performance of every duty—a pastor loved and respected by all. I heartily congratulate the people of McNutt, who have so fortunately secured his services for the ensuing year, and will say, that if they will co-operate, he will sustain himself, and all will be profited by his presence with them. We cordially welcome his successor, Bro. W. D. McCullough. It was our pleasure to hear him deliver his first sermon on this work to a good and appreciative audience—all, indeed, highly pleased. He is an excellent preacher, and, in every sense of the word, worthy. We predict for him an abundant harvest, and, with the co-operation of the church, he will accomplish much good for the Master."

Rev. A. W. Langley, P. C., Ebenezer circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Jan. 20: "We think the indications all favorable for a successful year in this charge. At each church we have met with a very cordial reception on our return for this, the second year. Among the many expressions of appreciation and Christian kindness that have encouraged us since Conference, the good people of Ebenezer and vicinity surprised us with a New Year's gift of a barrel of flour, and hams, lard, rice, sugar, coffee, and other articles in the way of family supplies sufficient to last us for weeks. Really, the people are so good to us that we have almost lost sight of the fact that we are living in 'hard times;' and as to the chorus, 'worse a-coming,' we don't believe that at all. We feel unworthy of such kindness, and pray the good Lord to enable us to do more than we have previously done. Our first Quarterly Conference was held a few days ago. Dr. Sullivan was unable to be with us on account of an afflicted hand; but Bro. L. D. Worsham, of Lexington, came and preached us a sermon that did us all good, and contributed in other ways to make the occasion successful. The stewards manifested more disposition to raise than lower the assessment."

Rev. A. D. Miller, Warren circuit, Jan. 16: "Surely 'the lines are (have) fallen unto me (us) in pleasant places; yea, I (we) have a goodly heritage.' I was assigned at the last session of the Mississippi Conference to Warren circuit, Vicksburg district, and I want to, here and now, thank Bishop Granbery and the cabinet for such a good appointment. I think I have one of the best in the Conference; but don't tell the other preachers. Well, we had a good time to move, and found a very good parsonage tolerably well furnished, and met with a warm reception and many tokens of kindness from the good people of Oak Ridge. We had no storm, but a gentle breeze from several directions, and it continues to blow. I made my first trip to Phœnix (Wesley Chapel) last Sunday. I went up on horseback, as I had no buggy; but when I got there Bro. T. A. Holloman proposed to loan me his buggy, and he and Drs. Jones and Barrier, with their noble wives, just filled the buggy to its utmost capacity with good things for the family—sausage, souse, spare-ribs, back-bone, cheese, chickens and potatoes—and, to the delight of the children, a good supply of pop-corn. You probably know, Mr. Editor, how an itinerant preacher and his family appreciate such tokens of kindness, and you will, doubtless, say with me, 'God bless them, and all the good people of the Warren circuit, and everywhere!' May God graciously bless them all!"

Rev. G. R. Ellis, Zion circuit, Jan. 16: "I arrived here Jan. 6, and preached my initial sermon at Zion on the second Sunday in this month. Notwithstanding the bitter cold weather, had a large and attentive congregation. At Zion we have the best Sabbath-school on the coast; it never goes into Winter-quarters. Bro. Wm. Smith, the present superintendent, has presided over this school for the past twenty-two years, and seems to be especially adapted to this department of church work. The people here are very kind and appreciative, and have brought the preacher and his family under many obligations to them by their many expressions of kindness. They have been pounding us nearly ever since we arrived—not with their fist, but with coffee, sugar, flour, ham, canned fruit, and many other things which space forbids my mentioning here. May God bless them and help me to minister to them in spiritual as abundantly as they have to me in temporal things! Our church at Orange Grove burned on the sixth of this month. The fire originated from sparks from a locomotive. The loss is estimated at $500. No insurance. Until we can rebuild we have to worship in a small school-house near by. Ye friends of Zion, here is a fine opportunity to do good with your money. Please help us. If it is but little, we will appreciate it, and God will bless you. Send any contribution that you may feel able to send either to me at Escatawpa P. O., Jackson county, Miss., or to Mr. J. H. Jackson, Orange Grove, Miss."

Rev. L. S. Jones, Canton, Miss., Jan. 13: "As the brethren know, and as the Minutes' roll show, I was assigned by the Bishop to Hazlehurst, Miss., and Bro. I. W. Cooper to Canton, Miss. We were both delighted with our appointments, but regretted to leave our old charges. A few days after Conference, Dr. Cooper went up to Canton to arrange for his move. While there he was taken suddenly and seriously ill. He returned to Hazlehurst at once, and put himself under medical treatment. The doctors wrote to Bro. Mounger, presiding elder of Jackson district, stating that Dr. Cooper was quite ill, and would not be able to move for some time, and that it would be months before he would be able to preach. In view of these facts Bro. Cooper asked to be relieved from his appointment at Canton. This placed me in quite an embarrassed attitude. I could not go to Hazlehurst without forcing a sick brother to move, which I could not think of doing. The people of Hazlehurst were glad to retain Dr. Cooper, and give him the needed rest. After prayerful thought Bro. Mounger released Bro. Cooper from Canton, and, with the consent of Bro. Woodward, presiding elder of Brookhaven district, and through the advice of Bishop Granbery, assigned me to Canton. So this is why I am at Canton and not at Hazlehurst. The people of Canton gave us a cordial reception, and by their many kindnesses have made us feel that we are at home and among friends. In my appointment I feel that the hand of God has directed, and that the hand that has mapped out my field of labor will lead me during the year, and will crown my labors with abundant success. I am pleased with Canton, and especially with my work."

Rev. F. M. Keen, Utica station: "We regretted very much to say good-by to the dear friends at Rolling Fork and Angulla, but we have received a very cordial welcome by the newly made friends of this place; and while we would not, can not forget the old, we greatly appreciate the new. We arrived Jan. 4. Breakfast had been prepared for us at the hospitable home of Dr. and Mrs. G. E. Ellis. About noon we were escorted to the parsonage, where we were received by several of the ladies, who we found preparing dinner. This preparation was so satisfactory to the writer that he began immediately to negotiate for a cook, but they each and all informed him that they were engaged—rather, suggestive, as some of them were unmarried. We found a comfortable parsonage, and comfortably furnished, and, without going into detail, enough groceries to last us several days, and others continue to come in. One brother asked me if I was too much of a Jew to eat 'spare-ribs.' I replied that if I was, and one was to offer me said article, that I believed I would renounce my faith. He put me to the test next day. This place was made a station at the last Conference. It was practically this last year, as it was so arranged that they had preaching at our church every Sunday. The stewards have met and, for a new station, they have provided liberally for the preacher, adopted the card system for collecting finances, and are moving right out into station life. Everywhere I go I hear naught but praise to the good brethren who were my immediate predecessors. Owing to the inclemency of the weather, at the first my congregations were small, but they are steadily growing. I have made 33 pastoral visits, married 1 couple, and received 6 persons into the church. Brethren, pray for us."

Rev. J. W. Anderson, Abbeville circuit, North Mississippi, Jan. 12: "At the session of the North Mississippi Conference, held at Macon, Miss., in 1891, I was assigned to this charge by Bishop Hendrix, and at the last Conference I was reappointed to the same work by Bishop Granbery, and it pleased me well. This circuit is very large, embracing an area of more than 700 square miles, with a large and scattered membership. No preacher can do justice to so large a work. In fact, the territory I have to travel over is so large, I feel half like I was a presiding elder. But we said the appointment pleased us, and so it does. Not its size, but the good people belonging to it. Though the field is large, and some of it has been in stubble for the last two years, yet we expect, by the grace of God and the co-operation of the church, to reap a grand harvest. We had some gracious revivals last year, at which quite a number of precious souls were happily converted unto God, and many Christians blessed and established in the faith of the gospel and the work of the church. For this we thank God and take courage, and pray for greater results during this year. It was never my privilege to serve a more thoughtful and generous-hearted people than belong to this charge. All last year the preacher and his family received, from time to time, tokens of their love and appreciation. But the half was not told. For on our return to the parsonage after Conference the good things began to come in from day to day, until the day after Christmas, when a perfect storm came upon us. Who ever saw the like! Flour, meat, lard, sugar, coffee, rice, potatoes, canned goods, dry goods, and, withal, two large, nice turkeys, and many other nice things too numerous to mention. May the Lord bless these good people with all needful blessings, and help me to minister unto them in spiritual things as they have ministered unto me in temporal things! We have one of the turkeys yet, and wife says she is going to save it for our first Quarterly Conference; but I am not sure of that, for I am turkey-hungry now. If Bro. Burroughs had known we were saving a turkey for him, I expect he would have appointed our Quarterly Conference earlier. Bro. Burroughs is a new man in these parts, and we are anxious for him to come among us. May the Lord bless him in his work and give us all a successful and happy year!"

ONE AT A TIME.

One step at a time, and that well-placed,
We reach the grandest height;
One stroke at a time, earth's hidden stores
Will slowly come to light;
One seed at a time, and the forest grows;
One drop at a time, and the river flows
Into the boundless sea.

One word at a time, and the greatest book
Is written and is read;
One stone at a time, a palace rears
Aloft its stately head;
One blow at a time, and the tree's cleft through,
And a city will stand where the forest grew
A few short years before.

One foe at a time, and he subdued,
And the conflict will be won;
One grain at a time, and the sands of life
Will slowly all be run.
One minute, another, the hours fly;
One day at a time, and our lives speed by
Into eternity.

One grain of knowledge, and that well stored,
Another, and more on them;
And as time rolls on, your mind will shine
With many a garnered gem
Of thought and wisdom. And time will tell,
"One thing at a time, and that done well,"
Is wisdom's proven rule.

Biographical Sketch.

I have known more than one man through his entire life of threescore years and ten. Incidents in the life of one may interest the readers of the ADVOCATE.

A young man, whose name had the initials, "R. G.," was among the first lawyers who immigrated to Vicksburg, where I lived. He had supporting patronage among such lawyers as Sharkey, McNutt, Foote, Prentiss, Holt, Marshall, Yergers, and others of State and National reputation.

R. G. was elected clerk, then representative, then married well, then retired to farm life with a competency, the property of his wife and his own. Thus far he was only an acquaintance whom I met at the court-house, where each had an office. For about ten years I seldom saw him; then we were thrown together by his return to Vicksburg, where he lived and died.

Becoming quite intimate, I learned items of his life, which I relate, particularly of his becoming religious. Our interviews were frequent, continuing until his death. The purport was, "the more he had everything he could wish, the less satisfied he was with life." Carrying out plans, or changing them; always failing to accomplish his purpose, or dissatisfied when successful. His was active, but restless and unhappy; no one could tell why. He knew the reason after he accepted the Scriptures as the source of his knowledge. He read much without being instructed, because not interested, and not interested because he had no object of study. I suppose religious thought was objective to him until he became subjective to religious truth. The popular craze of spiritualism, in all its absurd forms, came to his notice, as several mediums professed to communicate with the dead by rapping on or under tables, or otherwise. R. G. attended a seance, at which a medium announced that a spirit present desired to communicate with a person in the room, whose brother, a young Methodist preacher, died many years ago. At his interment a little boy threw a rose, when others cast wreaths of flowers into the grave before it was filled up. "That boy is now a man and in the room; will he answer?" R. G. left abruptly. He told me long after that he recollected his young brother and all the circumstances as related by the medium.

He emigrated from that location and engaged in the duties of an active life in Vicksburg, careful not to disclose that he ever had a brother a Methodist preacher; really, he was ashamed of it. R. G. reasoned that if his brother—whom he knew to have been buried, and his body must have returned into the dust as it was—could communicate with the medium, then this may be a spiritual life, and R. G. himself, as well as all other persons, may have spiritual life after natural death. There may be, or ought to be, some account or theory of such continued existence. He had read of such, but doubted and rejected all because not having read the right one.

At last he decided to search the Scriptures, in which he was taught that "Jesus Christ brought life and immortality to light." This Book became a lamp, as necessary, around his feet, though the distant of time past and future, and of space all around, was unknown. This lamp being with him as he advanced, his path was that of the just, shining more and more unto the perfect day. Being under conviction, he attended the Supreme Court in Jackson, Miss., where the Rev. H. Leavel, M. D. (not D. D.) was conducting protracted services with revival effect. A great many manifested an interest in religion, among them Gov. A. G. Brown, Chief-Justice W. L. Sharkey, and other prominent citizens; a greater number less prominent, but of equal value to and with God. R. G. also admitted that he was a penitent and seeker of religion. This was told to me by W. L. S., R. G., and Dr. Leavel, who was preacher in Vicksburg after his two years' service in Jackson.

To digress: Dr. Leavel appointed protracted services for Vicksburg station, preached on Monday—having no evangelist as now—gave out the appointments for the next day, was seized with a chill, and requested me to attend him to his home. Here yellow fever followed the chill. We nursed him kindly; soon he died, and his body was carried to the grave. An obituary of this most effective preacher may be found in the Minutes of the Annual Conference of the year in which his death is reported.

To return: R. G., after the usual probation of six months, was received into full membership in the M. E. Church, South, of Vicksburg. His friends and acquaintances attended, causing a crowded church. Responses by the new member to questions in the Discipline were so distinct, and made with such modulation, that more than one spoke of it. I recollect it well.

He was a model Methodist, after he became one, until his death before the war—undisguised in zeal for his own growth and success, so that in some strange way he was influential for good to others. He seldom alluded to unscriptural spiritualism. Seeing its manifestation but once, reflection followed with conviction—not expected by anyone—resulting in his conversion. Confidentially, to me, he expressed his belief that all the manifestations, however varied, were of the evil one; allowed, we know not why, by the Sovereign of all power, we concluded that the devil, if not omnipresent, was prince of the powers of the air, who were sufficiently numerous to be one to each human being, and if not omnipotent, they had control of the Sabeans and Chaldeans, and of fire and wind, so that Job's children and oxen and other property were destroyed, and long after swine, in great numbers, were drowned by them in Jordan.

This may suffice of our conversation.

False Reasoning in Religion.

Whilst the truth can not be permanently injured by the errors of its advocates, and must finally prevail, yet its progress can be greatly retarded. I recently listened to a sermon on the immortality of the soul, and the speaker, in demonstrating his position, said the mind can not be the soul, for when a man is dead he has the same mind, the same brain. Now, whilst the soul is immortal, its immortality can not be shown by such reasons. The truth is, that thought, which he called the mind, is as much the result of brain action as bile is the result of liver action. The brain is the great center of the nervous system, and it is this system that supports and drives on all the powers of life. It makes the blood run, the heart beat, and through its agency medicines have their action and influence. The nervous system never sleeps during life. In sleep it not only sustains the powers of life, but manifests itself in the form of dreams. Dreams are nothing but unconscious mental cerebration. Mental philosophers and psychologists are beginning to recognize this great truth, and are now directing their inquiries to the structure and anatomy of the nervous system. But whilst all this is true, there is a characteristic of mental action which seems not to be connected with the nervous system. This principle demonstrates itself in dreams. Whilst a man is awake he can direct his thoughts to any subject he may wish, but when he sleeps this power is lost and the mind acts without direction. He dreams inadvertently. This is called unconscious mental cerebration, or, commonly, dreams—cerebration being the term for mental action generally, and unconscious cerebration denoting the action of the mind when freed from the governing principle.

This principle, whose action and control over evolution of the mind might be shown in many other instances, is called the will. And if we wish to prove its immortality, we need have no resort to dubious and doubtful argument, but, turning to the Bible—the Book of Genesis—we find that the "Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living creature."

It is this divine essence and origin which constitutes man an immortal being, an heir of immortality, and an inheritor of glory. And it is this which assures him that though this earthly tabernacle may be dissolved, yet by virtue of this, his royal inheritance, he will shake hands with the angels. And though for a season he may walk through clouds and obscure darkness, and the thorny path of a rough road may make and blister his feet, yet he is the child of a King, and soon to walk in the royal palace halls. And this hope, this belief, the world can not take away, because the world did not give it. Its origin is not earthly. And ever and anon as he "is accomplishing as a hireling his day," a strange, sweet influence comes over him, and the mellow notes of distant music softly echo near. The sound that he hears is the seraphims' song.

A LAYMAN.

"Letter from Gilderoy."

While at the Mississippi Conference, in Natchez, I attended the Conference love-feast—the first Conference love-feast I had been in for fourteen years. I was not at Conference two years of that time, and twelve years of the time it had fallen to my lot to speak to the children at the same hour of the love-feast. You hardly know how I enjoyed it. Once, during the war, I spent twelve months that I was not inside of a church, a house of worship. We had preaching and prayer meetings in camp, in the open air, under the shade of the trees and by our camp fires, but I missed the house of worship. I shall never forget the feeling that came over me as I entered the church door and saw the house full of worshipers. A whole troop of old associations rushed into my mind and the tears streamed down my cheeks, and I could not refrain from saying, "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts! My soul cryeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord." I felt much the same way in a Conference love-feast. It is no great wonder to me that people, particularly the older people, sigh for the old things, the old songs, the old ways and the old meetings. They call up old associations and carry us back to old scenes. The young, who are living now, will, when they begin to get old, sigh for the meetings we have and the songs we sing now. It always has been so and always will be so. The young need to be patient with the old, and the old need to be patient with the young. Their tastes differ. I am free to confess to a liking for the old songs, those that my mother and the good people of my boyhood days used to sing. I am just as free to own to a great love for the class meeting and the love-feast. If for no other reason, I like these because they grew into me while I was growing, and they became a part of me as I was coming to be myself. They have gone into the woof and warp of my being. As you know, I have no gift of song; but when they strike off on one of the old songs, "I fall in, tune or no tune," as Bishop Kavanaugh said he would do when the redeemed hosts began their chorus of praise to the Lamb. I can't help it. These songs move me and inspire me—some of them fire me up. I go back to old Smyrna and live over again. Nothing hardly that we sing now gets into me like, "How happy every child of grace who knows his sins forgiven." Mother used to sing that by snatches hour after hour while busy about her house-work, and Uncle Newton Davis, our old class leader, always sang it when everybody got in tune in our old-time class meetings. I see the cards and the fleecy rolls and the spinning wheel and the long-drawn thread, and mother as busy as a bee pouring out her soul in praise to God. I see the old log church, its wide fireplace, the plain clapboard pulpit, the puncheon floor, the backless slab seats, the company of devout worshipers, and I hear the hearty amens and the loud hallelujahs of praise to God. I do not want to go back in fact to those old days, but I do love to go back to them in memory, and live over them in memory.

At the Conference love-feast I heard mostly the hopes and aspirations of the young and younger men. I wanted to hear of the battles and victories of the old men. A few of them—perhaps, a duo proportion—spoke, and their words were a feast to me. That love-feast was meat for forty days or longer. It will be a green spot—another starling—to me as long as I live. I do hope it will not be so long again till I am in a love-feast with my preacher brethren.

GILDEROY.

A Tribute to Dr. Abbey.

All the readers of Dr. Abbey's "Christian Cradlehood" will remember how strongly he insisted on obedience to parental authority. This to him seemed to be the basal rock on which the family government was to be built. He said a child's education began when it was six months old, and, if both parents worked in unison for the good of the child, it could be taught to grow up "in the way it should go" from that age even on to a perfect Christian life without knowing evil by experience. He contended (if I remember rightly) that obedience was religion. A child that obeyed instantly without question or hesitation had as much religion as a grown person who had been converted, obeyed and was perfectly submissive to God's will. There may be many who think this an impossibility; but if Christian parents would consider the great responsibility of their wise or unwise rules of family government, there might be a great awakening on this important subject.

Rules and rules have been made and broken because the first and best rule was never kept, and that was the rule of obedience. If this rule was laid down and made the focus of all others, it would seem an easier task to enforce every other line of conduct in the right direction. One who never read Dr. Abbey's "Christian Cradlehood" said, "Had I not read Dr. Abbey's articles in the ADVOCATE, I should never have thought much about the religion of childhood consisting in obedience to parents, or regarded its importance."

Most parents, and especially mothers, excuse their non-performance of their duty in this respect on the ground of their great love for their children; but if they would only reflect on the consequences of this indulgence, and the spiritual damage they are entailing upon their offspring—which will be fatal according to the extent of it—they would as soon administer poison to their bodies as to refuse or neglect to enforce entire obedience to their commands.

Surely all Christian parents hope and pray for the conversion of their children. Are those who do not followers of Christ? If we do that, and our prayers are sincere, we are very apt to do all we can to bring about "the consummation so devoutly to be wished," and not that which would tend to thwart an answer to what we try to believe are prayers. Proper obedience to good parents is as naturally followed by proper obedience to a good God as that it is natural that a stream should enlarge as it flows to the sea. A lady of some experience and mother of two children said she could not recall a single instance where children were taught exploit obedience. Shall we drift with the current or shall we stem the tide?

How Do We Sing?

Spirited and heart-felt congregational singing is to religious worship what air is to smoldering fire; and, as literal fire is fanned into flame by coming in contact with the air, in like manner a flame of love is kindled in our hearts by singing with a spirit, having our minds and hearts in tune with the sentiment expressed in the hymn. The Psalmist David says, "Sing aloud unto God, our strength; make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob." If we desire to praise God in song, we can do so only by entering into the spirit of the author of the hymn. If, while singing, our minds are engaged in trying to regulate and modulate our voices with a view of catching the ear of the audience, it is purely a lip service, and can not be acceptable to God, whom we should praise in song as well as in all other devotional exercises.

Brother, sister, friend, when we join in sacred song, let us lift up our hearts in joy and gratitude to God, to whom all possible praise is ever due. Let us not keep silent because others are more gifted in music than we. It may be that our voices are somewhat discordant and shattered; yet, if we raise them in solemn devotion to God, they will ever fall in pleasant strains upon the ears of heaven's choristers.

"Children of the heavenly King,
As we journey, let us sing;
Sing our Savior's worthy praise,
Glorious in his works and ways."

"Sam Williams: A Tale of the Old South," by W. S. Harrison.

Such is the title and authorship of a new book issued by the Southern Methodist Publishing House about the first of December, last. Mr. Editor, have you read this book? The publishers say of it: "We are mistaken in our estimate of this book if it is not received by the public with distinguished favor."

Knowing the man, and having read the book, I am prepared to endorse this high commendation of the publishers. The preface is a success, brief and to the point, giving a good sample of the author's style and purpose, and creating a desire to read the book. The story of the South, on a well-regulated plantation of the olden time, is well told. Three characters are clearly presented—the slave owner, the laboring white man, and the negro. You see the "old-time darkey" in his cabin, in the kitchen, in the cotton field, and at "de mestin'." You hear him sing, hear his lingo, hear him shout, hear him preach, and see him on occasions "patting juber" in "the quarters." The two other types of the old Southern life are brought out in strong relief. The style of the author is concise and perspicuous; his language easy and natural. In some of the descriptive portions of the book an idyllic undertone of poetry mingles with the prose of the writer, reminding one of Ike Marvel's "Dream Life," or "Reveries of a Bachelor." In several chapters the author "outruns his race and time, and carries his reader into the midst of things not dreamed of before." Reading these chapters, I found such resemblance to Edward Bellamy's book that, in meeting our author next day, I asked him if he had read "Looking Backward." He replied, "Not until 'Sam Williams' had gone to press."

The average reader would hardly take the author to be a Methodist preacher. He is, nevertheless, our greatly esteemed W. S. Harrison, of the North Mississippi Conference. He is a writer of fine descriptive powers, a moral philosopher without cant, and a political economist of progressive ideas. His book merits the thanks of all lovers of this Southland, and should find favor with the public generally. Many will read it with pleasure, and, having done so, will be prepared to relish another book, on the "New South," expected soon, by the same author.

New Theory as to the Rum Power.

On the basis of supply and demand, it is usually supposed that it is the purchase of liquor which supports the saloon. Admitting this in one sense, in another Frank J. Sibley, in the Union Signal, denies it, and insists that it is the employing men who use liquor, which is chargeable with the final responsibility. He concludes:

Let the temperance and Christian business forces of this nation unite, firmly as the rock, on this policy:

1. No employment for drinkers unless they will immediately and unconditionally pledge themselves to forever abandon the beverage use of liquors.

2. Constant vigilance to detect those who are not honest and faithful to the pledge.

3. Summary dismissal for all who break the pledge.

What would be the result of such a policy rigidly adhered to in the Christian business world? Four-fifths of all the drinking employees would take the pledge and faithfully keep it. In all the history of the temperance work of the world there has never been offered the drinker an inducement so strong, so continuous, so imperative as this policy for his reformation.

The adoption of this inducement, on which daily bread depends, would brighten homes and hopes long shadowed by the drink-fiend's brooding presence; it would feed the hungry and clothe the shivering children of poverty; it would close the doors of a hundred thousand dram shops in six months; it would put out the fires in half the breweries and stills; it would bankrupt the rum treasury in a year.

One may say: Prohibit saloons in State and Nation, and you accomplish all this and more. This is true; but State and National prohibition can only be purchased by long and wearisome political battles. Those battles must be fought. The army of prohibition voters must mass solidly and force the divorce of the liquor power from the protection of Church and State. But suppose a general who had marched his army up to the intrenchments of a powerful foe should be informed that one flank of the enemy's army was unprotected. If he neglected to send an army corps or a brigade to attack that flank he would be court-martialed as a coward, or dismissed for incompetency.

Against this policy of non-employment of drinkers the liquor lords have no defenses. It is a dormant power lying long unused in Christian hands. In this age of rum-shop arrogance and aggression it is a crime against Christianity to longer neglect to bring this mighty engine into action on the rum enemy's flank.—Western Christian Advocate.

Our readers may not be especially interested in the announcement that the racing season has closed. But they may have an interest in knowing how much money has changed hands as a result of the races, and from the statements put forth in the daily press, we are able to tell them the result in this State of New York. We quote from the itemized statement in the New York Times, and the figures are wholly trustworthy, as the amounts are registered by the bookmakers. The result shows that there are thirty-seven men who have won not less than $10 000 each, the greatest sum won by one sporting man being $156,948, and the smallest $10 155. The aggregate winnings of these thirty-seven men amount to $1,284 700—one million two hundred and eighty-four thousand seven hundred dollars—giving an average of $39 722 each. Besides these, there are 100 men who have won less than $10,000 and not less than $1,000. The total of these winnings is about $370 000. The amounts below $1,000 are not given, but supposing them to amount to not less than $250 000—and probably they exceed that—and we have the enormous sum of $1,901 700—nearly two millions of dollars, won and lost at the races during the present year, embracing the Spring and Fall seasons. Now, when we reflect that this is all the result of betting, that the money won by these men is lost by others without any value received therefor, and that this great sum represents only the race-course gambling in one State, and we have a suggestion of how enormous this evil has become. And then, in reply to the miserable subterfuge that all this racing is for encouraging the breeding of horses, be it remembered that these amounts do not represent any award of premiums by county or State fairs for speed, which is a legitimate method of encouraging horse-breeding, but stand solely for betting, for the worst form of gambling. And let it not be forgotten that these gains represent equal losses and impoverishment and the ruin of hundreds and thousands of young men throughout the country who have imagined they could acquire an easy fortune by putting their brains against "the stables"—professional gamblers who know all the tricks of the track and who bet to win. How long this awful business will be encouraged by the State we do not know. It is pure perversity, it is the wildest folly to enact laws declaring losses by bets to be uncollectable while pool selling is permitted as it is. New York stands disgraced before the appalling statistics of the race-track, while our prisons and reformatories are telling witnesses of the crime and vice fostered by this particular species of gambling—of the souls they ruin. How long, O Lord, how long!—Christian at Work.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Jan. 29, 1893.

BY REV. WM. H. LAPRADE, D. D.

The Spirit of the Lord.

Zechariah iv. 1-10.

TIME.—B. C. 52t.

PLACE.—Jerusalem.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." (Zech. iv, 6.)

The central thought of our lesson last Sunday was purity; that of to-day is power. As Joshua, the high priest, was chosen to represent Israel as first impure and then purified, so now, and appropriately, Zerubbabel, the prince, is chosen to represent the medium through which the power of God should be made known.

Zechariah represents himself as having fallen asleep after the vision of Joshua. The angel, who had departed, soon returned, and another vision, the fifth of the series, was granted to him for the instruction and encouragement of the builders.

As the sinfulness of the people had led to doubt, so now the weakness of the people led to discouragement. Two things needed especially to be recognized: First, that God's purpose did not rest on their strength. Secondly, that all power comes from God.

Vers. 1-3. The Jews were familiar with this symbol. The prophet would at once associate it with the candlestick of the tabernacle, even if in doubt as to its significance here.

The Candlestick is the Church itself; not the Temple, but the Church within the Temple, and for which the Temple was to be built. The spiritual Church was to be restored. The bowl, the reservoir for the oil, from which distribution is made through the pipes, suggests plentiful supply. The oil is the symbol of the graces of the Spirit, particularly of spiritual power. The pipes—seven to each lamp—indicating plenty—are channels of communication. The two olive branches—for (see ver. 12) Zechariah discovers that they are branches, not trees—are Joshua and Zerubbabel, appointed by God as principal channels of power and grace, through whom the sacred oil is poured into the bowl for distribution.

Vers. 4, 5. The prophets saw the objects, but did not read the lesson of them. The question of the angel seems to indicate surprise, but may be simply to emphasize in advance the importance of the truth to be taught.

Ver. 6. The difficulties in the way of building were many and great. The Samaritans were bitter in their enmity and would surely attack them. No doubt the wisdom of seeking aid, human aid, had been suggested. They themselves were weak. Captivity had weakened them, selfishness in building up their fortunes at the expense of the unfinished Temple had further weakened them. What could they do?

"Not by might, nor by power. Not by your own power, not by the power of any human arm or brain. "But by my Spirit." All power dale back to spirit; God is the only ultimate force. But that is not the only meaning, nor here the principal one. The thought here is that this work of temple-building and of restoration of spiritual worship is of God's appointment, and that he will accomplish it through those whom he has appointed if they are obedient. Furthermore that no other than the Spirit of God can accomplish this spiritual work.

Ver. 7. Since God's power is to put forth in behalf of Zerubbabel, all difficulties are swept away; a pebble or a mountain, what would either be in the path of the Lord of Hosts? The finishing touch, the headstone, will surely be placed, while prayer for the continued grace of God shall mingle with the shouts of joy.

Vers. 8-10. This prophecy was fulfilled; its fulfillment justified the words of the angel. The "eyes of the Lord" beheld the Temple complete and he rejoiced in the work.

Only spiritual force can accomplish spiritual results. Any organization calling itself a church, and depending on any power except the Spirit of God is essentially "of the earth, earthy." There is no world-saving influence in it, and its membership can not "grow in grace."

God works through men, so long as men are obedient. "Obedience is better than sacrifice."

No task is too great for him who draws his strength from God; provided God appoints the task.

Would you do good work for Christ and humanity? The question then is not "Are you learned, or rich, or strong, or wise?"—but "Have you faith in God and do you keep his commandments?"

The average annual decrease in the national debt of the United States during the last decade exceeded $100,000,000; the decrease per capita of combined national, state, and local debt during the same period was from $60.73 to $32.37, while other statistics show that the value of property assessed for taxation increased nearly while from $17,000,000,000 to $25,500,000,000, or 50 per cent., indicating a reduction of public debt and an increase of wealth for the country unprecedented at least in modern times.—Good Roads.

Celia Jones Waller.

On Monday, Jan. 2, I received a telegram from Rev. K. A. Jones, of Crawford, Miss., saying, "No hope for my daughter Celia; come down to-night." In response to this sad message I went the same night to Crawford to find our dear Bro. Jones, his wife and the children who were at home in deep distress, for the messenger had already come, and the gentle spirit of their lovely Celia had passed away. As I sat with the stricken family, the sorrowing father said, "We find comfort in the thought of her complete preparation for the change."

She died on Tuesday, Jan. 3, 1893. Appropriate funeral services were held in the Methodist Church on the next day (Wednesday), conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Barclay, of the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. D. L. Cogdell, of the North Mississippi Conference. From the church the body was borne to the cemetery and laid to rest, "asleep in Jesus" till the resurrection morning. I have seldom seen a whole community so touched as by one common grief as were the kind people of Crawford by the death of our young and estimable sister Waller.

Celia Jones, daughter of Rev. K. A. Jones, of the North Mississippi Conference, was born in Starkville, Miss., March 30, 1866. She was baptized in infancy by Bishop W. M. Wightman; was converted and joined the Methodist Church in her girlhood at Black Hawk, Miss., under the ministry of Rev. J. S. Oakley. On June 30, 1891, she was united in marriage to Capt. G. P. Waller, of Crawford, Miss., with whom she lived happily until her death.

Intelligent in mind, attractive in person, and amiable and gentle in disposition, she was greatly esteemed and beloved and made many friends among those with whom she associated. Firmly grounded in her religious principles, she adorned, by consistent living, her profession of faith. In all the relations of life she was kind, affectionate and true; a loving daughter, a gentle sister, a devoted wife. To her many native graces of mind and heart were added the adornments and culture of a high order of education. She was a graduate of the State Normal College at Nashville, Tenn. After completing her collegiate course, she spent some time in the useful occupation of a teacher. A few short weeks before her death she had moved into a new and beautiful cottage home planned by her own suggestions, and built by her fond husband. Thus pleasantly situated in the midst of friends and loving kindred, and happy in her marriage and domestic relations, she had much to render life joyous and hopeful. While we wonder at the mysterious providence that removed her thus early from surroundings so calculated to gladden her present life, and render her future bright with promise, we may yet find consolation in the thought that she has entered upon a far better inheritance, even the heavenly Canaan in our Father's kingdom above. Among the Shadows.

Life has its surprises of sorrows. It is not always true that coming events cast their shadows before them. No. Often Sorrow's touch is as quick as the touch of an angel. Christ came into this world to soothe the sorrows of others, and yet he was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He would make a Paradise for man, though having his own Gethsemane.

The itinerant's life is spent in lifting the clouds from human pathway, and while brightening the homes of others he is arrested by the sorrows that come upon his own home. The Father so loved us that he gave his only begotten Son, is only understood in its depths of love when child-life in the home has departed.

The itinerant, in common with all mankind, has one inheritance—the inheritance of sacred places where his precious dead may sleep amid the silent watches of the night until the morning shall break on the eternal hills. Blessed places! They are suggestive of hallowed memories; and while the itinerant and the companion may leave the spot sacred to them, and no privilege given to place the flowers of early Spring-time on the grave of the itinerant's child, yet to their hearts the flowers of love will be as fresh as the dews of the morning, and as they talk in after years of the unforgotten grave, with its sweet memories which come like trooping angels, they will wipe their tears away and turn their faces in hope to the land of unclouded beauty.

The home of Bro. and Sister Mark M. Moore, of Columbia, Miss., is greatly saddened. Their son, Waldo, departed this life, Nov. 16, 1892, after a brief illness. Waldo was born in Greensboro, Ala., July 22, 1882; baptized by Rev. Geo. Banoroft, May 23, 1883, and received into full fellowship in the church, Oct. 16, 1890. Waldo was a most promising child. Apt to learn, genial, industrious, and, the best of all, he gave his heart to Christ. He said to his mother several times during the year, "I do want to be a Christian boy." The stricken father asked him if he loved God. He replied, "I do." Then the question was asked if he felt that God loved him. Instantly he replied, "Of course I do." About an hour before his departure he repeated the Lord's Prayer. Blessed child! You are forever with the Lord. The father, writing Dec. 22, says: "While I know the Lord is good in this severe stroke, yet we do miss him so much. Christmas will not be as happy to us this year as last. Earth seems darker, but—glory to God!—heaven seems brighter far than ever."

To our sister and brother we offer our sincere sympathy, and pray that the Christ who blessed the home at Bethany may bless and comfort theirs.

The Gambling Curse.

FACTS AND OPINIONS FROM MANY SOURCES.

We have a scrap book in our office that contains a partial record of gambling, as furnished by the daily press. This record shows only a tithe of the real results, but these facts are appalling facts. The following is a synopsis from this record of crimes arising from gambling during 1890. One hundred and twenty-eight persons were either shot or stabbed over gambling games. Four were stabbed and five shot at poker. Twelve stabbed and twenty-four shot over the game of craps, a game of dice much played by bootblacks and newsboys upon the sidewalk, and by fast young men and negroes. Twenty-eight were stabbed and fifty-five were shot over the gambling table, or as the direct result thereof. Besides these, six attempted suicide, twenty-four committed suicide, and sixty persons were murdered in cold blood, while two were driven insane. Sixty-eight youths and persons have been ruined by pool-gambling and betting upon horse-racing. Among the crimes committed to get money to gamble with are two burglaries, eighteen forgeries, and eighty-five embezzlements, while thirty-two persons holding positions of trust in banks and other places of mercantile life absconded. The enormous sum of $2,898,372 is shown by this same record as the proceeds of these embezzlements and defalcations. To those crimes must be added the long list of thefts, robberies, embezzlements, larcenies and defalcations which are never known except to immediate friends, or persons especially interested. —Anthony Comstock.

I hate the whole business of pool-selling. There is hardly a criminal class that is not represented amoog the men engaged in it. More young men have stood here at this desk confessing their first offense against law and ascribing their downfall to their infatuation for pool-room gambling than I would care to attempt to estimate. Actual experience has satisfied me that no form of gambling offers greater temptations to young men to take what is not theirs. It requires so little money each time that the first peculation is easily made. I would rather have a boy of mine introduced to a faro bank than to a pool-room. He would in all probability be dealing with better men, and the chance of his desire to gamble being killed instead of cultivated would be a thousand times greater. As horse-racing is conducted now, it would be well for the community to stop racing altogether. We are sending men to prison right along on account of the race-gambling craze. Homes are being destroyed and the lives of young men blighted every day in this city for the same reason. What respectable man who knows the race-tracks for what they are, will to-day take his wife or his daughter to a race-track to see the races for the pleasure of seeing them? He must sit among a lot of over-dressed women, who yell and shout like men, and who act as decent men would be ashamed to act. To seat a good woman or a young girl among the horde of hardened, gambling-crazed females who are found in the grand stands on every racing day, is an insult to the entire sex. Respectable women do go; but among the crowd of bad women and worse men they look sadly out of place.—Thomas J. Byrnes, Superintendent of Police, New York City.

In an interview in The Tribune, Dr. Chauncey M. Depew says: "A considerable proportion of failures in business and 90 per cent. of the defalcations and thefts and ruin of youth among people who are employed in places of trust are due directly to gambling. It is the one vice which seems to destroy immediately the moral sense, and to obliterate that absolutely essential quality in employer and employee, in the custodian and his cash, in the trustee and his estate, in the son and his mother's or his sister's property, fidelity to the trust, the violation of which destroys the violater and ruins the people who confide in him. I have seen in my vast employment so much misery from the head of the family neglecting its support and squandering his earnings in the lottery or the policy-shop, and promising young men led astray in a small way, and finally becoming fugitives or landing in the criminal dock, that I have come to believe that the community which licenses and tolerates public gambling can not have prosperity in business, religion in its churches, or morality among its people."

The amount of small peculation and larger stealings by bank clerks and others in position, is much greater than is generally known. The fact is evident from the report of a guarantee company, which reports that in nineteen years it had insured the honesty of about 140,000 officials, of whom over 2,000 had defaulted. Considering the fact that the company is noted for its conservatism in taking risks, this shows a sad condition of affairs. The report of the company places the blame on the prevalence of gambling in its many forms, and states that most of the defalcations were made under sudden temptation and for small sums. "It seems remarkable," it says, "that the State Legislature or municipal authorities, whichever have the power, do not take steps to stop the numerous avenues such as pool-selling, bucket shops, turf exchanges, and other openly permitted sources of inducement which are publicly held out to employees to engage in gambling—not infrequently with their employer's money." This is one obvious remedy for a state of things which must be acknowledged to be deplorable.—Public Ledger, Philadelphia.

The State prisons of New York and New Jersey are full of young men whose first downward step was taken through the gate of a race-track. They were rotten before they were ripe. Picture the grief of parents, the dishonor of families, the uncertainty of employers regarding their employees, the disturbance of business, the demoralization of the community caused by this state of things. The feeder of the race-track is the pool-room. The device enables anybody and everybody to bet without visiting the track—makes the track an omnipresent curse. In the pool-room you place your bet on such and such a horse. If that horse wins, your deposit is returned with a premium. If he loses, your money remains in the capacious till of the pool-seller. The amounts taken in are enormous. The sums paid out in prizes are comparatively small. The difference between the income and the outgo represents the profit of the pool-room. So, then, these "sports" who own and run these races are not serving the devil for the mere love of the service. They are professionally wicked. They are scientific scoundrels, whose religion is gain, and whose ritual is pleasure.—Rev. Carlos Martyn, Newark, N. J.

The "Allied gambling industries of the country" is what The Century calls the lottery, the race-track, and the gambling house, and the characterization is true and just. Those highly respectable, not to say pious, family newspapers that are publishing denunciations of the lottery on one page and "tips" on the races on another would do well to make a note of this. The truth of the matter is that these highly respectable family journals are the chief hope and strength of the gambling business at this very time.

I favor a National Anti-Gambling League to oppose the organized gambling fraternity of the country. Let in the light. Expose the bought and sold legislators who enrage every State in the Union. Arouse the ministry to rebuke the sins of the age, that all pulpits may blaze with the lightning of Sinai, "Thou shalt not steal." The church is at fault. Let us hear from our 100,000 pulpits the old, the homely moralities of the Ten Commandments.—John P. Newman, D. D., Bishop of the M. E. Church.

This gambling vice has within the past few years grown to alarming proportions, and permeated society beyond what is dreamed of by the better class of citizens. Thousands of young men are ruined, and the old and middle-aged are driven to desperation and crime through the power which this alluring vice has over them.—Hon. Warren Higley, New York.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

EPPS'S COCOA.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

BRIEFS.

"I am but one, but I am one. I can not do everything, but I can do something. What I ought to do, by the grace of God, I will."

The whisky law of this State is a very stringent one, and, at least, half of those engaged in the business here contemplate going out of it as soon as their license expire.—Clarion-Ledger, Jackson, Miss.

This has been the coldest Winter in a long time. Many rivers have been bridged without the aid of appropriations from treasuries. Nature is the engineer and builder, and water the material out of which some most magnificent cantilevers have been constructed.

A good deal is being written for the various church papers on the subject of enforcing discipline. Of course, this is an important subject, for no organization can long maintain its existence without maintaining the rules which hold it together. But we are moved to ask this question: Are those preachers who write on this subject enforcing discipline in their own charges?

Some one having asked Mr. Gladstone the secret of his remarkable activity, he replied with a story: "There was once a road leading out of London on which more horses died than any other, and inquiry revealed the fact that it was perfectly level. Consequently the animals in traveling over it used only one set of muscles."

There is a good point in that for preachers, and that is, variety of work. Take recreation in a different sort of work, and let some of that work be well-thought articles for this paper.

Bishop Phillips Brooks.

The dispatches, last Monday, announced the death of the eminent preacher and Bishop of the diocese of Massachusetts, Protestant Episcopal Church. Bishop Brooks was a native of Boston, being born in 1835. He was graduated from Harvard University at twenty years of age, and from the Theological Seminary in Alexandria, Va., at twenty-four years of age. He served his church ten years in Philadelphia, and in 1869 was called to Trinity Church, Boston, where he remained until he was elected Bishop of Massachusetts two years ago. He was the most conspicuous member of the evangelical section of the Episcopal Church, and by his moderation and evangelical bearing toward all Christians won the highest esteem of all the churches. In his death the Church has lost one of her ablest men and Christianity one of her profoundest expositors. By many good judges Bishop Brooks was regarded as the greatest preacher in America.

Ministerial Vows.

The great majority of our ministers are "elders in the church of God." The ceremony of ordination of elders is a most solemn and impressive service; so much so, that the wonder is that any minister should ever forget its solemnity or be oblivious to its impressiveness. As a rule, this rite is performed during the sitting of Annual Conferences and before large audiences of the people. In the presence of these assemblies of ministers and members and worldly people the candidates assume the ELDERS' VOWS.

After avowing their faith, "that the Holy Scriptures contain sufficiently all doctrine required of necessity for eternal salvation through faith in Jesus Christ," they promise to "instruct the people committed to their charge, out of said Scriptures, and to teach nothing as required of necessity to eternal salvation but that which may be concluded and proved by the Scriptures." The three vows after this first are but variations of the first. One has reference to administering "the doctrine and sacraments and discipline of Christ, as he hath commanded"—the other, to using faithful diligence to drive away doctrines contrary to God's Word—and the other, to diligence in prayers and studying the Scriptures and such other studies as help to the knowledge of the Scriptures. These four promises are but the detailed expressions of the great vow "to instruct the people out of the Scriptures." Here is the elder's great work, a work whose magnitude may well appal any man who looks it in the face. It is no reproach upon the "people committed to our charge," that they need instruction in the divine things contained in the Holy Word. Ignorance in these things is so evenly distributed, that the preacher who takes it for granted that his people need no instruction therein, begins a course of ministry whose power and efficiency will be greatly crippled, and his success will not be such as it should be. The minister, by his office and vow, is naturally supposed to be "learned in the Scriptures," and the people as naturally look to him for instruction in the Scriptures. They have not the facilities and opportunities for study that he has, and their daily cares and labors tend to draw their minds away from such study. The people, then, offer a large and inviting school, really waiting and wishing for instruction from the man of God.

Our vow is made that we will instruct them, teach them. Now mind you, not to teach them our fancies, or dreams, or reveries. Those things may be very beautiful, and we may clothe them in choicest words and deliver them with all the ornamentations of elocution, and yet be outside our vows. Neither have we vowed to teach our people science, nor philosophy, nor literature. These are excellent things, and the minister who has opportunity to make himself familiar with them and fails to use it, such failure should be written down to his shame and condemnation. But these are also not included in our vows. And if we instruct our people in these things, as some ministers seem disposed to do, we are not doing the thing we promised to do. We promised to teach them the doctrines of the Scriptures.

The efficient teacher is the one who knows what he teaches and how to do it. The efficient instructor in the Scriptures is the one who knows the Scriptures and knows how to apply its teachings to the exigencies of those taught. Our office and vow, then, commit us to a diligent and persistent study of God's Word. In that Word we learn what to teach and how to teach. In that Word we have not only the revelation of the divine mind and will concerning the people committed to our charge, but we have the divine record as to the wants and woes and sins of our people, and also directions in regard to leading our people up to the full storehouse of divine mercy and grace, where all sin will be pardoned and woe relieved and want satisfied. We learn from the Scriptures that God and our people are far apart, and we also learn how to bring them together that God may be honored and the people saved. Such teaching—teaching which saves—includes the banishing of all erroneous and strange doctrines from the minds of our people and "ministering the sacraments and the discipline of Christ, as the Lord hath commanded." And to do this effectually, there must be a "laying aside the study of the world and the flesh" and an earnest and continuous study of the Book, using always such other studies as will "help to the knowledge of the same." The great work of the elder—that which he has vowed to do—is to study the Word of God in order that he may be fitted to teach the people committed to his charge. And let every elder who reads this be reminded that by his vow and ordination he is a teacher, and that he need not go beyond his text-book for a theme.

The only other difference between the deacon's vow and the elder's vow is that the elder promises to "set forward quietness, peace and love among all Christian people, and especially among them that are or shall be committed to his charge." And what minister of Jesus will not do this? If he has the "mind of Christ," this he will do with all patience "as much as in him lieth."

We have thus called attention to the solemn vows which, as ministers, we have taken, not only as a reminder that they are upon us, but to get them freshly upon our consciences, that we may realize anew these fearful obligations and feel our insufficiency for the resulting responsibilities, and thus be driven with an earnest seeking to the Holy Spirit, who has called us to this ministry and by whose baptism of power only that ministry will be made effective. God help us all.

A Great Agent.

We presume all our pastors are by this time settled for the year, and have entered heartily into their work. As ministers of the manifold grace of God, we ought to use every lawful and available agency in our work of ministering to others. Among the most efficient agents for good, it is now conceded by all thoughtful persons that the church paper occupies a prominent place in the first rank. The reason for this concession is found in the following eleven points which we copy from an exchange:

1. A good religious paper makes Christians more intelligent.
2. As knowledge is power, it makes them more useful.
3. It leads to a better understanding of the Scriptures.
4. It increases interest in the spread of the gospel.
5. It places weapons in the hands of all to defend the truth.
6. It affords a channel of communication between brethren.
7. It throws light upon obscure questions of practical interest.
8. It cultivates a taste for reading among parents and children.
9. It awakens interest for the salvation of souls.
10. It gives the more important current news of general interest.
11. All this is furnished at a very small cost compared with its value.

This being the case, a pastor who induces his people to read the church paper, not only benefits them, but enlarges his own sphere of usefulness and becomes the means through which a large revenue of praise accrues to the Lord Christ.

We trust, then, that all our pastors will use all earnest endeavor to place the ADVOCATE in reach of all their people. Speak of it in private and in public. Arouse your people on the subject of religious reading. Preach on the subject, and thus awaken in the church a conscience on this point of vast importance. Don't be discouraged, but work away with a will, and your efforts will eventuate in a large success.

The Sunday-School Superintendent.

There is no office in the church of greater importance than the office of superintendent of the Sunday-school. There is no officer who is in a position to exert a larger influence over a greater number of young and impressible minds and hearts than the superintendent of the Sunday-school. He has an opportunity and privilege to make impressions for life and eternity which very few have. He stands in a position which an angel might covet. He can wield a power of which an angel knows nothing. The formative period of immortal souls is in his hands, and the symmetry or angularity of the characters of his scholars will show the impress of his hands forever. What a man he ought to be! How wise and tender! How firm and strong! The Epworth Herald thus sketches the true superintendent and his methods:

His smile is like a sunbeam. His voice sympathetic and winning. He does not pose as an orator. Prays in short meter. Is not fidgety or cross-grained. Never indulges in personalities. Is generous and frank. Calls every boy and girl by name. Has won the confidence of teachers utterly. Is the pastor's right-hand man. Has special regard for poor folks. Conducts a teachers' meeting that draws like a blister. Makes few rules, but sees that they are kept. Does not say go, but come. Does not work the bell too hard. Has no mercy on the lesson loaf in the school. Induces everyone to kneel in prayer. Does not hire the children to come by giving prizes. Magnifies the importance of personal influence. Often holds a ten-minute "after service" to see if some scholar is not willing to give himself to Christ. Rejoices more over the conversion of a little boy or girl than he would if he had made a worldly fortune. Blessed man! We wish we could multiply him by ten thousand!

Are you a superintendent? Then read the foregoing and "go thou and do likewise."

On the Wing.

We are all interested in the prosperity of Millsaps College. The people of Mississippi are trusting their boys to us, and their trust shall not be betrayed. A faculty of picked men, each a specialist, gives us ready access to the ear and mind of the pupil. The prophecies of Bishop Galloway and others are almost realized at this early date. One hundred and fifty-two matriculates in a Methodist college marks an era in our church history. From the north and south, the east and west, they have come—a fine, manly body of students.

We had the pleasure of listening to the boys sing, and of praying with them and for them. Dr. Murrah introduced us as agent of the college. How well they listened! How willingly they responded! By their efforts $100 was added to the endowment fund, over $70 of which was out of their own pockets. We all sang, "Praise God," etc. What a vote of confidence was this in the president and faculty of Millsaps College!

The new term will soon begin. Send on your boys. Dr. Murrah will give you full information.

JOHN W. CHAMBERS,

"A Limited Pastorate."

While some of the laymen in our church have been calling for an indefinite pastorate, and that through the columns of our paper, some laymen in the Presbyterian Church, through the columns of the Christian Observer, Louisville, Ky., are calling for a limited pastorate. Several articles have appeared in that excellent paper on this subject, one of which was embodied in an article from one of our correspondents last week. The last number of the Observer contains two articles on the same subject—one for and the other against a limited pastorate. It seems a little curious that laymen in different churches should advocate each other's systems rather than their own. It reminds us of the story of two brethren—one Baptist and the other Presbyterian—having a controversy on church polity and doctrine, which resulted in the Baptist turning Presbyterian and the Presbyterian turning Baptist. Perhaps it shows that no system is so perfect that it can not be amended. We commend to the consideration of those among us who favor an indefinite pastorate these points made in the Observer by the Presbyterian layman who advocates a limited pastorate in his church:

The only solution of this question seems to me to be this: Give our presbyteries absolute right to place and displace preachers. That we have good preachers, with good churches and good salaries, no one can deny. And that we have good preachers, with poor churches and poor salaries, no one can deny. Have we not poor preachers in both places? But when it comes to our preachers of note you can not find one except in our cities, and with good paying congregations. Would it hurt the big men to preach to a country church for a year? Why, no; it would do them good. And then it would be very beneficial to send some of our moderate men to the cities for the same length of time.

Here is another advantage in putting this matter under charge of the presbyteries. There are churches in our presbyteries without pastors solely because they can not get a two-thousand-dollar man for about six hundred dollars. The churches and pastors being under direction and supervision of the presbyteries, such churches would be expected to take and support what the presbytery should send them. But you urge that maybe a certain church could not support a man with a family. Then group the churches.

Still another advantage: I believe, should this system be inaugurated, more young men would come into the ministry in our church. Under the present state of affairs who can censure them for being slow to come into the ministry? What assurance have they of a charge after their license or ordination? But with the presbytery, under which they are training, to place them, even with a very small salary, would give them encouragement and a chance to make a little reputation.

Brethren, give this subject some thought. Don't get fretted about it, but think soberly—yes, pray over it, and, maybe, great results will follow.

Dr. H. M. King closes a good article on "True Evolution in Religion," in the Standard, with this fine paragraph:

True evolution is not of Christianity, but of Christians into broader, more spiritual, more Christ-like men and women. Christianity has attained its growth. It came in the fullness of time. It is the highest thought of God, and the ultimate expression of that thought, in reference to human redemption. It is the end, the bright, consummate flower, the perfect manhood of revelation. There is no further evolution of Christianity, except the evolution which it works in men, in the regeneration of their hearts, and in the development, enlargement, purification and sanctification of their lives. Not how can we change it, and adapt it to the supposed requirements of modern thought and philosophy, but how it can change us, and work within us its mighty transformations in character and in life, is the all-important, the supreme question. The only evolution about which we need to concern ourselves is the evolution of a saved and sanctified personal character. That is progress which will commend our faith in the eyes of men and angels, which will be well-pleasing to God, and which will contain the promise of the final attainment of the lofty and perfect goal of humanity, "when we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

NOTES.

Push the battle vigorously every day.

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself."

A genuine revival is the best cure for dissensions in a church.

Do you remember that you made some very fair promises on the first of January? How about keeping them?

The greatest sermon is the one which influences the greatest number of people toward a practical religious life.

The baseness of the refusal to do what God wills can only be measured by the loftiness of the privilege to which he calls us.

The greatest prayer is the one which opens the golden gates of heaven and lets a stream of glory down into the hearts of the worshipers.

If adverse circumstances come upon you, don't try to become resigned to them. Not a bit of it. Rise up like a man and conquer all such circumstances.

The little town, with one thousand inhabitants and five or six churches in it, may be appropriately denominated "church-ridden," and will soon become "poverty-stricken," spiritually.

If our three hundred pastors would give one day specially to the work of securing new subscribers and renewals of old ones, wouldn't that day's work tell? Verily it would, for nobody can equal preachers in work when they set their heads that way.

An old disease has at last been named. Preachers have been familiar with it a long time, but did not know what to call it. It has been named locomotive-ataxia, and "takes possession on Sunday of men whose legs are perfectly usable every other day in the week."

They are planning great things in Chicago for the World's Fair. They will have a hotel that covers ten acres of ground and will contain over a thousand rooms! Those people believe in humanity. Does the church show as large faith in the gospel? Why not plan largely this year for God and expect the plans to be realized?

The wide space of empty pews between the preacher and his congregation gives evidence as strong "as proofs of Holy Writ" that something is wrong in pew or pulpit. The wrong may be in both. Neither congregation nor preacher should be satisfied till the space is filled. That empty space is the herald, if not the sign, of death. Let the congregation move up to the front and the preacher rekindle the fire in the pulpit. That empty space is like an open grave and nothing can pass beyond it. The revival, edification, all gracious results are hurled there.—Nashville Advocate.

The wise man of a thousand years from now may ponder upon the curious fact that in the nineteenth century a delusion of the old and exploded American was that almost any man could "run" a newspaper or keep a hotel. When the distinguished absence from many hotels of the art and science of landlordism is remarked and when so many newspapers are recognized as promising candidates for graveyard distinction, the conclusion seems justified to us of the living present that men who can do right well in either pursuit are not sufficiently in it.—Epworth Herald.

In the M. E. Church papers there is a good deal being said about popularizing their Review. A brief note in Zion's Herald, from a Western man, seems to us drives the center out of all such talk:

"When will we Methodists get over the notion that no venture in journalism pays unless the financial income exceeds the outlay? Is there no value to the development of high thinking among our preachers? There ought to be one publication in the church that is not run for the purpose of swelling the financial exhibit of the publishing agents on the profit side."

Men in the pulpit and pew are courting popularity, and spend more thought and time on personal reputation than on the salvation of the world. Great fame and gaping crowds of hearers, so called, is counted "success." Success in what? Success in what?—Notoriety? Notorious for what?—A great preacher? Great in what?—Newspaper fame; what is it worth? What does it cost? For what does it stand? How much self-denial, how much cross-bearing, how much humility, meekness, brotherly love, labor among the poor, real honest effort for the salvation of sinners? How much Christ-likeness is in it all? Popularity! The very name is almost sickening. It is coming to be the synonym of humbuggery.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

One result of Sunday opening is thus stated by the Standard:

It was after a long and persistent agitation that the opening of the Metropolitan Museum, in New York City, on Sunday, was secured. It is said to be attended largely, but at greatly increased cost to the institution. The Sabbath visitors make additional attendants and guards necessary, and these, of course, are deprived of their rest on that day. With additional expense has come diminished revenue. One legacy of $150,000 has been lost. It is claimed that four hundred subscribing members have withdrawn their annual subscriptions, and the source of income has failed greatly.

So it did not pay in that case to openly violate the law of God in regard to the Sabbath, nor will it ever pay in any case.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

The postoffice address of Rev. G. R. Ellis is Escatawpa, Miss.

The best combination for any individual is mental culture and heart religion.

Monroe, La., is to have a $250,000 cotton mill and a new railroad from El Dorado, Ark.

Hattiesburg, Miss., had a $4,000 fire last week. Three houses were burned. Insurance, $2,000.

The Water Valley Progress says there is only one bar-room now doing business in that little city.

A hotel, store and livery stable at Bunkie, La., were burned Saturday. Loss, $15,000; insurance, $5,000.

Mr. Cleveland has been fortunate enough to have about a dozen Cabinets made for him, and he still seems to be serene.

Every saloon keeper in Jackson, Miss., excepting two, has been indicted by the grand jury for selling liquor to minors.

The largest steamer afloat is now in port here. She is 465 feet long, and will carry 20 000 bales of cotton. This is her maiden trip.

By popular vote the parish seat of Bienville has been removed from Sparta to Arcadia. The majority in favor of Arcadia was sixty-five.

Owning to the illness of Dr. I. W. Cooper, Bishop Granbery has changed Dr. Cooper from Canton to Hazlehurst, and appointed Rev. L. S. Jones to Canton.

We rejoice in the fact that some of our papers seem to be on a good boom, notably the Alabama Advocate. We wish Bro. Armstrong and Wells abundant success.

Magnolia, Miss., was visited by a destructive fire last Saturday night. The railroad depot, a four-story hotel and several business houses were completely destroyed.

Bishop Keener left home last Friday for Memphis, to dedicate our new church in that city last Sunday. We know that the Memphians had a grand sermon on that day.

Don't suffer yourself to grow lukewarm in the enjoyment of the social meetings of your church. There is where the fires begin, and there is the place to keep them glowing.

Our special friends, W. C. Dibrell and wife, of Nashville, Tenn., called at our office last week. Being absent from our desk at the time, we failed to see them, much to our regret.

It is said that efforts are being made to induce the New York Presbytery to refrain from further prosecution of the Briggs' case. It is feared that worse results will follow further prosecution.

A fair audience greeted the Rev. Mr. Howse at the Methodist Church last Sunday, it being the occasion of his first effort at this church. His sermon made a favorable impression upon the congregation.—Franklin Advocate.

The temperance people of Columbus, Miss., have made a gallant fight against the sale of whisky in their town, and have the sympathy of all the lovers of good order. May they win a glorious victory!

Push the canvass for your paper, brethren and sisters. You can hardly do a work that will wield so many good influences as that work which succeeds in enlarging the sphere of the paper's circulation.

Our congratulations are hereby extended to our esteemed confrere, Dr. R. Q. Mallard, editor of the Southwestern Presbyterian, upon his recent marriage. The Southwestern will sparkle now more than ever.

Bishop Hargrove publishes in the Nashville Advocate a round of District Conferences in Texas, beginning Feb. 25, and ending April 12. Between these dates he will hold fifteen Conferences. Is he a hustler?

One of the meanest things a mean man can do is to take a newspaper several years without paying for it, and when asked to liquidate his indebtedness to refuse to pay and go off and make a cash subscription to another paper.—West Point Forum.

The Nashville Advocate says, "A movement is on foot to raise $50,000 for endowing the Holland N. McTyeire Professorship" in Vanderbilt University. That is a much better kind of monument than a polished stone shaft.

Dear brethren, please shorten a little, just a little, your accounts of poundings, storms, breezes, etc. We have a great many readers who don't care a straw—whether "Demosthenes was an Athenian or a Dutchman."

The autopsy of Gen. Ben. F. Butler showed that he died from the rupture of a blood vessel of the brain. The doctors declare his brain weighed four ounces more than that of Daniel Webster, which was the largest on record.

We have received the Minutes of the first session of the Japan Mission Conference; also the Minutes of the seventh session of the China Mission Conference. These annuals show the growth of our church in those far-away regions.

Monroe, La., will soon be rejoicing in the brilliancy of her electric light system, which the Times, of that city, says is nearly completed.

The dispatches state that the Republic of Honduras has granted a charter for fifty years to the Louisiana Lottery Company. At the expiration of its charter here, Jan. 1, 1894, the company will move "bag and baggage" to Honduras.

Bishop and Mrs. Galloway entertained the Rev. Dr. W. A. Spencer, of Philadelphia, Pa., at tea yesterday evening. Dr. Spencer is a distinguished minister of the Northern Methodist Church and secretary of its Board of Church Extension.—Clarion-Ledger, Jan. 10.

A prominent member of the Mississippi Conference writes: "I'm going to work for our ADVOCATE very soon." This brother is a safe leader for all the other members of our patronizing Conferences to follow, and especially in the direction indicated. Let there, then, be a simultaneous push all over our territory for "our ADVOCATE."

Those who attended the Methodist Church, last Sabbath morning, enjoyed a rare entertainment. Rev. Simpson Jefferson Tubby, a full-blood Choctaw, occupied the pulpit. Three years ago Mr. Tubby did not know his letters. He could not read his native language nor speak English well. He had not been converted to the Christian religion, was as near the savage state as any Indians are in Kemper county, and played ball and gambled on the game for a living. But he was happily Christianized, taught to read and write, and was recently authorized to travel and preach by the Mississippi Conference. He was here to raise money to build a church for his people, and received a neat sum from his congregation. He will begin school at Millsaps College next Fall, and, after being educated, will be sent as a missionary among the Indians of this State and of the Territory.

In his style Mr. Tubby is simple and unaffected. Almost wholly untutored, his unfettered earnestness and the simple story of his own wild life and his subsequent conversion were more telling than many an erudite sermon. He spoke in both English and Choctaw, also read the Bible and sang hymns in the two languages.—Kosciusko Star.

A Great Power.

The following statistical article, which we copy from the Epworth Herald, will give our readers some idea of the power of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

The Columbian edition of the Methodist year-book is a handy thesaurus of dates, facts, figures and statistics, which every Methodist home should possess. Many of the items reveal a marvelous growth. They convey valuable information about the labors of our church, which all wide-awake leaguers should acquire.

There are 132 Annual and Mission Conferences, of which 110 are in the United States. The returns from these Conferences show that the church has 15 867 ministers in full connection and on trial, and 2,442,750 lay members, including probationers. There are 27 989 Sunday-schools with a membership of 2,679 005; there are 23 866 church-buildings, 2 873 halls, and 9 050 parsonages.

For missions, $1,282,676.01; church extension, $170,876; Freedmen's Aid and Southern Education, $116 796; Sunday-schools, $25 375; tracts, $23,629; education (Parent Board only), $80,664 81; American Bible Society, $35 047; woman's foreign missions, $205,342 15; woman's home missions, $104 631.50. Grand total, $1 105 037 47, which makes an average of 85⅝ cents for each member.

There are two Book Concerns having six depositories. There are twenty-five official publications, while the number of semi- and un-official periodicals may be said to be almost legion. Some knowledge of the gigantic work of the Book Concern may be gained from the amount of sales for the quadrennium, ending Oct. 31, 1892, which was $7,633,685 91; this was an increase over the former quadrennium of $712,942 75. This increase is hardly intelligible. Think of an average monthly increase of sales in the past four years of $14,852 97⅝, or a daily increase of more than $400. During these four years the agents paid out of the profits for Conference claimants a total of $430,000. For the Conference of 1893 they have declared a dividend of $125,000. This is certainly a magnificent exhibit.

Only in 1887 was organized the first deaconess home in America. Now there are in the entire church thirty-two homes and 249 deaconess workers.

The movement for the establishment of hospitals under the control and patronage of our church was begun in 1884, and has proved a worthy beginning of the second century of American Methodism. It has advanced with satisfactory results. Now Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago and Omaha have buildings and equipment creditable to the spirit and ability of the church.

Our church has always been a consistent patron of learning, although our reputation was to the contrary. Methodism began in one of the greatest universities of the old country and was carried over Great Britain and into America by men of the largest learning and highest classical attainments. It started to bless its children with the best and highest in spirit and mind. Although Cokesbury is no more, 195 schools of learning, including universities, colleges, seminaries and schools in mission fields, with an enrollment of 40,026 are a monumental evidence of Methodism to place within the reach of its promising youth the best advantages for the highest and purest culture of mind and soul.

Where are the other willing hands? Brethren, sisters, let us hear from you at once. Send me $5 or $2 or $1, or less, but send me something at once.

Will not every man and woman who has a note unpaid pay it now? So near the goal and yet so far! Let every one help just now. We have met with kind words and substantial encouragement at Enterprise, Pachuta, Shubuta and Jackson.

Many of the brethren write encouraging letters. Accept the agent's thanks for your promises of help.

Remember, what we need to-day is $3 925. Send it to us that we may rejoice over the completion of our $100,000 endowment.

Japan.

Our mission force in Japan has been sadly depleted. Dr. J. W. Lambuth has fallen on the field, some have been called home by sickness, and other vacancies have occurred. Our faithful missionaries have been sorely tried this year; but the work is of God, and they have no fears of failure.

We need five men and one lady missionary to fill our broken ranks. Bro. Utley and wife, with health restored, will sail on an early steamer to the field to which they have consecrated their lives. Two men, now in the field—Bros. Bradbury and Turner—have just been accepted by the Board. We are in correspondence with others, and hope to fill every vacancy before many weeks shall elapse. Will the church pray for Japan? Will it pray the Lord of the harvest to call laborers into the ripening field?

Judge L. Q. C. Lamar.

It gives us real pain to record the death of Judge L. Q. C. Lamar, of the United States Supreme Court. He died at Macon, Ga., Monday evening, rather suddenly. He was born in 1825, and at twenty years of age graduated at Emory College. He has filled many important stations in life and attained unto his country's highest honors. A lawyer, a professor in a great university, a member of Congress, an officer in the Confederate army, a United States senator, a member of Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet and a member of the United States Supreme Court—in all these responsible positions he was distinguished for his great abilities and large wisdom and earnest devotion and unswerving fidelity to the trusts which they imposed. The whole land joins Mississippi in sorrow over her eminent dead.

Penny Helpers.

Some annoyance has been caused by the preachers in charge appropriating the money collected on the "Penny Helper Cards" to aid them in meeting the assessments for foreign missions. This is wrong. Mrs. Daisy Lambuth and Miss Kate Harlan devised and originated or adopted the idea and the cards to accomplish a specific purpose, and greatly desired that a correct record should be kept of the amounts collected with these cards. For a preacher to quietly appropriate the amount to his own collections is "approaching too near the danger line," and does not tend to shun "all appearance of evil." Strict honesty ought to be observed in these matters. Out of 133 cards distributed by me personally, only four have so far been accounted to me. Out of 40,000 cards sent out by Mrs. Lambuth and Miss Harlan, less than 1,000 have been returned.

Rev. J. F. Johnson.

Our preacher in charge of Spring Creek circuit, Rev. J. F. Johnson, died on the nineteenth instant. He had just entered the Conference on trial at its recent session, and had been at his post of duty a short while when God called his servant home. May God's grace sustain the sorrowing ones of his household!

The Siphonic Days of January.

There is a curious fact about the days at this time of the year which I have ventured to characterize by calling them the siphonic days of January.

The singular thing to which I allude is, that the days grow longer at one end, but not at the other. For fifteen days in the early part of January, when, since the Winter solstice is passed, the days should be getting longer at both ends, the sun rises at the same time each morning by the clock, though his time of setting is daily later, so that the evenings grow longer while the mornings do not. This lengthening of the days at one end gives them, as it were, a siphonic shape. During four entire weeks in January the mornings gain only five minutes in length, while the afternoons gain twenty-four minutes, so that the afternoons are about half an hour longer than the forenoons.

This remarkable phenomenon is accounted for by the changing velocity of the earth in its annual orbit around the sun, the results of which are of too complicated a nature to be explained here. The earth moves faster in its orbit as it passes its perihelion point, and is nearer the sun in Winter than in Summer, which fact somewhat lessens the cold of our Winters. The result of this changing speed in the earth's movement is inequality in the day's length and disparity between our mornings and evenings.

After the earth gets through its perihelion sweep, it moves more slowly and the days grow longer at both ends till they reach their largest length in the lofty month of June.

Somewhat similar phenomena to those above described take place during the shortening of the days in December.

So after all, our great old friend, the Sun, is by no means so staid and uniform in his ways as many have supposed, but is as tricky as if he were playing hide-and-seek at the beginnings and the ends of the days. These seeming tricks, however, are not in himself at all, but in the jaunty swoops of this little world of ours that wheels around him with ever-changing speed, a good deal like the movements of a sparrow-hawk fighting a school-boy, at whose head he repeatedly aims, but never intends to strike. What we usually speak of as the uniformity of nature is not seen in the movements of the earth. They are rather endless variations within fixed limitations, like a tune that repeats its thematic notes with innumerable variations between.

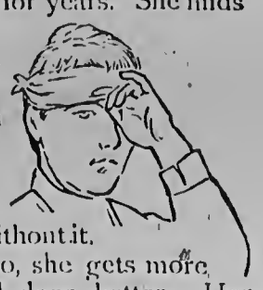
Every Woman is an Unbeliever.

She can't believe, to begin with, that Pearline can do so much. She hears that everybody is using it; finally she tries it. It does all she's heard of; it saves all that she's been told. She take comfort in using it. But She can't believe that so much can be done safely.

She consults those who have used it for years. She finds that Pearline has been tested and proved in a hundred ways; that it's harmless to hands or fabric; that it's as safe as good soap. Then



She can't believe that she ever did without it.

She has less to do, she gets more done—and it's all done better. Her clothes last longer—they're not rubbed to pieces. Her housework is easy; her time is her own. She believes in Pearline, and tells her friends about it—(that's the most effective kind of advertising).

THE SWEETEST THINGS OF EARTH.

BY EMMA C. DOWD.

What are the sweetest things of earth?
Lips that can praise a rival's worth;
A fragrant rose that hides no thorn;
Riches of gold untouched by scorn.
A happy little child asleep;
Eyes that can smile though they may weep;
A brother's cheer, a father's praise;
The minstrelsy of Summer days.
A heart where never anger burns;
A gift that looks for no returns;
Wrong's overthrow, pain's swift release,
Dark footsteps guided into peace.
The light of love in lover's eyes;
Age that is young as well as wise;
An honest hand that needs no ward;
A life with right in true accord.
A hope-bud waxing into joy;
A happiness without alloy;
A mother's kiss; a baby's mirth—
These are the sweetest things of earth.

The Parasites of Superior Women.

BY MARY E. BALDWIN.

Greatness always has its camp followers that press so closely to it in its fight with the forces of defeat that a part of the victory seems to belong to them. It is especially true of the superior woman that parasites cling to her, sometimes so persistently that it is impossible to rid herself wholly of them. Generally they belong to the class of the almost-successful, those who have missed achievement by a hair's-breadth, and so, according to one of the laws of our being, are drawn towards the one who has reached fulfillment, often through a desire to discover the secret of success and to make out, if possible, the riddle of completeness; and sometimes, alas! through a meaner purpose to be lifted somehow into the higher personality at the expense of another.

How many examples there are of the superior woman who has her parasite and seems to permit the clinging. It is a marvel to observers that she can allow the close following; but do these never imagine that possibly the two other laws, one relating to contrasts, the other to the comprehensive law of love, may govern her?

A great American novelist surprised and perhaps disgusted some who stood in awe and admiration of his genius by seeking opportunities to talk with those who made no pretentions to literature or art, and who seemed simply good fellows of the most ordinary sort; that he would spend hours with these in seeming enjoyment of them, while refusing invitations to feasts of reason, was to them incomprehensible. But was not the great romancer in search of something more needful to him than learned disquisitions, or even flights of eloquence into his own region of imagination? It surely was the touch of the human that he craved, and he evidently wanted it in the natural way. His own mental organization was so used to the higher air that he possibly craved a breath of what is called a lower atmosphere. At any rate, he probably did not find his creative gift affected to its injury by the contact with opposite ability. So the superior woman may allow large liberties and much persistency to followers if she is truly superior. Indeed, she may gather from the parasite benefits of the kind that students do from a holiday when they go fishing with one who knows nothing of Greek or Latin, but very much of winds and tides, and the usual and unusual moods of nature.

The great law of love holds such a wide range of possibilities, the meaning and extent of which the world has only just begun to discover, that it would not seem strange that under its sway like and unlike could be held through a secret influence that would work beneficence to both. Nor would it seem surprising that through its power the woman with the trained intellect and disciplined energies should learn to have patience with mediocrity and inexperience, and in time find that while she had been lifting the parasite nearer to her own level, she has gained herself a wider outlook.

The truth is, a great mind must have its occasional vagrant longings, it must in a sense wander away from itself at times to come upon quaint, queer experiences that are innocent of what are called the opportunities of culture. If it is strong and purposeful enough, it will come back freshened and enlarged by the vagrancy. It is this sort of mind that is able to bear with the demands of the parasite.—Christian at Work.

A Good Wife.

Such a treasure had the celebrated teacher, Rabbi Meir, found. He sat during the whole of the Sabbath day in the public school, and instructed the people. During his absence from his house his two sons, both of them of uncommon beauty and enlightened in the law, died. His wife bore them to her bed-chamber, laid them upon the marriage-bed, and spread a white covering over their bodies. Towards evening Rabbi Meir came home. "Where are my beloved sons," he asked, "that I may give them my blessing?" "They are gone to the school," was the answer. "I repeatedly looked round the school," he replied, "and I did not see them there." She reached him a goblet; he praised the Lord at the going out of the Sabbath, drank, and again asked: "Where are my sons, that they may drink of the cup of blessing?" "They will not be far off," she said, and placed food before him that he might eat. He was in a gladsome and genial mood, and when he had said grace after the meal, she thus addressed him: "Rabbi, with thy permission, I would fain propose to thee one question." "Ask it, then, my love!" he replied. "A few days ago a person intrusted some jewels to my custody, and now he demands them again. Should I give them back again?" "This is a question," said Rabbi Meir, "which my wife should not have thought it necessary to ask. What! wouldst thou hesitate or be reluctant to restore to everyone his own?" "No," she replied, "but yet I thought it best not to restore them without acquainting thee therewith." She then led him to their chamber, and, stepping to the bed, took the white covering from their bodies. "Ah, my sons! my sons!" thus loudly lamented the father. "My sons! the light of mine eyes, and the light of mine understanding; I was your father, but ye were my teachers in the law!" The mother turned away, and wept bitterly. At length she took her husband by the hand, and said, "Rabbi, didst thou not teach me that we must not be reluctant to restore that which was intrusted to our keeping? See, the Lord gave, the Lord has taken away, and blessed be the name of the Lord!" "Blessed be the name of the Lord!" echoed Rabbi Meir, "and blessed be his name for thy sake, too; for well is it written: 'He that has found a virtuous woman has a greater treasure than costly pearls. She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and on her tongue is the instruction of kindness.'"—From the Talmud.

Evenings.

The lights come in early and the evenings are long and tedious or delightful! That depends entirely the use we make of them. That happy circle reads aloud while the rest listen, their fingers busy with the needle or the carving tools, while their thoughts are with the author chosen as their guide, companion and friend, finds the hours pass far too swiftly and the time for sleep come too soon. The literary coterie, discussing ancient or modern literature, poetry, art, music, are into the small hours before they are aware, and wish the evenings could be indefinitely prolonged. The solitary student, enriching his mind with the "spoils of time," would fain do without sleep altogether, if he might, and continue his studies uninterruptedly. The fireside traveler, what a luxury are long evenings to him! With photograph and atlas and engraving and books of reference he follows his leader up the Nile, or through the Holy Land, across mountains and seas, "From Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand." The discomforts of the traveler touch him not, but many of the delights of the defacto traveler are his very own.

Home would not be home without our long evenings. Darkness and frost are potent factors in the evolution of the home. Nature drives us in upon ourselves and upon each other, and compels us to companionship and assimilation, while the world without is wrapped in Winter night and Winter cold. These are precious intervals, if we improve them aright. We may knit more closely the ties of friendship and affection with those nearest us; we may reach out through the hundred-handed printing press to other times and other peoples, and garner precious truths to feed upon when Summer languors make study wearisome; we may "grow in grace and knowledge" as we make the best use of these long Winter evenings.—New York Christian Advocate.

Womanhood.

To be a woman is to be the purest and most noble of God's creatures; hence womanhood should be the study of every young girl old enough to realize the importance of the term "true woman."

A girl should so live that every action and word will go to prove her womanhood, for this only will make her a pure and noble woman—a woman fitted for the drawing-room or kitchen.

Beauty and style make not a true woman. No; for some of the most noble women are the plainest. Beauty is only skin deep, and is a very dangerous thing, for no gift bestowed upon woman is so widely abused.

A woman's real worth is estimated by the greatness of her soul and purity of her character. Women who have these attributes make the best wives and the truest mothers. Woman is the center of society; hence how great and how elevated she should be in order to have the name of true womanhood. We, as the young ladies of Zion, should hold a steady moral sway over our male associates. Men love to trust their love, if you will allow me the term, in the hands of a true woman; therefore, let us begin and make it our every-day study that will be respected by all good daughters of Zion.—Young Woman's Journal.

A Sweet-Minded Woman.

So great is the influence of a sweet-minded woman on those around her that it is almost boundless. It is to her that friends come in seasons of sorrow and sickness for help and comfort; one soothing touch of her kindly hands works wonders in the feverish child; a few words let fall from her lips in the ear of a sorrow-stricken sister do much to raise the load of grief that is bowing its victim down to dust in anguish. The husband comes home worn out with the pressure of business and feeling irritable with the world in general, but when he enters the cozy sitting-room and sees the blaze of fire and meets his wife's smiling face, he succumbs in a moment to the soothing influences which act as the balm of Gilead to his wounded spirits that are wearied with the stern realities of life. The rough school-boy flies into a rage from the taunts of his companions to find solace in his mother's smile; the little one, full of grief with her large trouble, finds a haven of rest on its mother's breast; and one might go on with instance after instance of the influence that a sweet-minded woman has in the social life with which she is connected. Beauty is an insignificant power when compared with hers—Churchman.

Pitiable Mothers.

Of all classes of people to be pitied in this world it is the mother who has a wayward daughter. As a general rule, such a calamity falls to the lot of a meek little woman, a diffident creature, who would suffer any amount of torture rather than face a scene with her unruly daughter, and thus the girl comes out victorious in every word scrimmage with the tired, patient mother. Mothers must meet unflinchingly the duties God has placed upon them, and remember that in their hands lie the future of their families for weal or woe. It is expected that they love their children dearly, but they should not be an impediment to their correcting them when they stand in need of it. In their infancy all they have to do is to cry for what they want, and the weak mother, granting it, will plant the first seeds of the evil which is to bear such bitter fruit. In girlhood the daughter soon learns that her mother's will is a matter of very little consequence; a little teasing and the point is gained. And when she arrives at womanhood—ah! then your trials begin. You begin to learn the truth of the old adage that "when your children are little they tread on your lap, but when they grow older they tread on your heart."—Selected.

"That Woman Knows God."

A humble and deeply devoted Christian woman was recently spending a Sabbath at the house of a friend. She has passed through enough in twenty-five years to make a book of thrilling interest. At the dinner table, on the Sabbath in question, she was engaged in animated conversation, recounting some of the kind dealings of the Lord with her, and while narrating these things her face was shining. There was a Roman Catholic domestic waiting on the table, watching and listening to the holy woman. Next day, after the visitor had left, the domestic said to the lady of the house, "That woman knows God—an' sure didn't I see it in her face!"

The poor Irish woman was right—she had a discerning eye. O, if every Christian were living so as to compel beholders to say, "That man or that woman knows God!"—Exchange.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

POP-CORN.

O the sparkling eyes
In a fairy ring!
Ruddy glows the fire,
And the corn we bring.
Tiny lumps of gold
One by one we drop:
Give the pan a shake—
Pip! Pop! Pop!

Pussy on the mat
Wonders at the fun;
Merry little feet
Round the kitchen run.
Smiles and pleasant words
Never, never stop;
Lift the cover now—
Pip! Pop! Pop!

What a pretty change!
Where's the yellow gold?
Here are snowy lambs
Nestling in the fold.
Some are wide awake,
On the floor they hop;
Ring the bell for the teal
Pip! Pop! Pop!

MR. EDITOR: I see a few names of persons that I know in the papers. I am a little boy nine years old. I have four brothers and one sister. Our pastor is Bro. Cornell. We all go to school together with a girl about twelve years old. Our teacher is Miss A. J. Smith. Hoping to see this in the next ADVOCATE, I remain, Yours truly, JAMES M. ADAMS.

A Foolish Boy.

BY AUNT LIZZIE.

Nellie came running to me the other day, her eyes big with surprise, and exclaimed:

"Oh, auntie, what do you think? You know Burtie, who lives down the street that little bit of a boy—well, he smokes cigarettes, and he is awful little."

"Then he will make a little man very likely if he has begun so early," I replied.

"Yes, that is what Gertie says. He steals off by himself behind the back fence and then smokes."

"Then he must know he is doing wrong and is ashamed to be seen. What do you suppose he does it for?"

"I guess he thinks it will make him look big. He wants to be a man, and he is always telling us girls what he'll do when he gets big," said Nellie.

He has begun the wrong way if he wants to grow. Tobacco will hurt his heart and his nerves. If he lives to be a man, he will be nervous, his heart will be weak, and he will not be the strong man that he might be if he had not begun this bad habit.

A school-boy died in Brooklyn only a little while ago, because he had smoked so many cigarettes. His whole body was sick; the poison in the tobacco had gone all through him. His skin was yellow, his nerves were weak, and he was so sick he had to go to the hospital. But the doctors could not help him.

He said just before he died:

"Oh, if all the boys could see me now, and see how I suffer, they would never smoke."

Santa Claus on a Journey.

"One of the prettiest and heart-moving incidents occurred," said Alvan Harding, who was in St. Louis, Friday, "as I came through from Denver to this city. I was compelled to ride through the Christmas Eve and the best part of Christmas Day, along with a crowd of other ill-fated citizens, much to my disgust and regret. In the through Pullman were a number of ladies and gentlemen, but, best of all, a widow and a pretty little daughter. I half wondered what the pretty little girl was to have for Christmas seeing that no chimney led down from the roof, but my speculations were rather vague, and I forgot the little girl to think of my own dear relatives. Christmas Eve, when the berths were let down and the passengers began to retire, I came in to look after my own. As I strolled down the aisle I saw a tiny little stocking hanging outside the berth where the little girl lay with her mother. I tell you, the effect was electrical. It brought up all kinds of strange feelings, and I added my share to the general contribution. Old Santa Claus must have been en route to St. Louis that night, for the way he stuffed and jammed that stocking full of fruit, candy, money, trinkets, and the like, and then filled handkerchiefs until they were great round balls and tied them on, was simply wonderful. It did seem as though Santa Claus had no one else in the world to take care of. Next morning I enjoyed watching the widow and the little one. They were the especial pets of the occasion, and everybody came around and said something kind to the child. But the effect on the passengers generally was the best of all. It brought them together, and every one said 'Merry Christmas,' and wished everybody else all kinds of good luck until we were all well acquainted and thoroughly sociable. I tell you, it takes little children to bind human hearts together and make the whole world one genial, happy family."—Times-Democrat.

Two Rulers.

"The Bible is so strict and old-fashioned," said a young man to a gray-haired friend, who was advising him to study God's Word, if he would learn how to live. "There are plenty of books written nowadays which are moral enough in their teaching, and do not bind one down as the Bible."

The old merchant turned to his desk and took out two rulers, one of which was slightly bent. With each of these he ruled a line, and silently handed the ruled paper to his companion.

"Well," said the lad, "what do you mean?"

"One line is not straight and true, is it? When you mark out your path in life, do not take a crooked ruler."—Christian Intelligencer.

Never Be Haughty.

A humming bird met a butterfly, and, being pleased with the beauty of its person and the glory of its wings, made an offer of perpetual friendship.

"I can not think of it," was the reply, "as you once spurned me and called me a drolling dolt."

"Impossible," exclaimed the humming bird; "I always entertain the highest respect for such beautiful creatures as you."

"Perhaps you do now," said the other, "but when you insulted me, I was a caterpillar. So let me give you a piece of advice: Never insult the humble, as they may some day become your superiors."

Learn a Trade, Boys.

I remember, years ago, when I was a very young man (writes John Coates), meeting John Roach, the great ship-builder, in his shipyard at Chester, Pa. I remember, too, what he said then about the value of a trade to the average boy.

"Young man," he said, laying his great broad hand on my shoulder, and looking at me earnestly with his keen, steel-blue Irish eyes, "next to a clear conscience, a trade is as good a thing as any young man can have in this country. You can carry it with you all your life long; you have to pay neither rent nor taxes upon it and it will help you around a sharp corner when most other things will fail."

I have never forgotten that utterance from a man who started in life—after landing in New York from Ireland—as helper to a machinist, who became the leading shipbuilder of his time, and who, up to the hour that he was stricken with a fatal illness, could take the place of any of his workmen, whether it was a man driving rivets, or an expert putting together the most delicate parts of a steamship's machinery.

Something very like what John Roach said I heard another great man, who is now dead, say. This was Peter Cooper, a man of whom American boys can not know too much, and whom they certainly can not too much admire.

"If I had my way," said the venerable philanthropist, on the occasion in which I refer, "I would give every boy a trade. Then I would have him stick to it, love it, and be good to it. If he does, it will be good to him."

How sad is the spectacle, and how forcible is the fact, which ought to be food for serious reflection to every American citizen, that very few of our American boys ever learn a trade, and as a result almost everywhere the leading mechanical positions are filled by men of foreign birth.

Why is this? Is it because our boys are less able? Is it because there are no facilities for learning trades in this country? To the last question the argument may be advanced that the trades unions lay too many and too heavy restrictions regarding the number of apprentices who will be employed or allowed. Argument admitted, and the point taken granted. But the bottom cause is Young America's "don't want to." He would rather stand behind a counter in some store or canvass for some agency or work in some factory at piece work, where he can earn more money, at first, per week than if put to learning a trade.—Epworth Herald.

A True Gentleman.

It is often said, "Boys are naturally cruel," but I do not believe it. Some boys do, it is true, find pleasure in tormenting cats and dogs and other helpless animals, but not all boys care for that kind of fun (?), and most boys have gentle hearts, though they are sometimes thoughtless.

A lady whose little girl had the misfortune to be sadly marked about the face hesitated about sending her to school, fearing the boys would make fun of her. Persuaded by the teacher to make the trial any way, the little girl was sent and timidly came into the school-room one morning after all the pupils were seated. To their honor be it said that, instead of "making fun," or even smiling slyly, every boy in the room, after a hurried, pitying glance at the marred face, quickly looked the other way, and the little one has never met with any but the kindest treatment, and has never been made to think herself different from the rest of the children. That is true politeness, and is as far removed from cruelty as anything can be. Here is another incident, told by the Detroit Free Press:

On the corner of one of the business streets of the city the other morning a shoeblack had just finished polishing the shoes of a well-dressed and gentle-appearing man. The latter was unfortunate in having a deformity which compelled him to wear a shoe on one of his feet with an exceedingly thick sole, thus endeavoring to make up mechanically for what nature had denied him.

"How much shall I pay you?" he asked of the boy.

"Five cents, sir."

"O, but you should have more than five cents for polishing my shoes," said the gentleman, tapping the thick sole significantly with his cane.

"No, sir," said the boy. "Five cents is enough. I don't want to make no money out o' your hard luck."

The customer handed out a coin, laid his hand on the youngster's head for a moment, and passed on.—Exchange.

An Axe to Grind.

Some of our readers may want to know the origin of this expression. For answer let them read this story of the immortal Benjamin Franklin:

When I was a little boy, I remember, one cold Winter's morning, I was accosted by a smiling man with an axe on his shoulder. "My pretty boy," said he, "has your father a grindstone?" "Yes sir," said I. "You are a fine little fellow," said he; "will you let me grind my axe on it?" Pleased with the compliment of "fine little fellow"—"Oh, yes, sir," I answered. "It is down in the shop." "And will you, my man," said he, patting me on the head, "get me a little hot water?"—How could I refuse? I ran and soon brought a kettle full. "How old are you? and what's your name?" continued he, without waiting for a reply. "I am sure you are one of the finest lads that ever I have seen. Will you just turn a few minutes for me?"

Tickled with the flattery, like a little fool I went to work, and bitterly did I rue the day. It was a new axe, and I toiled and tugged till I was almost tired to death. The school bell rang and I could not get away; my hands were blistered, and the axe was not half ground. At length, however, it was sharpened, and the man turned to me with, "Now, you little rascal, you've played truant; scud to the school, or you'll rue it!" "Alas!" thought I, "it was hard enough to turn a grindstone this cold day, but now to be called a little rascal is too much."—Exchange.

Rupert: "I should think the goose would get croup with such a long, exposed neck, mama."

Mama: "But she doesn't, does she?"

Rupert: "No, she doesn't, and I think I know why."

Mama: "Why?"

Rupert: "Because she's so full of goose grease."

Teasing Friend: "What makes that new baby at your house cry so much, Tommy?"

Tommy (indignantly): "It don't cry so very much; and anyway, if all your teeth was out, and your hair off, and your legs so weak you couldn't even stand on them, you'd feel like crying yourself!"

Mother (to Johnny, just back from a visit to his aunt's)—"What was your auntie doing?" Johnny—"Minding the baby." Mother—"You should say tending, not minding." Johnny—"Huh! You don't know that baby."

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys do not break from heat, not one in a hundred.

They are made of tough clear glass, clear as crystal.

They fit the lamps they are made for. Shape controls the draft. Draft contributes to proper combustion; that makes light; they improve the light of a lamp.

PACK—On the morning of Dec 25, just as the night was fading into day, and the young children were pouring forth their joyous shouts in celebration of Christmas, the angel of death gently rapped at the door, and the soul of that pure Christian mother and friend, Mrs. AMANDA L. PACK, was wafted to God in eternal peace; and as she rose from the cold embrace of death, oh! how gladly she could have cried as she looked back into the dark and windowless tomb being prepared by tender hands of kind friends and loved ones, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" She had been unwell for some time, but only confined to her bed a few hours, and yet she manifested the same patience, the same confident hope and the same beautiful resignation she had borne for fifty long years.

She was a consecrated Christian and a consistent member of the Wet Bluff Baptist Church, where she joined when she gave her hand and heart in marriage to Orlando F. Pack, in her eighteenth year; and the triumph of her departure was the glorious seal to the testimony of her patient and trusting life; and on Christmas Day, when the warning of her God called her home, she was willing, ready and longing to be with God in beautiful life Above this, the departed soul of that sainted mother and friend has crossed over the dark river of Jordan, and now smiles in joy and happiness in her Father's house. She was so true, so noble in her nature, that none "knew her but to love her," and the memory of that noble woman will be a sweet perfume lingering with us through all the coming years. Yes; few have ever passed from earth, leaving to stricken relatives and friends a sweeter, saintlier record of Mrs. Amanda L. Pack. Therefore, bereaved hearts, be calm; the battle of life with her is over, and she is at rest. Death hath only opened up a way for her spirit to reap the reward awaiting the righteous at the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Her work on earth is finished, and "she hath done what she could." Love ones, weep not for her, "for when a few surviving years have flown she will meet thee at heaven's gate and lead thee in."

C. BUDNEY GREAVES.

REYNOLDS—GARLAND PINCKNEY REYNOLDS was born in Georgia, Jan. 16, 1830; died Nov. 3, 1892, aged sixty-two years nine months and seventeen days. He was married to Miss Nancy McCormick, Jan. 13, 1852; joined the Methodist Church in Marengo county, Ala., in the year 1845; elected circuit steward at the fourth Quarterly Conference of Ouachita, afterwards Downsville circuit, in 1868, which position he filled up to his death—twenty-four years; was also a member of the Board of Trustees of Downsville circuit.

Bro. Reynolds was not very demonstrative in his expression of a religious experience, but as a quiet Christian he had his influence for good wherever he was. At love-feast or class meeting he generally testified what the Master had done for him, and that he possessed an abiding faith in Christ. His stewardship, as long as the writer knew him, was one of the best. His presence at the parsonage was a blessing—always ready to assist, ever inquiring if anything was needed, and looking after the wants of his preachers. His visits were always hailed with joy.

As a steward, Bro. Reynolds was prompt and always on hand at Quarterly Conference, unless physically disabled. The Master came and called for him. We have reason to believe that his death was triumphant.

The church has lost an able officer; the community, a faithful citizen; his family, a kind and indulgent father and companion; the pastor, a good counselor and an excellent friend. His experience on the last Sabbath he was at his own church, was that he trusted in Jesus and was trying to get ready to go.

May we all meet him in heaven!

His pastor, R. A. DAVIS.

McDOGAL—SOPHRANIA CAROLINE MCDOGAL, daughter of Rev. J. A. and Adline McDogal, was born in Itawamba county, Miss., April 17, 1876, and died Dec. 27, 1892.

She was a good, sweet-spirited girl. She was loved by all who knew her, and will be missed by all of her friends; but they know that their loss is her eternal gain. We know that the church will miss her. She was baptised when small, and has been a member of the M. E. Church, South, almost all her life. She loved the church, and did good work in the church, and on her dying bed she continued to present the missionary cause to her friends, and collected some money for the same during her last sickness.

We tender the family our sympathy, and pray that God will help them to bear these troubles. The lamp of life has gone out in this world, but will continue to burn on the other shore. J. W. ROPER, Pastor.

Nashville Advocate please copy.

HULLUM—GREEN M. HULLUM, son of Ben. S. and Mary H. Hullum, was born in Warren county, Miss., Aug. 5, 1861, and died at his home near Warrenton, Warren county, Miss., Oct. 21, 1892.

Bro. Green's illness was brief, but his suffering intense, dying of erysipelas in the head. Not being apprised of his illness in time, it was not my privilege to be with him during his last trying moments. He had been a little wild, but a year or two previous to his death he joined the M. E. Church, South, under the pastorate of this scribe, and his efforts for reform were marked and encouraging. He had great faith in the efficacy of prayer and in the infinite mercy of God, and some hours previous to his death, when he realized the seriousness of his condition, he became mighty in prayer, and left evidence of being saved by the blood of the Lamb.

He leaves a wife, three bright little children, a fond mother, quite a number of other relatives and numerous friends to mourn his loss. God be with them all! Amen!

W. M. STEVENS.

POWELL—The home of Mr. and Mrs. Powell, near Rolling Fork, Miss., was filled with sadness, Jan. 10, 1893, by the death of their little boy, JAMES J., aged two years nine months and ten days.

He was the pride of his parents' hearts, being the only boy in the family; but God had better things in store for him than a life of toil and suffering on this earth. He is now safe in the arms of Jesus, where he will wait the coming of mother, father and sisters.

May the Spirit of God administer comfort to their broken hearts, and enable them to say, "Thy will be done!" W. H. LEWIS.

WOOD—MARVIN, infant son of William R. and Mary A. Wood, was born Aug. 13, 1892, and died Dec. 23, 1892.

Little Marvin was a bright, sweet child, dearly loved by his parents and kindred. It was hard to give him up; but he was too pure for earth, so Jesus has taken him home where the little one will never suffer any more.

Mourn not, dear loved ones; your babe has gone to heaven to live with grandpa. Soon we will meet him at the pearly gates, where parting is no more. COUSIN NORA.

TURNAGE—Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to call from the Ladies' Aid Society, of Bethel Church, one of its best and most devoted workers, Sister LOU TURNAGE.

There were but few days appointed by the society for work that Sister Turnage was not among, or the first, with her ready and willing hands to work for the Lord; and not only a good worker in the Ladies' Aid Society, but in any way to serve God.

For the past year it seemed that Sister Turnage had more trouble than she could bear, losing two sons, two sisters and one brother; yet she bore it calmly, and quietly growing stronger in the Lord every day. Her departed spirit winged its flight to the far-away home of the soul, Dec. 31, 1892; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while she was endeared to a large circle of friends, who, with her devoted husband, children and relatives, now mourn the loss with hearts almost broken, and while our society is much grieved, it is only heaven's gain.

Resolved, That her life is well worthy of imitation.

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy be extended her family in their great distress for the loss of their loved one.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Baptist Record for publication.

LIFE'S OPPORTUNITIES.—Some one has said that "every face ought to be beautiful at forty;" and another that "no old person has a right to be ugly, because he has had all his life in which to grow beautiful." That is to say, life's opportunities of nobleness, of even forty years of opportunity, if well used, are enough to make so much beauty within that it can not help coming through to the surface in graceful habits of the nerves and muscles. The transfiguration of a pleasant smile, kindly lightings of the eyes, restful lines of self-control about the lips, pure shinings of the face as great thoughts kindle inwardly—these things no parent makes inevitably ours, and no fitful week or two of goodness gives them, and no schooling of the visage, either; but only habitual nobleness and graciousness within; and this will give them all. Nor does a wise man think he knows another till he has watched the quick expressions which flit across the face unconsciously. The truth will out, and in these flashing notions sometimes we catch the rascal under a handsome mask, and sometimes catch the angel where we had not looked for one.—Rev. W. C. Gannett.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Special Clubbing Offer.

THAT GREAT FARMERS' PAPER—"THE PRAIRIE FARMER"—AND THIS PAPER ONE YEAR FOR ONLY $2.50.

We are pleased to announce that we have made arrangements with the publishers of THE PRAIRIE FARMER, of Chicago, Ill., whereby we can offer that popular farmers' paper, in connection with our own. The regular price of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is $2.00 a year. The regular price of THE PRAIRIE FARMER is $1 00 a year. We will send both papers one year—52 numbers each—for $2.50. This offer is made to each of our subscribers who will pay all arrearages on subscriptions and one year in advance; and to all new subscribers paying one year in advance. THE PRAIRIE FARMER is handsomely printed and illustrated, and for more than fifty years it has been recognized as the leader of the agricultural press. It is issued weekly, filled with interesting and practical matter, and is now read in more than 50 000 homes. Its departments—Agriculture, Live Stock, Horticulture, Dairy, Poultry, Apiary, Gardening, Household, Young Folks and Miscellany—contain matter in each issue from noted writers. It is a most welcome weekly visitor. Read what some good farmers say of this great paper:

Mr. J. J. Sittler, Randolph, Missouri, writes: I am a careful reader of your esteemed paper; have been so for the last two years. It seems as though I get more interested in your weekly budget and good advertising the older I grow. I have been, and am, reading different farmers' weeklies, "worthy papers," but always come back to the old reliable PRAIRIE FARMER. It has given me much good advice, touch consoling comfort and interesting pastime, in and out of its inexhaustible treasure box of farmers' literature. It offers more help and good to the public as well as individual welfare, in and through its columns, than any other weekly paper of the same size and for the same money.

Mr. Henry Leman, Woodford county, Ill., writes: I send you my name and two new ones for the good old PRAIRIE FARMER, which I have read since long before the great Chicago fire. I have always found it a good and reliable paper, and think all farmers should read it.

THE PRAIRIE FARMER is thoroughly adapted to all sections of the country, and Southern farmers will find it helpful in many ways. We hope that our readers will appreciate our efforts in securing this great paper at so low a price. The publishers advise us that they will send a sample copy to all who so request.

All this running hither and thither, all this experimenting with merely human instrumentalities, all this talk to the effect that the gospel must be supplemented by some other and stronger agency, before it can renew the face of society, has at the bottom of it a profound and subtle infidelity. Whatever others may do, Christians can not afford to cherish such a state of mind. There is no evil that the gospel can not heal. The minister, in particular, who has lost confidence in his message, ought to seek another vocation. Standing where he does, he discredits his Lord by his unmanly cowardice. "Christ and him crucified" This only, this always, this everywhere. By this sign we have won our first victories; and by it we are to achieve all our future conquests. If we turn aside to anything else, we shall meet with disappointment, defeat, and disaster, as we shall deserve to do. —Nashville Christian Advocate.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature of Indiana fixing a penalty of $10 000 for prize fighting.

Hon. Rutherford B. Hayes, ex-President of the United States, died on Jan. 17, and was buried at Fremont, Ohio, on the twentieth.

One of the most interesting objects at the Chicago Fair will be a model of Copenhagen, with the new free harbor, quays and warehouses, as it will be when completed.

The general deficiency bill for the next fiscal year was reported to the House on Jan. 20. The total appropriation carried by the bill is $20,956,610, of which the largest items are for pensions, $14,149,437.

The faculty of Princeton has determined to give up a practice which has existed in that institution from its foundation, that of requiring the students to write out their answers at examination while under surveillance. Henceforth the young men will be placed on their honor.

Miss Winnie Davis, "Daughter of the Southern Confederacy," and her mother, Mrs. Jefferson Davis, widow of the leader of the "Lost Cause," were, on Jan. 20, among the guests of the Confederate Southern Camp, of New York, who attended the third annual banquet of the camp.

The New Orleans Bridge bill was passed in the National House on Jan. 19, with two amendments. One prohibits the Secretary of War from changing the dimensions of the bridge as fixed by the bill. The other refers to the location of the bridge within the corporate limits if practicable, or at least within five miles distant. The amendments were concurred in by the Senate. The bill will now go to the President.

It is said that a convention of the Cotton Planters' Association will be called at an early date to consider the question of a reduction of cotton acreage and other matters of moment to Southern agriculturists. As a result of the convention of last year there was a very considerable reduction of the area of cotton land, and more attention paid to food crops than in any year since the war, and the results are admitted to be of great benefit to the farmer.

All places of amusement were closed in Denver, Col., on Jan. 22. The police were forced to make the arrests by Dean R. S. Hart, of the Episcopal Church, who has inaugurated a crusade against Sunday amusements and insists upon the enforcement of the law, which has heretofore been a dead letter. The tough element of the city surrounded Mr. Hart's residence and bombarded the place with stones. The police dispersed the rioters.

The report of the sub-committee of the Select Committee of Congress on election of President and Vice-President proposes to make some considerable changes from the existing mode of election. The Electoral College is left untouched in the proposed change, and so is the State representation in the electoral vote—each State having, as now, the number of votes equal to the number of Representatives and Senators added together. But the proposal of the sub-committee would give complete representation to minorities, by apportioning the electoral vote to the popular vote. The proposed plan has also this clause: "No person while serving as President shall be eligible to election to that office, and no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President."

A new French torpedo boat, the Grenadier, built at Havre, made 24 66 knots per hour on her trial trip.

The French Chamber of Deputies has passed the estimates for public worship, having restored the original credits for the stipends of the bishops and vicars-general.

Uruguay has decided to discontinue all her legations except those in England, France, Chili, Brazil and Argentina. The salary of the President has been reduced one-half.

A body of unemployed workingmen in Brussels, after riotous demonstrations on Jan. 19, were dispersed by the police. Many baker shops were broken into and all the bread taken.

The London Times dispatches from the continent state that the cold is not abated. The Rhine is frozen from Germersheim to Bingen. The Main and Moselle are partially frozen. The Neckar is frozen from source to mouth.

Owing to the failure of the Chilian Congress to pass the appropriation bills, the public officials in Chili have received no pay for the last month. It is rumored that the government will stop work in various branches of the public service unless the appropriations for salaries are passed.

The Irish members of Parliament are looking forward with much lively interest to the explanation of the provisions of the Home Rule bill. It is stated that Mr. Gladstone trusts that the business of the House of Commons will enable him to explain the provisions of the Home Rule bill on Monday, Feb. 6.

A very important decision in relation to the insurance of cotton has been reached by the fire insurance companies of Great Britain. At a conference it has been decided to raise the present cotton insurance rates, the advance varying from 25 to 50 per cent. The new arrangement affects cotton ashore and afloat.

Emperor William, at a dinner given by him to Herr Krupp and a number of other men engaged in huge industrial enterprises, tried to talk them into adopting a better policy toward the workmen. The Emperor advised his guests to discuss the claims of the men with chosen delegates, provided the men first resumed work and remained at work pending a settlement of the matters in dispute.

Justice L. Q. C. Lamar.

There is sorrow throughout Mississippi te-day. Our harps are hanging silently upen the willows. Eyes unaccustomed to weep are filled with tears. In every home, where the sad message has flown, there is a sense of personal bereavement—the dread presence and loneliness of a vacant chair. A life dear to our hearts, and one of the brightest in our history, has fallen on sleep. A voice that thrilled with eloquence almost divine, is silent in death. The grave opens te receive an eminent Christian statesman and jurist, and Mississippi loses her most distinguished citizen—the Nation one of her truest patriots and most faithful public servants. It was the dying boast of Pericles that he had never made an Athenian weep; and surely no Mississippian has ever had occasion to blush for any ignoble word or deed of Lucius Q. C. Lamar. But his splendid genius has commanded our admiration, his magnificent achievements have challenged our patriotic devotion, and his radiant virtues have won the homage of our affections. We sorrow to-day only that his sun has gone down while it is yet day—that he falls when we seem te need him most, and when able to serve his country best. But—

"The man remains, and whatsoe'er
He wrought of good, or brave,
Will mold him through the cycle-year
That dawns behind the grave."

Born and educated in the State of Georgia, he came to Mississippi in the morning of his brilliant young manhood, and generously gave to his adopted commonwealth all the ardor of his love, the fruit of his tireless toil, and the powers of his almost peerless genius. So conspicuous were his public services, so ardent his devotion to the people who loved and honored him, and so world-wide the fame of his achievements as her representative, that his name was linked in undying wedlock to the proud name of the State that welcomed and crowned him. He followed her fortunes in peace and war, in victory and defeat, and when the night was darkest, proclaimed, with loudest voice, his patriotic love for her stainless honor, and his unshaken faith in her glorious destiny. As professor in our State University, Representative in Congress, Minister to Russia during the dark days of war, member of the United States Senate, Cabinet officer, and a Justice on the Supreme Bench of the nation, he was everywhere conspicuous and always distinguished.

His name was the synonym for pure and lofty eloquence. Not for a generation and more has there been a man among us, who could, as he, sway and compose vast audiences at will, and by the authority of his imperial eloquence compel the people to ardently adopt his principles and enthusiastically follow his policy. At times he had the classic diction of Edward Everett, and again he could rival the peerless periods of Edmund Burke. He could, on occasions, pursue an argument with the analytical precision and remorseless logic of John C. Calhoun, and then, if need be, kindle enthusiasm as with the magic wand of Henry Clay. With equal skill he could wield the light sword of Saladin and the ponderous battle-axe of Richard. For majestic utterance and forensic eloquence he had no peer in all our borders.

His was a philosophic cast of mind. He dwelt in the higher realms of thought. This gave him the loneliness, and sometimes moodiness, of genius. He studied and mastered great principles. Beneath surface facts he saw their philosophy and discovered their unerring tendency. This made a statesman of vast prescience, and a wise political leader.

He was the first Southern Representative after the war to rift the darkness of our national skies, and bring light into these despairing parallels. He caught the ear of the nation and won back her lost confidence in our patriotic loyalty. He rolled away the stone from the grave of our buried love, and proclaimed the resurrection of our national brotherhood. He reannounced the plighted faith of our severed sections, pronounced a blessing upon the happy reunion, and prayed that what God had joined together should never again be put asunder. The voice that spoke over the dead Sumner, like another prophet in the wilderness, proclaimed the day-dawn of our national peace—the cloudless sun-burst of our Federal immortality. When, with sublime passion, he declared, "If we knew each other better, we would love each other more," he rang out an appeal for peace whose silvery echoes are yet making music on both sides of the quiet Potomac.

With all of his vast learning and varied culture and profound philosophy, he was a simple, humble, unquestioning believer in the great doctrines of Christianity. He had little respect for so-called "honest doubt," and scant patience with blatant skepticism. I shall never forget a delightful evening in his Washington home over a year ago, and the cheerful, even joyous, announcement of his faith in the world's Redeemer. Some time before he had connected himself with the Methodist Church, humbly assuming the solemn vows in the presence of a great congregation.

I knew him first in my boyhood at the university, where he occupied a professor's chair, and there learned to love and admire him. He was the Gamaliel at whose feet I sat, and from whose lips I received instruction. The thrill of that flashing eye, the tone of that magic voice, the strange magnetism of that magnificent presence, filling, as he did, the broad heaven of our imagination, and the loftiest ideal of my young ambition, have lingered and inspired me for more than half a jubilee of years. He stirred many a noble impulse and set on fire many a laudable ambition. On his grave I crave the privilege of dropping a tear.

"He is gone who seemed so great—
Gone; but nothing can bereave him
Of the force he made his own
Being here, and we believe him
Something far advanced in State,
And that he wears a truer crown
Than any wreath that man can weave him.
Speak no more of his renown,
Lay your earthly fancies down,
And in the hoary Abbey leave him—
God accept him, Christ receive him."

Millionaires.

There are times in which the poor man charges the Bible with being the rich man's code, and hours in which the patrician declares it to be the fomentor of sedition. The Bible is not the book of a man or a class, but of God for the race.

Why is it exegetes and expounders speak of the parable of the rich man, as though Dives in torment were the sole portrait in the picture? Was he richer than Abraham, whose wealth made him the ally of princes, and whose hand placed in the scale decided the wars of kings? The divine wisdom and justice of the Word of God is shown in this, that the selfish rich man who lived luxuriously every day and went to hell, is in the parable brought into immediate conjunction, not with Lazarus, but Abraham, his peer in wealth and his superior in grace.

We often hear the warning, how that the love of money is the root of all evil; but seldom the Savior's exhortation to make the mammon of unrighteousness a true friend which shall receive the generous user into everlasting habitations. The Bible has no mincing words for rich men who oppress the poor; but it recognizes in the rich Barzillai, who laid his wealth at the foot of the throne when Absalom had looted the treasury, as the savior of the State. It shows us in that darkest of all days, when the Son of God hung upon the cross, a rich man of Arimathea, not awed by the dignities of a proconsul, that dared to beg the body of Jesus and bear it to an honored burial.

All the ravings of imported fanatics shall not make us, as Americans, forget that it was the broad signature of the merchant prince, John Hancock, which stood first underneath the declaration of our independence. It was the personal security of a Robert Morris that saved the liberties of our country and sent himself to a debtor's prison. Those who know the full history of the early days of our last crisis, know that until our generals could learn war our millionaires propped the tottering pillars of the state. When we look at our magnificent universities, our vast libraries, our art-museums and schools for the prophets, we should be, of all nationalities, the most ungrateful, did we not recognize the debt we owe to American millionaires in building up the mind, the morals and the liberties of the state.

The contrast which the selfish and luxurious rich man has to fear is not that with the Lazarus who lies unheeded at his gates, but with Abraham, whose thoughts are for the future of mankind. It is not the poor man's poverty which shames him, but the rich man's benevolence. A man who dies worth uncounted millions, and makes no sufferer among his fellows a sharer in his vast estate, must he, and will be, contrasted with those living fountains of munificence, whose wealth is devoted to the elevation of mankind. A rich man in these days, and in this land, who is not moved to large and generous provision for some of the many wants of the multitude, is an anachronism, is a dead tree in a living landscape of verdure and luxuriance. It does not need that Dives should put his foot upon his fellow-men to merit the doom of the condemned in the parable; his sin was not oppression, but selfishness.

It is in vain, with such examples as we have had of great hearts going with great estates, for our rich men to claim an absolute and unconditional ownership of property. As between themselves and any other citizen of the state that may be true; but as between them and their God it is most false. Neither wealth nor eloquence, nor learning, nor physical strength is given to any man without reference to moral obligations. A man died lately in Central New York believed to be worth twenty millions of dollars. He left a pittance to a hospital, and $100,000 to his jockey. In all his life he had never founded a school or an asylum for the distressed, but he had expended $750,000 in the erection of a stable. The name of such a man will be preserved only by the odium it excites. It will be preserved as physicians preserve monstrosities in an anatomical museum, to make men shudder and pray for deliverance from a like fate.

Men who remember Black Friday, that terrible Sept. 25, 1869, will not easily forget its lessons. It was not like the panic of 1837, the result of a popular and wide-spread delusion. It was not the result of any general and irremediable craze. It was the explosion of a deliberate and diabolical plot, whose sole purpose was to enrich the co-conspirators by the wrecking of the fortunes and blasting of the lives of innumerable and unknown victims. It was such a crime, under the cover of the forms of law, as can never be forgiven; and not even the death of its authors should permit it to be forgotten. There are men to-day creeping through life broken and feeble from the effects of that wreck, and youths toiling in poverty, who, but for that day, would be living in affluence. Its enormity is to be measured not simply by the suffering it cost, but by contrast with the benedictions which wealth in other hands has become to the citizen and the state. Were all wealth in such hands as this, no laws would restrain the outbreaks of popular fury; as it is, such uses of power come dangerously near imperiling the security of the commonwealth. Every such life is, indeed, a menace to the perpetuity of free institutions, resting, as these do, upon the good-will of the masses, and cemented only by the sympathies of a common humanity.

"It is hard," said Henry Ward Beecher, "to be a saint in a golden niche." The more honor, then, to those who have shown us that it is not impossible. It is a few years since we were sitting with a friend and relative, in the hush of a Sabbath evening, speaking of his increasing infirmities. He had been prospered, but the more he was blest the more he became the source of blessings. We remember his words that evening. "When I am dead," he said, "I want one class of mourners—the friendless of the city—to follow me." And amid the blessings of these, he passed to his reward. Each morning sun, as it rises now, lights the epitaph out deep in the granite shaft above his head—"I was a father to the poor;" and each setting day shines through the window placed above his accustomed seat in church, lighting up the picture of "The Good Samaritan," that those who knew him best placed there. It is the character of the man which makes his millions a benediction or a curse; it is his use of wealth which preserves his name either as an object of execration, or as an altar upon which men lay the offerings of their love.—Interior.

They are the safest who are most in their closets; who pray, not to be seen of men, but to be heard of God.

Our Bishops as College Trustees.

"Gilderoy," in a letter to the Richmond Christian Advocate, has this to say on the above topic:

I want to say right here that I do not think it is best for our Bishops to be tangled up with local and Conference institutions of learning. Some of them are trustees of colleges here and there in our wide territory. A general superintendent is all the better by being entirely free from local entanglements. The Bishops are the same to all our colleges, or they ought to be. If they are trustees of one, they ought to be trustees of all. They may not have preferences, and may not show partiality, but some ordinary mortals not wholly free from prejudice fear they sometimes do. Bishop Keener is a trustee of Centenary, and is generally supposed to feel an interest in Centenary that he does not take in any other college in Southern Methodism. The same is true of Bishop Galloway and Millsaps College, and others of our Bishops and other colleges. This supposition of the people may not be true of our Bishops—indeed, it may be unjust to them—but people will measure Bishops in their own half bushels; they will think of Bishops as subject to like passions with other men. It seems to be becoming fashionable for each Bishop to father a college of his own. In so far as this is true of any one of our Bishops, in that far his influence as a general superintendent is hurt; and specially so in territory where the competition of our schools is close and sharp. His position on the Board of Trustees makes him a party to the contest, whether he will or not; it makes him so in the minds of the people, and sometimes among the preachers. It would be hurtful for our Bishops to get all tangled up with our Annual Conference organs, papers. This would tend to localize them in their feelings and affections, and by just so much it would cripple their influence and power for good in the general work. If ours were a diocesan episcopacy instead of a general superintendency, things would be entirely different. It is expected of Methodist preachers and people in Mississippi that they stand by Millsaps College, and the same is true of the preachers and people of Louisiana towards Centenary; but Bishop Keener is expected to be as true to Millsaps as to Centenary, and Bishop Galloway as true to Centenary as to Millsaps. I speak of these two colleges because they are not very far apart, and the competition is sharp. If the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE should ever be understood to be the organ and mouthpiece of Keener, why, then, both paper and Bishop would suffer thereby. There is already some good reason why these things should be said. It is always better to nip an evil in the bud than to root it out after it is full grown. After the thing is here and entrenched, it can not be gotten rid of so easily. Bishops and others may well sing, "From all entanglements beneath, call off my anxious heart."

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. R. E. Rutledge, Roxie, Miss., Jan. 23: "Have completed my first round on the Roxie circuit. Am thankful for the kind reception tendered me by this good people. See plenty of work to do, and have gone into the vineyard expecting the Lord to bless our labor. Brethren, pray that God will greatly bless us."

Rev. W. T. Currie, P. C., Ponchatoula, La., Jan. 24: "May I ask through your paper for help to finish our church at this place? We have a nice church started here, but our money gave out; therefore, we had to stop work. We have only ten members here. Will every good Methodist give us one dollar apiece? We want $150 to finish the house. We are weak. We ask the strong to help us."

Rev. G. W. Gordon, Coffeeville, Miss., Jan. 27: "The first Quarterly Conference for this charge was held Jan. 21 and 22, Rev. R. A. Burroughs, P. E., in the chair. Owing to the extremely rough weather, the attendance of officials was not full; but we had quite a pleasant and profitable time. Finances were short, but not distressingly so. Times are going to get better, we think. Bro. Burroughs impressed the people with his ability as a pulpit man and as a presiding officer."

Rev. E. L. Singletary, P. C., Delhi, La., Jan. 27: "I reached my appointment before the first of January; was kindly received by the people of both appointments (Delhi and Tallulah), and began my work of visiting and preaching at once. It shall be my earnest effort this year to keep my vow as a deacon; and, as many people of our town do not attend public services, there will be an extensive field for ministering divine things to those without. May God give grace to accomplish much good in this field also!"

Rev. Wm. G. Evans, West Monroe, La., Jan. 27: "When we reached our new field we met with a cordial welcome, and, better still, we continue to meet with it day by day. The Quarterly Conference devised liberal things for us, and was, in all its features, pleasant and full of hope and inspiration. Mrs. Evans has been down with chills since we reached here, which has interfered somewhat with our plans; but who would not be willing to be sick among such a kind and thoughtful people? They kept the parsonage more than supplied with good things. May the Lord help us to minister to them as bountifully in spiritual things as they have to us in temporal things! is our continual prayer. Bro. J. J. Kelly, wife and boy were with us on the twenty-fifth."

Rev. W. M. Sullivan, P. C., Franklinton, La., Jan. 25: "I am starting into my second year at this place. This is a good country circuit; five societies in this charge. We are planning, as best we can, for a new year's work. Congregations are very good, indeed, all over the entire work. Sunday-schools are being organized where they wont into Winter-quarters. Our prayer meeting at Centenary Church is well attended. There has been a steady growth in the church in this town ever since I came here. This is a pleasant place to live. All of our people in this town go to church. We have a very fine day-school, under the management of as good teachers as any community can afford. I have preached four times, married two couples and visited several families this year. Eleven accessions to date. I expect to travel a great deal this year, and will do all I can for the ADVOCATE."

Rev. R. M. Blocker, Lisbon, La., Jan. 21: "We reached the Lisbon circuit on Dec. 30. On the next day a comfortable parsonage was procured, and as early as convenient was neatly furnished, and the pastor and his family moved in. In the meantime we were well cared for by the kind citizens of Lisbon. I have made one round on the work, and find the people very cordial. Our Board of Stewards have assessed liberally for our support, and the membership at large seem much concerned about our temporal welfare. Now, with all this kindness on the part of the people, I feel that the least thing we could do would be to give in return the very best service of our lives. May our dear Savior help us to do a good work! I find a large field white unto the harvest. While I have but four appointments, there are a great many families to be seen, and the country is very rough and hilly to travel over. I would take it as a great favor if our dear friends interested in the Lord's cause will pray for our success in this newly organized Lisbon circuit."

Rev. Jno. B. Kent, P. C., Grand Chenier charge: "The first Sunday in January found me on my new field of labor, ready to begin my year's work. On making the acquaintance of the people, I was not slow to discover that it had fallen to my lot to be the successor of a very popular preacher—one who certainly would have been returned had they been consulted. Good for the brother, and not bad for the people. Our circuit reaches sixty miles along the Gulf of Mexico; have a beach road nearly one-half that distance. To my mind this is one of the finest countries in the world. The soil is rich, producing almost anything desired. Oranges grow to perfection, and the climate is delightful. A great deal of the parish is occupied by the Creole people, my work being our only field. Some work here for the French missionary. It seems to me that the time is near at hand for a great forward march all along the line. Not a saloon in the parish to oppose us; the jail is open, and not a case before the court, with the parish out of debt, and money in the treasury, and no paupers. Our people are in fair condition, spiritually; have given me a warm reception, and all things indicate a good year for the Lord's cause."

Rev. W. D. McCullough, P. C., Sallis, Miss., Jan. 20: "We left Indianola on the eight o'clock train, Dec. 15, for our newly appointed home—Sallis—and arrived here on the eleven o'clock train the next day. There began to fall a steady rain on the morning of the sixteenth, and continued nearly all day, so that ladies dared not get out; but we were met at the depot by several brethren, who drove us at once to the parsonage, where we found warm fires and a good dinner. In the dining-room we found stored away sumptuous fare for several days. We have had no storm this time, but a gentle breeze, which has supplied every want. On Christmas Eve it was strong enough to bring turkeys, chickens, cakes, canned goods, sugar, coffee, and many other good things; but we must not tell all at once. But these good people knew how to make a preacher and his family feel at home, or even better. We have married one couple since our arrival. All hearts were made sad, Dec. 22, by the death of Miss Bettie Wear, who passed peacefully to her rest on that day. God bless the bereaved. Our first Quarterly Conference is over. Dr. Sullivan, our new presiding elder, preached us two able sermons. With these good people, and Dr. Sullivan for presiding elder, and the Lord on our side, may we not hope for good result? We are happy and on the move."

Rev. Paul D. Hardin, P. C., Pelahatchie, Miss., Jan. 25: "Have just finished my first round. Notwithstanding the severe weather, I have been able to meet all my appointments up to date. Congregations have been small at all the churches, except at Sedahar, where I preached the fourth Sunday. There we had a good congregation. The Holy Spirit was with us in power, and many reconsecrated their lives to God and his service. The year's work on Clarksburg circuit has opened up favorably, indeed. The members seem to be ready and willing to work for the Lord wherever and whenever the preacher thinks best. Mr. Editor, I would like to express, through the ADVOCATE, the gratitude that fills my heart for the hospitable manner in which these people have treated their 'bachelor' preacher for the last three weeks. They have thrown their doors wide open to me, and bid me welcome to their hearts and homes. May God bless them for their kindness to me, and help me to render them faithful service in return! Since I have been writing this I have been interrupted by the rolling of wheels and the tramping of horse feet, and, looking out through the open door, I see Bro. Franklin, our excellent steward from Liberty, driving up to the parsonage with his wagon loaded with corn, meat, and molasses. Am trying to do the preaching and a part of the praying, and the people are doing the paying. Brethren, pray for us, that we may receive power from on high, which will enable us to do great things for the Master in this part of his moral vineyard."

Payment of Missionary Debt.

The Louisiana Conference, at its recent session, made generous provision for paying the missionary debt. Amounts subscribed were to be paid by March. It is very necessary that these be sent in at the earliest possible date. The appropriations for next year will be no little affected by the attitude of this debt. I most heartily favored the request of the Louisiana Conference for help from the Parent Board in prosecuting needed work. But the grant can not well be made with a large interest account to protect. Dr. Lambuth writes me that the plan will surely succeed if promises are fulfilled—if pledges are redeemed. A sufficient amount has been subscribed to leave nothing of the debt but a mournful memory. May I affectionately ask attention to this word of exhortation?

Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

A number of pastors write that their Conferences met only a short time before the "Week of Prayer and Self-denial;" hence they were unable to arrange for its observance. They ask if they can appoint another week, and if we can still supply them with the "responsive exercises."

We hope each pastor who, from any cause, failed to observe the "Week of Prayer and Self-denial" will appoint another time. It should be held prior to March 31, so that the collections can be sent to the Treasurer.

We will be glad to send the "responsive exercises" to each pastor who will furnish us his name, address and the number he will need. I. G. JOHN.

DON'T LOOK FOR THE FLAWS.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Don't look for the flaws as you go on through life,
And even when you find them
It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind
And look for the virtue behind them.
For the cloudiest night has a hint of light
Somewhere in its shadows hiding,
It is better by far to look for a star
Than the spots on the sun abiding.

The current of life runs ever away
To the bosom of God's great ocean;
Don't set your force 'gainst the river's course
And think to alter its motion.
Don't waste a curse on the universe—
Don't butt at the storm with your puny form—
But bend and let it go o'er you.

The world will never adjust itself
To suit your whims to the letter;
Some things must go wrong your whole life long,
And the sooner you know it the better.
It is folly to fight with the infinite,
And go under at last in the wrestle.
The wisest man shapes into God's plan
As the water shapes into a vessel.

The Preaching of the Gospel the Remedy for Unbelief and Skepticism.

The great distinctive characteristic of the Christian religion is faith. The heathen worships something which he can see, touch, taste and handle; whereas the Christian worships a God who exists in and manifests himself through the intellectual appreciation and apprehension of the believer. The one form of religion is intellectual, the other sensual; the one manifests itself to the believer through his intellect, the other through his senses; the one is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen—the other is the substance of things seen; the one is a living faith, the other an idol. The latter religion, being the substance of things seen, negatives the very conception of deity.

Religion is not governed by the laws of matter; neither is spiritual faith governed by the same laws as ordinary intellectual faith. The key-note of spiritual faith is contained in these words of the Savior: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." Shall know of the doctrine, not by any intellectual demonstration or process of reasoning, but by that spiritual consciousness awakened in the heart by the operation of the Holy Spirit. This spiritual consciousness is not transferable from one to another—that is, one man can not, by reasoning to another, generate in his mind this spiritual faith, because it don't come that way. But the word is, If any man will do, he shall know. The doing is essentially personal, and the faith comes as the result of doing. Hence preach to men—do; guard too much reasoning on the evidence of this faith, and attempting to reason men into the kingdom of heaven. They will not reach heaven by reasoning, but by doing. When a subject is reduced to its last analysis, reasoning must cease; and when the Savior said, "If any man will do," he reached the last analysis of the subject. "To do," as here used, is comprehensive, yet, at the same time, limited. It includes obeying, serving, worshiping, etc., and if a man will obey, serve and worship, then the "doing" of these things will generate that spiritual faith. We have the word of God for it; hence we again say, Preach to men, to do. We think there has been, and is now, too much reasoning and discussion in regard to religion; too great a striving after reconciling religion and science; too much discussion with skepticism and infidelity. Let all this go. Religion, or rather the Bible, can. Don't attempt to ward off and shield the Bible against the shafts of infidelity and skepticism, or even against the advance of science. God bless you!—the Bible is in the hands of God. He will take care of that. But you preach to men the gospel of the kingdom, the old doctrines of correct living, of death and hell (yes, preach it in all its purity; some men will not be reached in any other way) and the future judgment; finally, of Jesus Christ and him crucified; and if you preach this in humility, earnestness, and with the love of God in your own heart, your ministry will be owned and crowned, and you will have many sheaves in your garner and stars in your crown of rejoicing, though you may never have preached a controversial sermon, or said a word about evolution.

Again we say: Faith is not generated by reasoning, but by doing, and it is a neglect of the doing and too much of the reasoning that has brought forth such fruit as universalism and other isms, and men who have their own "peculiar ideas" on religion, and belong to no church; these fallacies by which men attempt to warp and adapt the Word of God to their lives, instead of adapting their lives to the Word of God, and living, many of them, in sin and wickedness, expecting to be saved under what might be called the omnibus clause—as in "Adam all died, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," etc. (We will remark, as to this clause, that it is not perfectly clear that being made alive don't mean being made alive to Christ and God in this life, and have reference to this as well as the future life.)

In conclusion, it is not by speculative and argumentative preaching that men are brought to see the error of their ways. Christ did not so preach. No; preach the old, old story—always old, but ever new. Old in leading man to see his sin and depravity, and lost and ruined state, but new in that it spreads out before him a new life, a new heart, and the joy and peace of a new-born soul in the kingdom of God. Yes; preach it. Preach it until the hills and valleys shall resound, and the glory of the Lord cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

SEXTUS.

Jack's Letter to O. B. Diah.

Dear Cousin: Your last letter lies before me, and, although it is late, yet I must wish you a happy New Year. Yes, I passed my examination, and through the kindness of the brethren and the Bishop I have work to do.

Did you ever hear a preacher speak of the sacrifice he made to enter the ministry? I have, and I hope I will never hear it again. It savors too much of the world, don't you think? We were created for God's glory; we are his workmanship; he hath bought us with a price; and is there any field in which we can render better service than in the ministry? I know that in this high calling there are responsibilities that are not recognized in other callings. And, indeed, these responsibilities kept me from the ministry for several years. While I looked on the field white unto harvest, and heard the voice saying, "Who will go and work in the vineyard for us?" I felt like saying: "Here am I Lord; send me, send me." But then the responsibility of a spotless life, a clear mind and a ready tongue would come before me. Then the still, small voice whispered, "My grace shall be sufficient." I then remembered that the fountain of grace is inexhaustible, and that I am an heir to it. Does not the king's subject feel honored when required to do some mission fraught with responsibility? And if my King wants me in a responsible position, then I feel complimented.

And, Cousin O. B. Diah, this field I looked on so ready for the sickle was not our own Conference, nor, indeed, these United States of America, but the world. It is my King's country. Confucius, Mohammed, and others, have invaded his territory, and taken away a part of his subjects. King Immanuel is now calling for volunteers to join in a crusade against these powers that are entrenched in ignorance and superstition. There may be a special call to work in China or in Brazil, but there is much in what we consider a call. It must be that the work in all fields is progressing just as fast as God would have it progress, or else some preachers are disregarding a call to this work, and other men are disregarding a call for their money. There is much in putting ourselves in an attitude that will enable God to use us. God recognized in Luther and Wesley men that he could use, and he helped them to be great men. I can't believe God ever makes a great man out of anyone who won't help him. I fear we sometimes abuse the question of a call. Whenever there is need for a man in some foreign field and a support is pledged me, I will say to the Mission Board, "Here am I; send me." Do you think I will be doing right?

Yes, my place seems hard in some respects; but the life of Christ was a life of toil and self-denial. I want to follow him. The bones give form to the human body, and frost gives flavor to celery. And the greatest beauties of the human character are often brought out by the failing of a few mill stones of adversity. So I welcome such things as a gift from a loving Father.

I enjoyed the Conference very much. An Annual Conference is a preacher's picnic. It is apt to be a great time for pickin' chicken; so the Jackson Clarion says. In the country there is some need of reform in clerical dress. My predecessor wore a Prince Albert coat, and was a great visitor. The approach of a coat cut after the above-named pattern at the homes in the bounds of this charge starts a commotion among the chickens.

While I was at Conference my ears were open to learn the character of the various charges. I was impressed that the charge which paid best was thought to be most responsible. It seemed to me, too, that the man who collected all the moneys assessed his charge was the man who had done well. My charge does not pay much, but I get to preach to about five hundred people each month, and you may know they love to go to preaching. When I go to Conference, in December next, I want a report something like the following: "One hundred conversions; a net gain of seventy-five; ninety per cent. of the homes in the charge with family altars, and seventy-five per cent. of the people taking the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; with a good Sunday-school and a good missionary society at every church." Then when I am asked what sort of a time I have had I won't have to say, "All assessments paid in full."

I noticed, Cousin, that Bro. D. W. Foster criticised your motto of "P. P. P." on the ground that pray ought to come before preach. That is good. He says further that if a preacher fails to get a decent support he ought to quit the ministry, for if God would put it into the heart of a man to preach he would put it into the heart of other men to sustain him. God may put it into their heart, but all men don't do what God would have them. Taking his view of the question, we must admit that the church gets all the foreign mission money it ought to have—that is, if God approves of foreign missions. If God brought to pass things because they were right, then all things must be right.

I have written you quite a long letter, but I can't refrain from telling you some of my experience since I came on my work. Not long since I called at a house to pay a pastoral visit. Soon the children came from school. The oldest boy, John, slammed the gate and threw open the door almost at the same moment, and into the room he came. "Johnny, this is Bro. Jack," said his mother. John said, "Howdy," offering his left hand, and then left the room. Before the mother could apologize for him his voice was heard in the yard: "Boys, there's a preacher in there," and soon six pairs of eyes could be seen peeping at the preacher.

Moral: Let the preacher be a man as well as a preacher, and he will not be made to feel sometimes like a animal.

I called some time since at a house where the mother and several children were members of my church, and before leaving asked for a Bible that I might read and have prayers with them. For about one half-hour the good woman wandered over the house with an indefinite look, pretending to look for the Bible. At last she came to the sitting-room, and said: "Bro. Jack, our Bible is way down in the bottom of the box and would be very hard to get." They were not living to move either.

Moral: Let the people keep their Bibles out of the box all the time lest the preacher come unawares.

Hoping to hear from you soon, I am,
Your affectionate cousin,

JACK.

Enforcement of Discipline.

Enforcement of discipline, in the sense of seeing that our Rules are obeyed, has been neglected within the range of my observation, and from all that I can gather, it seems to be a general neglect throughout the extent of our church, except in our foreign missions. This was once not the case with our church, and, therefore, why is it the case now? It can not be because our Rules are not adapted to this age, for they are founded on the Scriptures, and, therefore, are adapted to every age of the world, even if the world remains peopled with our race millions of years, unless God annuls the Bible. It can not be because none of our Rules are disobeyed, for we must confess that we have not met with a single church yet, all of whose members obey them; and even if we were to meet with one such church, our Rules would not thereby be made void, but would be in full force, regulating the lives of those who obey them. It can not be because it is wrong to enforce our Rules, for if that were true, then the wisest and best of our people have made a great mistake by advocating the enforcement of them; and, besides, the fundamental principles of all society, and even those of God's government, are all wrong. Then why are they not enforced? It can not be because we have become so holy that we can not bear to see others, as well as ourselves, circumscribed in actions, right or wrong, for holiness, true holiness, has great respect for law, and, therefore, is easily excited to indignation at all intentional violations of the same. It not only argues no piety at all to intentionally disregard law, but a low grade of morality, and, too, no morality at all in proportion as law is intentionally disregarded. "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law." (Rom. iii, 31.) Then why are our Rules not enforced?

1. Because we have too great a desire for numbers. We not only want more than we have, but we are afraid we will lose many of those we have already, if we require them to keep our Rules. We have many members to-day who would quickly leave our church if they were dealt with for going to dances, theaters, circuses, not paying their debts, backbiting their neighbor, etc. Great estimate is placed on him who takes many into the church, and hence the temptation to compromise with the world in order to get them. A young brother in Louisiana would go to the house of a person and insist upon his joining the church, and if he could not get him any other way, he would get his consent to register his name without his obligating himself to one thing or the other as a member.

2. Our Rules are not enforced because many of our officials are opposed to it, and, therefore, to disregard their wishes in the matter is to render him unpopular whose duty it is to see that the Rules are enforced, and to become unpopular these days of mighty struggle for existence, such as this age of stretch demands, means a lacking in temporalities either in the form of an immediate move, or some other, and hence the temptation to be exceedingly reserved in the performance of duty.

3. Our Rules are not enforced because the desire to promote the temporalities of the church is greater than that for the promotion of its spirituality. We have members, who are society people, indulging those practices which are against our Rules, such as the germans, etc., that are allowed thus to continue because of their standing in society, or their money, or the money of their loved ones. They give liberally, or influence liberal contributions. It is no unusual thing for the name of one who has given much (and that, too, without feeling it hardly, if at all) to appear in print, while that of the poor, who had to lessen his clothing and food in order to give, is never seen or heard. How unlike Christ!

4. Our Rules are not enforced because we have presiding elders who do not favor it sufficiently to see that it is done, or to give their hearty support to those who do enforce them, even when they enforce them in a Christian way. Brethren who are straitened in money matters will not enforce our Rules, when they know their presiding elder does not favor it, and, therefore, likely to move them if they do. "They that forsake the law praise the wicked: but such as keep the law contend with them." (Prov. xxviii, 4.)

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

Centenary and Mansfield.

Our editor again propounds a question to the brethren of the Louisiana Conference, who determined by their votes during its recent session that the sum collected for educational purposes should be equally divided between the two colleges, Centenary and Mansfield. This question comes in the form of a statement, and is as follows:

It looks a little curious that an Annual Conference should order a collection for the benefit of a college which the Conference has leased to a private party!

I am glad Dr. Carter is asking these questions, and I sincerely hope thereby that the Methodists of our State shall be aroused and quickened into new life and vigor concerning education by our church institutions. Turn on the light, Doctor, and then, perhaps, from the various charges throughout Louisiana will be thrown back a reflection until the whole land will catch its glow and be filled with the radiance thereof. But that all who are interested may know the reason why our Conference ordered an equal division of the educational fund, I will briefly state why we so did, and leave the result with the readers of the ADVOCATE.

In the first place, we were actuated by a sense of justice, and endeavored to look at the question from a standpoint of simple equity. Not that we loved Mansfield more or Centenary less, but we thought it both just and fair that each should share any benefit within the power of Louisiana Methodism to bestow.

I think it will be conceded that both these schools are the children of our church in the sense that they were conceived and nurtured by our people. Because the men to whom we, as a church, commit their interests as guardians and trustees, pursue somewhat different lines of policy in conducting the affairs of the two, does this justify our turning the entire current of our influence and support toward the other? Bros. Harp, Jackson, Faunt LeRoy and the other members of Mansfield Board of Trustees leased the college because it is the best thing, and about the only thing, to do just now. I do not suppose they ever dreamed of this being an abandonment of it by the church. Consider this also: The individual to whom it is leased is an honored member of our Conference. He receives an appointment at the hands of our Bishop and cabinet. I never heard of his seeking a place. I believe he would go anywhere any of the rest of us would go, if duty called, and the Master bade him "Go." But the Conference authorities appoint him to lease a college. With due respect for all, in justice to Dr. McVoy, I most unequivocally state that in this transaction he is as much the church's agent as any preacher or presiding elder in the State. How can he be a "private party," with a Board of Trustees on the one side and the Annual Conference on the other? Brethren, if the lease is going to prevent the Conference from helping the bonny little daughter of Louisiana Methodism, let us remove that at our next Conference session, give her a dowry and hand her over, a winsome bride, to Bro. McVoy. How his eyes would sparkle and his youth be renewed like the eagle's "on the topmost branch of the cedar!" His good wife will understand the figure.

So much for Mansfield College. May she live long and prosper! I count none of us her enemies, much less our worthy editor.

Nestling amid the classic groves of beech, oak and pine on a gently sloping hill, grand, massive, "beautiful for situation," stands rugged old Centenary. She has given to Louisiana more than her share of noble, cultured manhood. Her alumni have filled the highest offices in Church and State among our people, and with stirling integrity and matchless worth adorned many of these. Reverently and tenderly salutamus, alma mater! As we tried to be faithful in the day of thy adversity, let us be joyous in thy joy, when prosperity crowns thy towers and plenty fills thy halls. They may replenish thy coffers with largesses, but thy richest heritage is in thy sons. Mississippi and Louisiana can never pay the debt they owe to this grand old college. It has grown with accumulated interest too long. Its value is inestimable, since it lies not in houses and lands, nor yet in many-figured endowment sums, but in the sturdy characters and splendid achievements of many who have gone forth from her halls with her imprimateur upon them. In comparative loneliness and poverty she has accomplished this in the past, and now that the dawn of a brighter day is being ushered in, let none dare raise a hand "to whack her on the head." And that such was not the intent and purpose of any, has been abundantly proven by Bro. J. A. Parker.

There are many "curious" things that occur at Annual Conferences, and Louisiana Conference is about as "curious" as any, if not a little "ouriouser." It orders and takes collections generally, liberally and frequently. Its range of donative ability is practically inexhaustible. It sweeps the entire scale from the pale-faced, cultured Caucasian student downward to the degraded heathen in the back alleys of Pekin. Cash or credit, now or next year, connectional or local, we are "mighty curious" on collections. Now, I submit this: Did we order this collection, or did we divide one already ordered? Is not the latter what we did? Just so. And I hold that amid the numerous things we are called upon to support by our contributions our college, leased by our Conference to our duly authorized and appointed agent in the matter, has a just and fair claim upon our munificent bounty.

S. J. DAVIES.

BEST WAY TO GET ON.—A young man once wrote to the celebrated Thomas Carlyle, asking his advice about the best way to get on. The following was the quaint answer: "Study to do faithfully whatsoever thing in your actual situation you find, either expressly or tacitly, laid to your charge—that is, your post; stand in it like a soldier. Silently devour the many chagrins of it, as all human situations have many, and see that you aim not to quit it without doing all that it, at least, requires of you. A man perfects himself by work much more than by reading. They are a growing kind of men that can wisely combine the two things—wisely, valiantly, can do what is laid to their hand in their present sphere, and prepare themselves withal for doing other, wider things, if such be before them."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Feb. 5, 1893.

PREPARED BY REV. A. F. WATKINS.

SUBJECT.—Dedicating the Temple. (Ezra vi, 14-22.)

INTRODUCTORY.

TIME.—B. C. 515. A. M. 3489.

PLACE.—Jerusalem.

PERSONS.—1. Elders of the Jews; 2. The Prophets, Haggai and Zechariah; 3. Cyrus, Darius and Artaxerxes, kings of Persia; 4. Priests and Levites.

EXPLANATORY.

I.—THE TEMPLE FINISHED.

Ver. 14. "The elders of the Jews"—men of influence, age, or official position. The young men probably did the work, but the "elders" superintended the construction of the building. "Prospered through the prophesying," etc. God, through these two prophets, had prompted and encouraged them to go on with their work. "According to the commandment of the God of Israel, and . . . of Cyrus," etc. God is mentioned first as the Great King, from whom all their blessings came, and then are mentioned the Persian kings, through whose favor they were enabled to carry on the work.

Ver. 15. "And this house was finished," etc., on the fourth of March, a little more than four years after they had resumed work and twenty years after the return from captivity.

II.—THE TEMPLE DEDICATED.

Ver. 16. "Children of Israel." Representatives of all the tribes were, doubtless, present among the returned captives. "Children of the captivity"—literally, "the sons of the transportation." The sons of those who had been carried into captivity. "Kept the dedication." (See I. Kings viii, 63.) Set apart by sacrifice and prayer for the worship of Jehovah. "With joy." All those who had beheld the former glory of the Temple were probably dead and the joy in the completed house was unmixed with sad memories of past greatness.

Ver. 17. "A hundred bullocks," etc. This offering, though poor in comparison with those of former occasions, was, in a spirit of piety and reverence, patterned after the offerings of Moses and Solomon. It was, considering their poverty, probably a more liberal offering than Solomon had made and was, doubtless, as acceptable to the Lord. "Twelve he-goats," etc. While most of those who were present were of the tribe of Judah, the other tribes were represented, and the returned people thus formally maintain the tribal integrity of the descendants of Jacob.

Ver. 18. "And they set the priests," etc. As soon as the Temple was dedicated they made arrangement for the Temple service, as originally made by David and observed by Solomon; but as this service was based upon the Mosaic law it could properly be said, "They did as it was written in the book of Moses."

III.—THE PASSOVER OBSERVED.

Ver. 19. "Kept the passover," etc. It was meet and right that now upon their restoration from captivity they should observe the greatest of all Jewish feasts, that which commemorated their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. We need not suppose that its observance had been altogether neglected; but they had been without a temple and were harrassed by their enemies. Now it was made a joyous festival and observed with the formality of the earlier time.

Ver. 20. "The priests and the Levites were purified together," etc. Without exception they were purified and ready to observe the feast. This shows a willing spirit—a holy zeal—to prepare themselves for the gracious privileges of the Temple service. "The Levites killed the passover," etc. It seems to have become customary for the Levites to kill the lambs for all.

Ver. 21. Those who had returned from captivity and the remnant of the Jews who had remained in their native land joined together in the celebration of the feast. "Separated themselves . . . from the filthiness of the heathen." This refers to backslidden and apostate Jews, who had corrupted themselves with their heathen neighbors, but now returned to the worship of the Lord and the communion of their brethren. That there were also among them some proselytes from heathenism is not improbable; but the reference is not specifically to them.

Ver. 22. They kept the feast as Moses had commanded. (See Exodus xii, 15.) Gratitude to God for this deliverance and restoration caused them to rejoice. God has kindly disposed the hearts of the "King of Assyria" (kings of Persia) to them, had overruled the opposition of their enemies, and had by his words of counsel and encouragement "strengthened their hands in the work."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

(1) None who work for God are forgotten. (Ver. 14.)

(2) All will succeed who work "according to the commandment" of the Lord. (Ver. 14.)

(3) God's promises never fail. (See Zech. iv, 7.) The house was finished, and Zerubbabel, who had laid the foundation, now "brought forth the headstone with shouting." (Ver. 15.)

(4) Not priests and Levites only, but all men can worship God with joy. (Ver. 16.)

(5) Not the amount of the offering, but the spirit in which it is made, is important in God's sight. (Ver. 17.)

(6) Sacrifice is an essential part of worship. (Ver. 17.)

(7) A knowledge of God's law and conformity thereto are conditions of enlightened worship. (Ver. 18.)

(8) God's servants must "separate themselves," must "cease to do evil."—vs. 18. (See Psalm lxvi, 18.)

(9) All blessings come from God; for he it is who turns the hearts of even our enemies towards us and strengthens us in our work.

The Story of Calvinistic Methodism.

BY MARY J. STRAYER, A. M.

While members of the Holy Club at Oxford, the aspirations of John Wesley and George Whitefield were identical. To obtain a full assurance of faith and an abiding sense of the pardoning love of God, and then to enter a field of labor where these blessed privileges might be communicated to others—these were the ambitions of the young men. After the most agonizing self-conflicts endured by both, Whitefield was the first to enter into the peace of salvation. Soon Wesley shared his hope, and the two friends commenced their labors.

The differences of mind, which were so marked, and which rendered their united work so successful, led them also into differences of opinion. Happily, these differences did not touch those vital truths which alone are essential to the saving of men's souls. It was impossible that two men whose hearts and lives were filled with the question of human salvation should not find themselves confronted by some of the difficulties which for so many centuries have been canse of contention amongst good people. The question on which Wesley and Whitefield differed was the unsolvable problem of predestination.

Wesley had early taken the Arminian view of this question—i. e., that men are not predestinated by the decrees of God to happiness or perdition in a future state. Later, Whitefield, seeing all around him not more depraved than he had been dying in their sins, embraced with all the vehemence of his nature the opposite teachings of Calvin, denying man's free agency and asserting that his future is irrevocably predestinated. Although Wesley's opinions were decided, he did not make the Arminian doctrine a condition of membership in his societies, and at first they did not seem likely to separate the friends. Their differences at this time seem to have been kept seduloasly between themselves, and both hoped for the time prophesied by Mr. Wesley "when God will do what man can not—namely, make us both of one mind."

The first serious trouble rose from a turbulent member of one of the London societies, who insisted upon discussing Calvinism in their meetings. Persisting, he was forbidden admission. Yet Wesley explained fully that the opinions of his members were not challenged; he only demanded that there should be no disputing over unprofitable questions. Soon after, John Cennick, his helper at Kingswood, rejected Arminianism and began preaching publicly against it. The society was much disturbed by Cennick's course, and all efforts to restore harmony seemed unavailing. Cennick wrote to Whitefield, then in America, urging his speedy return, "to suppress this heresy of Arminianism." Wesley was justly indignant at this treason in a man whom he had placed in his present position; and finding expostulations useless, read a paper publicly declaring Cennick and his followers no longer members of the Kingswood society. About fifty persons went out with Cennick, leaving ninety still in the society. Wesley admonished them that they "knew in their own consciences that they were not removed because of their holding to the doctrine of election, but because of the strife and disorder which they continually promoted."

Having been driven thus far against his will, Wesley felt that it was now time to protest publicly against the Calvinistic doctrines, and soon after preached at Bristol his celebrated sermon on "Free Grace." This was sent to Whitefield, who published a reply. The breach thus effected widened rapidly. Whitefield returned to England strengthened in his Calvinistic views, and the sad separation between the Wesleys and himself took place. Methodism divided into two currents, which, however, always pursued the same general direction. Both Wesley and Whitefield lived to acknowledge that the effects of the great revival were wider spread on account of their differences of opinion. Both adhered to the Established Church, and neither dreamed of forming a new ecclesiastical organization. The salvation of men lay so near the hearts of both that minor things could not long part them. They were soon reconciled; letters passed between them, meetings took place, they exchanged pulpits, and the bitterness passed away forever.

Henceforth the course of each was plainly mapped. Wesley preached the doctrine of general, while Whitefield held to that of particular, redemption. Lady Huntingdon espoused the latter's views, and henceforth was the central personage of Calvinistic Methodism. William Cowper has been called its true bard; and from Wales came Howell Harris, destined to become Whitefield's most effective worker among the new societies. The tabernacle was erected, and, following Wesley's example, Whitefield employed the aid of lay preachers. His success soon compelled him to adopt an organized form for his Calvinistic adherents. He was assisted in this work by Lady Huntingdon, and other notable people whom he had met at her ladyship's house. England was divided into districts, which were regularly visited. Halls and dilapidated chapels throughout the entire kingdom were converted into places of public worship, and a college for the educating of ministers was opened in an old castle at Trevacca, in Wales. The religious opinions of the candidates for admission were not questioned. It was only stipulated that they should be truly converted to God, and resolved to enter the ministry "in either the Established Church or any denomination of Dissenters." Thus an earnest zeal for the advance of the kingdom of God annihilated selfishness and bigotry. The Calvinistic Methodists had special success in imparting new impulses and energy to the nonconformists of England. But the influence of Whitefield still remains most marked in Wales, where his doctrines gathered about him such sturdy spirits as Jones, Harris, Rowlands, and Davies. Whilst in the history of the great religious awakening the separation of Wesley and Whitefield marks a painful period, it was overruled by Providence for good; and that which to short-sighted human vision seemed unfortunate proved to be the means of watering more thoroughly "the moral wilderness."

On Sept. 30, 1770, Whitefield died, "an old man and worn out, yet aged but fifty-six years." To John Wesley he left his ring and a request that he preach his funeral sermon in England. And now that lack of legislative ability which he himself had deplored became manifest. No other man ever swayed his fellow-beings more irresistibly, yet he failed to give to his societies that organized form which would have secured efficiency and perpetuity.

After his death Calvinistic Methodism resolved itself into three sects. The first was known as Lady Huntingdon's connection. It preserved the liturgical forms of the Established Church, and its ministers ceased itinerating. The second was called the Whitefield Methodist, or the Tabernacle, connection. It also used the national liturgy, but many of its societies adopted the forms of the Congregational Independents, and have since been merged into that denomination. The third was and is to-day called the Welsh Methodist Church. Almost every village in Wales has one of its chapels; and in a country where nearly the whole population attends religious services on the Sabbath, the great majority of professing Christians are Calvinistic Methodists.—Epworth Herald.

The Ordinance Element in the Commission.

As our Lord took leave of his eleven faithful disciples—Judas, one of the twelve, "having gone to his own place"—he gave them this last command: "All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in to the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world;" or as in the margin of the Revision, "the consummation of the age," of the dispensation then about to open. So we read in the Gospel by Matthew. As found in Mark, the corresponding passage begins: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation ("to every creature" in the old version); he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned."

This is that "Great Commission" under which ministers of the gospel, true preachers of the Word, have acted during all the centuries since. It was addressed to those eleven disciples who were with him as "he was taken up and a cloud received him out of their sight." They proceeded immediately to the work thus appointed them; very soon associating others with themselves, and so originating a ministry of the Word whose more specific character and duties are indicated in subsequent parts of the New Testament.

It is clear that three things are thus made characteristically prominent in that ministry by which what this commission enjoins is to be done; first is the preaching of the gospel; second, the baptizing of converts; third, instruction in all the things which Christ had commanded, in preparing these men for their work. These three, indeed, may be said to be comprehensive of all duties enjoined upon the Christian ministry. Under the third would come the organization of Christian societies or churches, their indoctrination as to things to be believed, and their proper guidance in all that should concern right Christian living, whether in the church or before the world.

In fulfilling the first of the three things enjoined, those first ministers soon found occasion for the second. The very first of their sermons resulted in so many conversions that on the day it was preached not less than three thousand "received the word" and were baptized; continuing thereafter, "steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and in prayers." So that on this occasion we indeed find the commission fulfilled in all its three comprehensive injunctions; the three thousand so received being evidently taught in the things Christ had commanded, and beginning the great history of church organization and observance as the first church, not alone in Jerusalem, but in the whole world.

Now, what seems clear in all this is the fact that on this, as on subsequent occasions, these first ministers, alike in their preaching and in their baptizing, acted simply by authority of their Lord's own commission. There is no evidence of church action in connection with the baptism of the three thousand; indeed, the receiving of such a number on that same one day in the manner candidates are now received, would have been a manifest impossibility. The same continued to be true as these preachers went forth in various directions, preaching and baptizing. When Philip baptized the Eunuch, he did not require of him to return to Jerusalem, and relate his experience to the church there, in order that the evangelist might have a church sanction in baptizing him. As the preachers of the Word, whether apostles or evangelists, went from city to city, it was clearly impossible that church sanction and authority should be given them for administering the ordinance, whether in Samaria, in Antioch, in Philippi, in Corinth, or in Rome. The commission they had received was their sufficient authority.

And it is to be observed that the conditions of that original ministry have been repeated in the ministry of all the centuries since. Ministers of the Word have, in one part of the world or another, found themselves gaining converts under circumstances where they must fulfill the second requirement of their commission on precisely the same authority as the first. Whenever, in any pagan nation, even in these times in which we live, after perhaps long and patient labor, a convert is made and baptized, it requires to be done without any such church sanction as brethren seem to regard as indispensable. Indeed, upon any other principle, puzzling questions might arise, as suggested by certain passages in the history of our own denomination.

At certain junctures, as in the organization of the English Baptist Church in Amsterdam, which, later, to all appearance, became the mother of Baptist Churches in England, the condition of a church sanction for even those who first administered true baptism amongst them was lacking. A like example occurs in the beginning of American Baptist Churches, in the case of Roger Williams and his associates. A "Baptist succession," in this sense, can not be traced. In a strict application of the principle upon which some brethren insist, it will be impossible for any one of us to be certain that he has himself received a true baptism. We can never believe that in the simple wording of that Great Commission it was ever intended to imply conditions of ritual validity which would be a burden, and in numerous cases an impossibility, in all subsequent Christian history.

But has the church no part in the matter? Certainly it has a part, and a very important one. As we often have occasion to say, the New Testament, especially in the epistolary part of it, always views the Christian as in the church, under its watch-care, sharing in its responsibilities and its work. Although the first ministers, when introducing Christianity upon some new field, baptized under the commission, simply, they immediately proceeded to form those who were thus baptized into churches, "ordaining elders amongst them" wherever possible. Thenceforth the work, by the elders, or pastors, and the churches, was a joint work. Together they labored in gaining new converts; when these would be baptized they required them to enter at once into church relation and in thus receiving them pastor and church acted jointly. The minister, in the act of baptism, simply obeyed the command of his Lord in the commission, the church in its own action received this new convert into its fellowship and under its care. There is not from beginning to end of the New Testament the slightest evidence that the warrant of the church was essential to the validity of the baptism, or that the minister as baptizing acted by authority of the church. His authority was in the commission he bore.

Our conviction has been, in replying to questions addressed us upon this subject, that a true minister of Jesus Christ, one called of the Lord to this service and manifestly blessed in it, preaching the gospel, however it may be in some other communion than that of Baptist Churches, when he administers baptism in the enjoined way administers a true baptism; and the ordinance as so administered upon credible profession of repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, is valid and should be recognized as such.—Standard (Baptist).

I, A. C. Hafflefinger, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracting a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We knew of Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

THE COMMON ROAD AS A SOCIAL FACTOR.—The common roads of a country are at once the means and measure of its civilization. Without means of communicating easily and quickly from one part of a country to all other parts there can be no very widespread civilization in that country. Neighborhoods and States separated from each other by natural barriers or bad roads stagnate in loneliness, and are seldom awakened by common impulses of sympathy. "It is doubtful indeed," says Prof. Shaler, of Harvard, "whether a sound democracy, depending as it does on close and constant interaction of the local life, can well be maintained in a country where the roadways put a heavy tax on human intercourse."—John Gilmer Speed, in The Chautauquan.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures nightsweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

BRIEFS.

According to the last census, the Protestant Episcopal Church has 5,019 organizations; 5,019 church edifices and 312 halls, worth $81,066,317, and seating 1,336,952 persons. There are in all 532,054 communicants. In Louisiana there are 65 church-houses and 5 halls, with a seating capacity for 15,249 persons, valued at $397,950, and a membership of 5,162. In Mississippi there are 61 church-houses and 2 halls, with a seating capacity for 13,739 persons, valued at $322,960, and a membership of 3,560. So says Dr. H. K. Carroll, of the Independent.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of New Orleans, was held last week in Felicity Street Methodist Church. Reports from the various committees showed progress, and the outlook for the coming year is good. The lunch-house, which some predicted would be a failure, has not only lived, but has paid expenses, with some cash in the treasure-box. We give the temperance women a hearty God-speed in their work of temperance. Surely no place is more sorely in need of such work than is this "ungodly Orleans," with its constantly multiplying doggeries and fashionable saloons.

Advance sheets of the Financial Catholic Directory for 1893 have just been issued. The Catholic population is given as 8,806,095, to whom spiritual guidance is given by 14 archbishops, 75 bishops and 9,397 priests, of whom 6,954 are secular, and 2,443 regular priests. There are 8,477 churches, 3,485 stations and 1,863 chapels. The 1,854 students of the secular priesthood are educated in 36 seminaries. There are 127 colleges, 657 academies and 3,587 parochial schools; 728,209 children attending the parochial schools; 26,538 orphans are cared for in 245 orphan asylums, besides which there are 463 other charitable institutions.

A resolution to license gambling has been introduced into the City Council. The introducer of this resolution don't seem to know that gambling is prohibited by the Constitution and by special statute. If he does know that, then he must think the City Council is superior to the State Constitution and the law, and can annul them by simple resolution. If that is so, then said member has no business in the Council, and should be retired. Such ignorance in a public official is unpardonable. With Judges Ferguson and Moise and District Attorney Adams in their places, it is rather queer that it should be said, in defense of the resolution, that the law against gambling can not be enforced. It is enforced now, and will be continued in force.

The Real Drawing Power.

Some modern Christians seem very deficient in faith with regard to the attracting power of the Holy Spirit. One suggests that the congregation could be increased by giving more attention to sacred music; another that a new church with beautiful architecture and fine furnishings would draw the people; and still another intimates, perhaps, in the presence of the preacher, that short, intellectual, polished sermons, adapted to the progress of the age, would bring out the masses. We ought to have church-buildings corresponding with our best private homes, where there is financial ability to build them; we ought to cultivate sacred music; we ought to have sermons well prepared and well delivered; but we ought to know by this time that all our attractions of human production combined have not the drawing power of the Holy Spirit manifested in a genuine religious revival. The masses will turn away from merely intellectual sermons, from the most exquisite operatic music that trained choirs can sing, and go where souls are converted, where songs of praise, if not artistic, come from warm, happy hearts, and where earnest Christians talk in experience meetings of the goodness and mercy of God.—Western Christian Advocate.

There is one thing which everybody, whose eyes have not been closed, sees—and that is, that in the majority of our churches there are many empty pews during the Sabbath services. This is especially so in the city churches. It is so to such a remarkable degree that not only the religious papers, but the secular press is calling attention to the fact. The New York Herald, which is supposed to be as accurate as any secular paper we could name, said in an editorial last week that New York City, with a population that exceeds a million and a half, has five hundred churches, and the average attendance on a pleasant Sunday morning will not number more than five hundred persons. It says:

If, therefore, we do a very easy sum in arithmetic, we find that the number of those who are listening to the preachers on any given day can not be safely stretched beyond a total of three hundred thousand, or, to be generous, one fifth of our whole community.

We doubt if a much better showing will be made by any other large city. And yet in New York City alone there are more than a million people who do not attend church on Sunday! And in every city and town and country circuit there are thousands—yea, millions, more who seemingly care nothing for the church or the gospel which is preached in the church. Such is the fact. The people are not going to church. Various schemes have been devised and put in operation to "draw the masses," and yet the masses stay away, not being reached by the "drawing power." And the problem grows in perplexity with each succeeding Sabbath. Fine churches of "beautiful architecture and rich furnishings" don't draw the people. "Exquisite music from trained choirs" hath no charms to attract the masses. Even "intellectual and polished sermons," as short as they are polished, fail to bring the people to the sanctuary of God. "On other pleasures bent," they turn away from it all with distaste, if not with disdain and disgust.

The extract quoted above seems to imply that in these various plans for attracting people to the house of God, the "drawing power of the Holy Spirit" is ignored or lost sight of. This surely can not be the case in every instance. Nor can we believe that in a majority of instances it is so. What Christian minister or congregation does not know that success in Christian work is achieved, "not by might nor by power, but by the Spirit of God"? But, then, there may be too little faith in the Holy Spirit, and, doubtless, this is one reason why the work of God does not go forward more rapidly. "Them that honor me, I will honor, saith the Lord." If the preachers and church people would honor the Holy Spirit more, he would honor them more, and would authenticate their preaching and work to the world by his own presence and co-operating power in such a manner as to vindicate the appointment of his ordinances in the eye of the world.

A revival is simply the manifested presence of the Holy Spirit converting and sanctifying souls. A big revival is simply a repetition of Pentecost, and always "draws the people." The Western is right when it says: "All our attractions of human production combined have not the drawing power of the Holy Spirit manifested in a genuine religious revival." This significant record is made of Barnabas: "For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith; and much people was added to the Lord." The plan for the preachers and church people to pursue, then, in order to attract the masses to the gospel, is to study how most and largest they can honor the Spirit in their preaching and work, and by thus honoring him, attract his divine co-operation with their efforts, and then the revival will come in such signal displays of gracious power as to fill the churches to their utmost capacity with earnest souls seeking the salvation of God.

Give It a Rest.

A few years ago there was published in the Homiletic Monthly the full outline of a sermon on Exodus v, 1: "And afterward Moses and Aaron went in, and told Pharaoh, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Let my people go, that they may hold a feast unto me in the wilderness." The only remarkable thing about the sermon in question is the fact that no one who ever read it or heard it could forget its main features. It has had, first and last, what may be fairly called "a great run." We have either heard it or heard of it in the pulpits of three or four denominations. In our own church it has compassed the length and breadth of the land. At a District Conference in a certain State a visiting brother preached it on Thursday night, and the next morning went on his way rejoicing. A day or two later another visitor, more recently arrived, repeated it from end to end, to the mixed amazement and amusement of his auditors. Within the last year, it has broken out in several fresh places. We suggest that it be retired for a season, given a brief rest, if not, in fact, put on the superannuate list as permanently disabled. Really, when so many good sermons are published every week, there is no reason why one old skeleton should be worn into a "frazzle" by constant use.—Nashville Advocate.

Before this writer entered the ministry, being at a protracted meeting in a country circuit, he heard two preachers preach very nearly the same sermon on the same day to the same congregation. An old preacher occupied the morning hour, and a young preacher came during the intermission, and at the afternoon service he preached so nearly the same sermon that there was almost a broad smile on every face in the whole audience during the whole hour.

At a certain camp meeting in the northern part of Louisiana this writer heard a sermon so remarkable for the brother who delivered it, that it sank deep in the memory. About fifteen months afterward, being in a different section of the State, he heard the same thing from a different preacher. These two incidents left a very unpleasant effect, and we have often since asked these questions: "Does the Lord call a man to preach another man's sermons?" "Does the Lord call a man to preach who can't make his own sermons?"

We have just lately learned, however, that there is another side even to this question. It was revealed to us by a lady (not a preacher's wife) of large observation and experience—one raised in the lap of the Methodist Church and familiar with Methodist preachers and their preaching from her girlhood. We were talking about the foregoing extract from the Nashville Advocate, when she observed: "I really think it would be a good thing for the congregations if some of our preachers would preach more of other preachers' sermons than they do." We had nothing more to say. So, Dr. Hoss, don't deprive the long-suffering people of the occasional pleasure and benefit of hearing their own preacher preach somebody else's sermon even though it has been "published in the Homiletic Monthly."

Colportage Work.

We do not believe that any special line of Christian work can be of more value to the church or more far reaching in beneficial results than the work of disseminating a pure and sound religious literature. The people are getting to be more and more a reading people. The thirst for reading has been created, and it must be satisfied in such a way as to be of permanent moral and spiritual benefit, or it will be satisfied with those things which will tend to moral and spiritual detriment. The church can not afford to suffer the latter to be the case, and hence has authorized a colportage work for every Annual Conference. In most Conferences the work has been organized and colporters appointed and are at work. We recognize this as a good start in the right direction; but these brethren, who have received these appointments, need and do reasonably expect the hearty co-operation of all their brethren in the ministry. The colporters for Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences have established themselves, one in this city and the other in Jackson, Miss., and by their advertisements and notices in this paper they tell the church that they are ready to supply any and every call for religious literature at the lowest rates and quickest time. Bro. Dominick, at Jackson, stands ready to supply Mississippi Methodism with everything needed; and so Bro. Van Valkenburgh, in this city, stands towards Louisiana.

Let the preachers and members of each Conference do all they can to build up a safe, large, widespread colportage work in these Conferences by assisting in every legitimate way these two worthy colporters.

Our Work in Japan.

The Minutes of the Japan Mission Conference give some very interesting details which show that the work of our mission in that far-away island is progressing. We believe the first work was done in Japan by Dr. J. W. Lambuth, in 1885; now we have a Conference whose roll shows 16 preachers in the traveling connection. Besides, there are 2 local preachers and 494 native members. Last year there were 22 infants and 118 adults baptized. There are 38 Sunday-schools, with 81 teachers and 1,535 scholars. We find that the 494 native members and 19 foreign members contributed, in round numbers, last year $457 for missions, $288 for church extension, and $225 for ministerial education. We have in the mission 5 church-houses, valued at $5,200, and 2 parsonages worth $3,175. The educational statistics are certainly gratifying. We have 20 schools with 562 students.

The Conference was in session eight days under the presidency of Bishop Key, and the reports of the workers indicate thorough and painstaking labor for the advance of the Lord's kingdom in that land of moral darkness. We notice from the report of the Sunday-school Board that some of the Sunday schools are held on week-day evenings, and this might not be a bad way for mission schools in our cities. There is a Union Methodist paper called Gokyo, which has successfully passed the first year of its life, and is recommended to all our people there, though not our own publication. Several of Mr. Wesley's sermons have been translated, and one dozen tracts by the lamented Lambuth have been published. A Publishing Committee was appointed by the Bishop, who will doubtless do much the coming year toward giving the Japanese a religious literature.

A committee to see what could be done toward saving the many orphan children was appointed. We imagine that nothing would so increase, among the heathen, a respect for Christianity, as the establishment of orphanages for children and homes for the aged. These institutions touch the helpless of both classes, and are the best exponents of the divine claims of our religion.

The Kwansei Gakuin is the college for training young men for the Christian ministry, and is located at Kobe. It consists of academic and biblical departments, and has 65 students. The total value of our church property, as given in the Minutes, is $37,366, and the total collected for various causes from the field is $3,399.

Taking it altogether, the Minutes show that we have taken hold of Japan. But the laborers there need re-enforcement, and that requires means, and so we re-echo the call of the Secretaries of our Board for more money to send more men to Japan to help on the good work started so auspiciously by the lamented Lambuth. His dying message to us was, "Send more men."

Hon. James G. Blaine.

In the last two months death has reaped an unusual harvest of prominent men. Ex-President Hayes, Senator Kenna, Senator Gibson, Gen. Butler, Justice Lamar, and now James G. Blaine, long the foremost man in his party and considered by many a great statesman. Mr. Blaine was born in Pennsylvania in 1830. He was educated at Washington College, from which he was graduated at seventeen years of age. He taught school awhile, studied law, married a school teacher, and in 1854 removed to Augusta, Me. He was a delegate to the first Republican National Convention in 1856, since which time he has been almost the head and front of that party. In 1858 he was elected to the Legislature of Maine, and was made speaker of the House in 1860. In 1862 he was elected to Congress, where he served seven successive terms in the House. He served six years as speaker. He was a member of the Senate for several years, but resigned to enter President Garfield's Cabinet. Upon the death of Garfield he retired to private life and devoted himself to a history called "Twenty Years in Congress." At the accession of President Harrison he was again called to the Secretary of State's office, which he held until last June. Since that time he has been gradually declining in health, until last week, when the end came.

Evidently Mr. Blaine reaped a very large share of popularity among the people. He was the idol of his followers and commanded the admiration of his opponents. But while he commanded the admiration of nearly all the people, he could not secure enough of their trust to place him in the highest office in their power to bestow. He is another brilliant example of a man who could command homage, but could not command an entrance to the high place he sought with so much ambitious zeal.

The cause of higher education prospered generally during Christmas week. To the University of Chicago, Mr. John D. Rockefeller gave another million dollars; Miss Mary Garrett gave $350,000 to the Johns Hopkins University; Dartmouth College received $180,000 from an old friend; Mr. Philip D. Armour founded the Armour Institute in Chicago, giving it an endowment of nearly $3,000,000, and the Medical Department of the Western Reserve University received $125,000 from Mr. John L. Woods.—Chatauquan.

NOTES.

An 'Exchange Bureau!" It has been established in Chicago! You can send your old sermon and get a fresh one in exchange! Selah.

Let the church set itself to face the evils of the day and turn the light of the gospel on those evils, and then she will be able to work intelligently for their abatement.

The Moravians have one missionary to every sixty-five members at home. If our church did that well, we would have eighteen thousand four hundred and sixty missionaries in the field! W-h-e-w!

We notice that readers of a newspaper invariably read the short articles first. If they are crispy, they will be read a second and third time and will stick in the memory. This is merely a hint.

It is said that in the last twenty years Germany has spent three thousand million dollars upon her army! In the same time, how much has the whole Christian world spent upon the army of the Lord?

Some of the brethren are very wise to "catch on." They give good, full reports, written in open hand on postal cards with room to spare. These reports wear the blue ribbon in this office, and from what we can hear from our readers, they wear it out of this office, also.—Texas Advocate.

Before sitting down to write a death notice, ascertain whether the party, or immediate family, is a subscriber for the Central. If not, do not begin. If so, then confine what you have to say to one page, unless the subject is a preacher, or some aged person with a historic life. A violation of the first rule will send the memoir to the waste-basket; of the second, to our editorial pot, where it will be boiled down to meet the requirements of this rule. Brother, is it necessary to say that the deceased had good medical assistance, was tenderly nursed and cared for, and is greatly missed! Allow the reader to take these things for granted.—Central Methodist.

The laborer, as everybody knows and as nearly everybody says, is entitled to one day's rest in seven, because of the repairs necessary to keep up his physical machinery. Sunday laws, however well executed, do not always give the needed rest to everyone. The California Legislature has a bill before it to remedy the defect. The gist of the bill makes it a misdemeanor to require an employee to do work for more than six consecutive days. That would be an excellent law and would bring large blessings to the laboring classes. It is surely worth the attention of all legislative bodies.

From all accounts we gather that the better class in Memphis have determined to get rid of the gamblers. The citizens seem thoroughly aroused and are making things lively for the light-fingered gentry. In our city the criminal judges have closed up the dens, but a councilman has introduced a resolution into the City Council to license them. "Drest in a little brief authority," he imagines a City Council can override the constitution and the law and the criminal courts. Such legislative wisdom as that deserves "a monument more lasting than brass." If our Council takes its cue from this wise member, they may find themselves arraigned before that most terrible bar—the bar of public indignation.

An Indiana judge took action the other day in a matter which was brought before him, which, if widely imitated, would do much toward bringing criminals to justice. It seems that the grand jury was engaged in the investigation of a case, and during the process of examination one of the witnesses "was stricken with sudden and mysterious loss of memory." The "forgetful" witness was escorted by the prosecuting attorney into the circuit court-room and the facts were stated to the judge. The witness was at once sent to prison "for twenty-four hours for contempt of court, and to remain in durance until he would consent to testify." A similar "lapse of memory" has often been known in grand jury and court-rooms, especially in cases in which the saloons have been implicated. The Indiana judge has certainly set a good, healthful pace for judges in dealing with men who have convenient memories.—Mid-Continent.

The Memphis Advocate, of last week, contained a beautiful cut of our new First Church in that city, and an inter- esting account of the dedicatory serv- ices. Of Bishop Keener's sermon on that occasion it says:

Bishop Keener was at his best last Sunday morning at our First Church, when he preached the dedication ser- mon. The sermon was strong, elo- quent, edifying and in every way adapt- ed to the occasion.

It was a rare sight to see two Meth- odist Bishops seated in the same pul- pit as was witnessed last Sunday night —Bishop Andrews, of the M. E. Church, and Bishop C. B. Galloway, of the M. E. Church, South—the one a septua- genarian, the other a man in all the force and fullness of his prime. This is indisputable evidence that the differ- ences dividing those great branches of the same faith are rapidly disappear- ing, and the day is nearing when coa- lition will come to form a mighty and active religious force in the world— conquering and unconquerable.—The Meteor, Crystal Springs.

Missionary Debt.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Upon consultation, I find that the subscriptions to the debt not paid be- fore March 31, will be too late to be included in the annual report.

If possible, please let your remit- tances be in the hands of T. B. Holt, treasurer, by March 25.

Over $120,000 have been subscribed and pledged; $15,000 are now in hand, and $10,000 more in sight. Now is the time during the next eight weeks for us, as one man, to roll off the burden from our Board of Missions.

Are we like the Son of man, ready for either sacrifice or service?

What folly! To be without BEECHAM'S PILLS.

Circular of Louisiana State Sunday-School Association.

As there exists in many portions of the State, and with many of the churches of our Lord Jesus Christ in Louisiana, an erroneous impression concerning the aims and objects of the Louisiana State Sunday-school Asso- ciation, its Executive Committee have been specifically charged by it to pre- pare, publish and circulate throughout the State, and to present to religious conventions, associations, etc., an ad- dress setting them forth fully and ac- curately.

We, therefore, declare that the ob- jects of the Sunday-school Association are:

First—To awaken a deeper interest in the Sunday-school work in Lou- isiana in all religious denominations.

Second—To encourage all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and who are now engaged in Sunday-school work, to do more work in that line.

Third—To assist superintendents and teachers in doing better work in their respective Sunday-schools by il- lustrations, suggestions and model methods in conducting schools and in teaching.

Fourth—To meet as Christian work- ers to compare notes, to discuss the best methods of superintending, teach- ing, attracting and holding the chil- dren and youth in our Sunday-schools.

Fifth—To create and deepen enthu- siasm among Christian workers, so that they may be encouraged to or- ganize schools in destitute neighbor- hoods.

Sixth—The Association does not and will not interfere with any church's work, nor with any Sunday-school now organized, or organized hereafter, nor with the doctrines or teachings of any denomination in any way what- ever.

Seventh—We want to give strength to the weak, encourage the faint- hearted, and create a deeper devotion, if we can, in the hearts of all for Sun- day-school work.

Eighth—To gather statistics, dis- seminate information concerning the needs of the Sunday-school cause all over the State, and to promote the holding of parish and district conven- tions, and the formation of Sunday- school associations with the same ob- jects as are herein declared.

As near as we can ascertain, there are about one hundred thousand white children in this State who are not at- tending any Sunday-school whatever.

It is, or must be, evident to any thinking man, that no one denomina- tion can, single-handed and alone, do the work we propose to do. It will be difficult even for all combined, and with the most united effort, to accomplish it, and impossible without the help and guidance of the Great Head of the church.

May the Holy Spirit guide us all to do what is best for the glory of his name!

Yours in the work,

A Monument to Dr. A. W. Jones.

The Memphis Conference, at its late session in Mayfield, Ky., in view of the long and valuable service rendered to the cause of female education by the Rev. Amos W. Jones, D. D., resolved to erect to his memory a suitable and massive monument and appointed the presiding elder, pastors and other resi- dent members of the Conference in the city of Jackson a committee, with authority to associate with themselves an equal number of laymen, to effect the worthy object. The committee having organized with the election of the Rev. J. H. Evans, president; John L. Brown, Esq., secretary, and J. W. N. Burkett, treasurer, and the appoint- ment of an Executive Committee, hereby give notice that they are ready to receive contributions; and earnestly solicit the members of the Memphis and other Conferences—all the friends of Dr. Jones—and especially all of his former pupils wherever residing, to honor themselves by honoring this great and good man by sending a con- tribution of some amount, great or small, at once to the treasurer, Mr. J. W. N. Burkett, Jackson, Tenn.

By order of the Executive Commit- tee. J. H. EVANS, Pres.

JOHN L. BROWN, Sec.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

BOOKS.

THE LANCE, CROSS AND CANOE—The Flathoat, Rifle and Plow in the Valley of the Mississippi; Its Great Leaders; Its Past Achievements and Glorious Future. By W. H. Milburn, D. D., Chaplain United States Congress. Nearly 200 Engravings. New York and St. Louis: N. D. Thompson Publishing Company.

This is one of the most charming books we have met with in a long time. History, biography, geography, anec- dote and thrilling recitals abound from opening to close. The author evidently writes con amore, and his lucid style brings everything he touches right be- fore you. We have been much in- structed and charmingly entertained by the perusal of Dr. Milburn's book, and we think every library in the Mis- sissippi Valley should hold this treas- ure-house of history and biography upon its shelf.

THE NATIONAL HYMN BOOK. Edited by Robert Ellis Thompson, S. T. D. Jno. D. Wattles, Philadelphia.

According to an entirely new and useful plan, Dr. Thompson has gath- ered into this one volume the hymns which are common to the hymnaries of the Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, Presbyterians and of the Reformed Churches, with the most usual tunes.

By the side of each hymn is given a series of references to twenty-one denominational and nine privately edit- ed hymn books. The references tell just where the hymn is to be found in any of these thirty books. When a hymn is omitted from any of these books, it is so indicated in the refer- ences.

It is bound in fine cloth, and, owing to the use of the most improved meth- ods of binding, is easily kept wide open. 188 pages. Size, 5½x7¾ inches. Price: per hundred, $50; per dozen, $6 50; single copies by mail, 60 cents.

Good Boots and Shoes.

The card of J. Blass & Son appears in another column. This firm makes first-class shoes and boots, which fit and wear well. Their prices are mod- erate. We advise our gentlemen read- ers to buy their footwear of this reli- able firm.

ALSO COPIES OF PAINTINGS TAKEN FROM THE

To the vast army of stay-at-homes the world beyond the sea, which once seemed so far away from them, has now become nearer. Events that take place in South Africa are known a few hours afterwards in America, and a feeling of familiarity with distant lands thus seems to have been created by telegraph. Besides this, we have books of travel, lectures by explorers and pictures to fall back upon, so that if "we can not go strange countries for to see," we have them brought home to our doors.

This GREAT NEW BOOK, containing a vast collection of Photographs, gathered from every corner of the globe, is printed on enamelled paper, bound in the most durable manner, and sold at $4 per copy.

IMPERFECT VISION.

BY MARTHA BALDWIN ENSION.

With tear-blind eyes, we toil early and late—
Upon his life's pattern—deep and intricate,
The threads of fate, howsoo'er much pursued
Our grasp escape, our highest skill elude.
We battle ever with the shadows, which
Commingle with our light and mar the stitch.
The Master speaks; but heedless to his call
We still toil on, and still our swift tears fall.
When they are shed, then with clear eyes we see
The Father held, alway, for you and me
A finished pattern, far more exquisite
Than we had dreamed; but tears so blurred our sight
We could not read within his watchful eye
His tender love—nor all the grace descry,
Of his own work, shaped for our highest good—
Unseen through tears, and thus misunderstood.

Girls and Housekeeping.

BY MRS. R. G. TYLER.

Of what can women who are mothers be thinking to bring up their daughters as so many are doing to-day in utter ignorance and abhorrence of duties pertaining to housekeeping? As I write numerous instances occur to my mind of women in straitened circumstances with a family of healthy girls who imagine that housework is degrading; consequently they sit in their bare, skimpy parlor waiting for "the beaux," while the money which might go far in making their surroundings more comfortable and attractive is spent to pay a slipshod servant, who probably is the bane of the poor worn-out mother's existence.

One family I know in which the mother, a widow, almost lost her mind in trying to make her slender income meet the wants and requirements of three grown girls. Those girls (strong, healthy young things) must have a servant to do their work when they could so easily do it themselves, thus saving at least $100 a year and lifting untold annoyance from the shoulders of the poor, little broken-down mother.

That mother, through mistaken kindness to her children, is bringing them up in this foolish, sinful way. Foolish, because it is more than probable that if those girls marry at all, they will marry men whose means can ill afford a wife ignorant and incapable in so important a part of married life. The best of men will grow disheartened when he sees his money wasted in the shape of badly cooked meals and careless servants. And the average woman brought up so must learn thus late the neglected lessons with many sad, disappointing experiences.

And the course is sinful because when the Lord said, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work," he meant that just as much as he meant, "But the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, in it thou shalt not do any work," etc.

O that I could awaken every girl, and mother too, to the knowledge that work is no disgrace and housekeeping is a necessary accomplishment at least to those in the middle and lower walks of life.—Christian at Work.

Are You Drifting?

Some years ago there was a vessel coming down the Niagara river, which, when a few miles above the Falls, took fire. It was soon found there could be no particle of hope for saving her, so the crew and passengers were taken ashore in boats and the vessel abandoned to her fate. It was night, and the scene is said to have been grand beyond description. The banks were lined with people who waited in breathless suspense for the inevitable moment as she swept toward the awful verge. At length, with a frightful plunge and hissing sound, amid flashing fire and gleaming spray, she made the bound and disappeared in that awful flood.

How sad it is, but it is none the less true, that there are hundreds of young men in our cities and villages just as hopelessly on fire with evil habit; and through the dark night of temptation they are floating down the current toward a more awful plunge. But surely this is not a manly course.

There can be no glory in mere drifting; going with the current. Floating is essential weakness. A cork can do that. Going against the current is strength. Surely no manly young man needs ever to be convinced that moral weakness is a disgrace, and moral strength is pride and glory. And let it not be forgotten that vacillation in regard to beginning the Christian service is as unworthy, if not more so, than any other. If you have not done so, my brother, you owe it to your manhood to begin a decided Christian life. You know it. Your reason, your heart, your conscience, all tell you so. You not only owe it to God—and you do owe it to him—but you owe it to your own self to take this step if you have not, and to do so at once.—The Young Christian.

A Sanctified Will.

Many Christians would like to be sanctified if they could reserve the privilege of willing to do as they please, in some things at least. They can easily consent to spend all their time in serving the Lord, but they want the right to say how or in what way they shall serve him. They will present themselves before him, and say: "Here am I; send me." But just as soon as God takes them at their word, and tells them where he wants to send them, they are very much like Peter, and say: "Not so, Lord." They do not want to be sent in that particular direction. It doesn't suit their ideas of propriety. There are fancied difficulties in the way, which they don't wish to face and overcome. Their real trouble is, their wills are not sanctified. They would much sooner give all their money and pay someone else for going, than to give up their wills and go in the direction of God's will. Many a professed Christian is very liberal with his money, but very stingy of his will. It is his good pleasure to let God have the free use of so much of his will as does not lose him the entire control of it.—Zion's Herald.

Going to Church.

Absence from church has become chronic with many Christians in these days. A heavy cloud, a slight indisposition, the call of a friend—any trifle is enough to keep them from the sanctuary. They say they can worship at home. Sometimes they claim they find better sermons in their papers or books. And so the excuses run.

My friend, your position is a false one. The public service is a necessity to a vigorous spiritual life. Private meditation and prayer are good, but they can never meet all the needs of the soul. We are creatures of sympathy. We are moved by our surroundings. When one is in an assembly, he involuntarily partakes of its spirit. There is an electric power in numbers that lifts us above what we in solitude would reach. As we enter the sanctuary we breathe its atmosphere. The place itself has its influence. The devout attitude of other worshipers helps us. The songs provide inspiration. The whole service is a spiritual tonic. To miss it is an incalculable loss.

It is sufficient condemnation of absenting one's self from church that almost invariably when it is done a leakage begins in the heart. Experience grows cold and lifeless. Zeal suffers a paralysis. The song of the heart dies down to a moan. The flowers of piety wither. Aspirations cease. Criticism and fault-finding begin. The religious force ebbs away. The individual becomes a drone in the Lord's beehive.

Never stay away from church if you can avoid it. Be faithful there. Your burdens will be lighter. Your sorrows will be cheered. Your confidence strengthened. Your enthusiasm rekindled. Your love widened and deepened. You will grow. Resist the first inclination to remain at home to rest or read. Say to the tempter, "Get thee behind me, Satan." Let punctual and regular church-going be the fixed habit of your life.—Epworth Herald.

The Proper Hours of Sleep.

The Lancet says that the necessity of devoting to sleep several hours in each day is too obvious to admit of serious question. The proper selection of these hours is also, for those who would prolong and usefully employ life, a very needful consideration, though its importance may to some be less evident. We have all met with persons, outside of hospitals and of Parliament, who do half or more of their daily work after night-fall, and sleep long after earlier rising men are awake and busy. Some of these are wont to extol the comfort of their morning slumbers. They describe as immense the refreshment they receive from six or seven hours thus agreeably spent, and no wonder, for the sense of present satisfaction must be very marked, and that for definite reasons. Man, in common with most of the animal creation, has accepted the plain suggestions of Nature, that the approach of night should imply a cessation of effort. If he ignores this principle, his work is done against inherited habit, and, so far, with additional fatigue. It follows, too, from our ordinary social conditions, that he must use artificial light, and sustain its combustion at the cost of his own atmosphere. Naturally, therefore, when he does rest his relief is in proportion to his weariness. As in many other cases, however, sensation is not here the most reliable guide to judicious practice. Established custom affords a far truer indication of the method most compatible with healthy existence. The case of the overworked and the invalid lends but a deceptive color to the argument of the daylight sleeper. In them excessive waste of tissue must be made good, and sleep, always too scanty, is at any time useful for this purpose. For the healthy majority, however, the old custom of early rest and early waking is certain to prove in future, as returns of longevity and common experience alike show that it has proved in the past, most conducive to healthy and active life.

If I Were You.

If I were you, good mother, I would not send my little ones to bed at night without a soothing word and a good-night kiss. Little children should pass into the world of dreams and slumber with a happy, unburdened heart. The entrance should be by a pathway of roses, and not through a hedge of thorns.

If I were you, good mother, I would not think more of the opinions of my neighbors than of the happiness and comfort of my children.

The child has a claim by birthright to happiness and freedom in his home; but a fussy, over-clean mother will convert the home into an asylum of martyrdom for her children.

If I were you, kind father, I would not be a stranger to my growing boys. The father who mingles with his sons as one of them, and becomes their confidant, is the one who keeps his boys in the right track.

If I were you, dear wife, I would not be always on the out-look for the disagreeable traits in my husband's character, but would keep my eyes constantly hearing on the good points. We aggravate the evil in others by frequent notice and mention of it. We stimulate the good by showing that it is appreciated.

If I were you, fond husband, I would carry some of the tenderness and consideration of my courtship days into my married life. The wife who ministers to your comfort and cares for your children, is a thousand times more in need of your kindness and love than was the care-free girl upon whom you lavished it before marriage.—Home and Neighbor.

New Definitions.

School children furnish a good deal of amusement to us elders who know so much. Their blunders seem very funny indeed—and so they are—but then, the same can be said of the grammatical performances of many of us who have long-since parted with the slate, the ferrule, and the much-scratched bench of the school-room.

A teacher in a public school gave out a list of words to be defined and put in sentences. Among them was the word "chasm." A little girl looked in the dictionary, and not being quite satisfied, inquired if "chasm" meant "gap." The teacher absently replied, "Yes," but was astonished when she presented her paper with this sentence: "When I am sleepy I always chasm." But this is hardly equal to another teacher's experience in a little district school some years ago. She gave out words for analysis. "Bank-note" was one of them, and the teacher's astonishment may be imagined when one young lady brought the following unique analysis: "Bank-note is a compound, primitive word, composed of 'bank' and 'note.' 'Bank' is a simple word, meaning the side of a stream; 'note,' to set down. 'Bank-note,' to set down by the side of a stream."—Epworth Herald.

"What can I do for my little boy," asked mama, "so he won't want to eat between meals?"

"Have the meals thicker together," replied the young gourmand.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

DON'T LEAVE THE FARM.

Come, boys, I have something to tell you.
Come near, I would whisper it low—
You are thinking of leaving the homestead,
Don't be in a hurry to go.
The great stirring world has inducements,
There is many a gay, busy mart;
But wealth is not made in a day, boys;
Don't be in a hurry to start.

This farm is the safest and surest.
The orchards are yielding to-day;
You're free as the air of the mountains,
And monarch of all you survey.
Better stay on the farm awhile longer,
Though profits should come rather slow;
Remember, you've nothing to risk, boys,
Don't be in a hurry to go.

To Japan.

COMPANIONS UPON THE PLAINS OF CANADA.

After two and a half days upon the Canadian plain, we lay down to rest the third night, knowing that at the time of waking we would be among the Rockies, for the train was due in Calgary at 2:30 the next morning, and this city of 4,500 stands far up the plateau, overlooked by the white peaks. There were to get off and take a branch road the more than fifty Dakota men who wished to look at land further north. Advice was given that they go down into Mississippi, but they said that the Southerners would impose upon them and cheat them. They were an illustration of the dangerous complex society of the West. But all were not bad. One was a Moravian. He told of the struggle necessary in giving his children the two educations they seemed to need. The Dakota public schools provided greatly for one, but he and his wife could not bear the thought of their children leaving the old religion; so they tried to educate them in their native tongue, and, along with other members of the community, they kept a Moravian pastor. One very huge Swede I fixed upon at once for a "rough;" but his great voice, the bassest I ever heard, misled me. We watched each other the first day; the second, we talked about our changing lives, and when he told me "Good by" that night as he retired, tears were in his eyes, and he expressed a wish that God would be with me in the heathen land.

This reminds of how the first night out from Winnipeg a young lady who was going to the Sunday-school Convention talked to the Chinamen about Jesus. One of them finally said that he had attended Sunday-school in Boston, and exhibited a Bible which had been given to him by some lady as a farewell present. If all the persons with whom that crowd of Chinamen came in contact in America had dealt with them as these two workers in the vineyard, doubtless, all would have gone back to their native land Christians, eager to tell the story of the cross. This one will never forget the young lady who spoke to him upon the train. He referred to her several times during the voyage as "that good woman," and when I said "Good-by" at Kobe, he took her name, and asked that, if I ever wrote to her, he might be remembered. H. G. HAWKINS.

Metsuyama, Japan, Dec. 24, 1892.

MR. EDITOR: Again I write a letter to the dear ADVOCATE. The last time I wrote we were in Mississippi. We are now living in Eustis, Fla., and a right nice place it is. We came from Mississippi, June, 1891, here, and found no organized Methodist Church, South, so we united with the M. E. Church. We have an excellent preacher and a good Sunday-school. The young people have an organized "Christian Endeavor," and meet regularly Sunday evenings. Florida (this part, anyway) is certainly a delightful climate, and nothing can surpass the orange groves, especially now when the trees are full of fruit. I spent a very pleasant Christmas, and received some very nice presents. We are having some right cold weather for this part of Florida. The thermometer yesterday morning was twenty-eight degrees. I wish the cousins would write more letters, as I enjoy reading them so much. Wishing my favorite paper (the ADVOCATE) much success, I close. Your friend,

Brainy Blind Men.

Thomas Blacklock, D. D., one of the most learned men of the eighteenth century, was blind at the age of three months.

Francis Huber, the Swiss naturalist, lost his sight at an early age, became an eminent entomologist, and wrote on bees, ants and other insects.

In 1685 lived Nicholas Sanderson, who, although he became blind at the age of three years, actually became learned in two of the most difficult branches—astronomy and mathematics.

Herman Torrentius, a blind Swiss, born in 1520, became one of the principals of the University of Berne, the author of a poetical dictionary of merit, besides works on history and botany.

David Meebeth, the inventor of the string alphabet for the blind, was born blind. He was an accomplished musician, a perfect prodigy in mathematics and an inventor of no mean order of merit.

John Metcalf, blind at the age of four years, and a most wonderful production of the last century, was born at Knaresborough, Yorkshire, England, in 1717. He was the most expert violinist in all England when only twelve years old.

Vidal, the blind sculptor, is one of the wonders of the French capital. He has been blind since his twenty-first year. By slowly passing his hands over an object he notes its external proportions, and imitates them in clay in a manner which strikes the beholder dumb with surprise.

Henry Fawcett, the blind English postmaster-general, who died in 1884, was a greater man by half after the unfortunate accident which deprived him of sight than he ever was before. He was born in 1838 and lost his eyes in 1858, at the age of twenty-five, from the effect of a gunshot wound.

John Gough, totally blind from the age of three years, became quite celebrated as a botanist and writer on subjects pertaining to natural philosophy. He arranged, by the sense of touch alone, and without the least aid from any living human being, one of the largest and most valuable collections of dried herbs and grasses at that time (1780) known in Britain.

Mr. Herreshoff, the blind president of the Herreshoff Manufacturing Company of Bristol, R. I., seems as much out of his element in his present capacity as either the blind sculptor or the blind postmaster-general. Aside from Edison, the government has recognized him as being one of the greatest inventors of the times.—New York Morning Journal.

A Tragedy of Errors.

BY REV. EVAN STONE.

Act 1.—Boy reading a modern "published every day in the year" daily newspaper. Becomes familiar with the language of crime and criminals. The natural horror of crime is blunted. The "spicy" style of the reporter is whetting his appetite. No religious paper in the home.

Act 2.—Same boy reading an illustrated story paper. His imagination is fired by seminude pictures of crime and criminals. He begins to long "to see the world himself." Home life is growing too tame for him. His father "can't afford to take the church paper."

Act 3.—Same boy reading a five-cent novel—"Spiderlegs, the Indian Scout." He learns that commission of crime is manly, courageous, Decency is dull, and honest work is slavery. The criminal is a hero. He wants to be a hero. There are no good books in the house.

Act 4.—Midnight. Boy in bed, but not asleep. He is poring over an obscene book smuggled into the house by stealth. He starts at every sound on the stairs. Look at him! The devil's servants have left footprints on his once fair face. His eye burns with a fierce fire, but he can not look you in the face. His lips are discolored with nicotine, his room smells of tobacco and his breath of beer. "Good books," says his father, "cost too much."

Act 5.—The last. The scene has changed. No longer the quiet Eastern village, but a mining camp in the mountains. Instead of Brussels carpet, the floor is covered with saw dust. Bottles instead of books adorn the walls. A blear-eyed, half-clad, limber-bodied thing, in form a man, but in fact a fiend, lies in one corner. Is it alive? Yes, if animal-life is manlife; otherwise it is dead, dead to God, to home, honor. Said we not well it was a tragedy of errors? There is a religious paper in that home now, but it is too late for him.—The Way of Faith.

Training Boys.

It is my belief that, as a rule, boys are abused, and it is small wonder that so many of them grow up to be so thoughtless and useless. I want to make all due allowance for the nervous, overworked mothers (for I have been one myself), who can not long endure the noisy clatter of little boots, or the restless romping of "those boys!" But oh! how often a little planning and loving forethought would save our "nerves" and also our boys.

Give the boys a room of their own, where they may be allowed to work, play, read, or whatever the boyish fancy may dictate. If he be fond of reading, let him have plenty of good, suitable books and papers, and an easy chair in which to sit while he reads them.

A boy loves comfort as well as a girl does, and money spent in making him comfortable at home goes a long way toward keeping him off the street. Some boys can not be satisfied to spend a whole evening in reading; these must be provided for in some other way. Let them have games—there are many innocent ones—and let them invite their friends into the house, and feel that they have a share in the home. I used to let my boys pop corn, make taffy candy, whittle, and run a scroll saw in the evening, in spite of the litter it made, and I never regretted it.

If the boy wants to make money—that is, speculate in a small way—and can do it without interfering with his school duties, let him do so. It will teach him to be industrious, and will cultivate business habits. I knew a mother who went into partnership with her boys, she furnishing the capital and the boys doing the work. In this way she taught them to keep accounts, and if the money made did not amount to much, the lessons learned were invaluable.

Boys like to be trusted; it makes them manly. If a boy deserves praise, give it to him freely. I know there are boys and boys; but I have never yet found one who was not susceptible to kindness, and who could not be managed if the right course was pursued.—Selected.

Who Gave Him the Food?

Dave took his seat at the breakfast table one morning, and without waiting for his father to give thanks began helping his plate.

"Before the blessing is asked?" said his mother in surprise. Dave sniffed the pleasant smell of the cakes awhile, and looked discontented.

"I hope you ain't forgetting, Devie," said his mother, "the Lord that gives us our daily bread."

"Seems as if father gave it to us, though," said the little sinner. "Father ploughs, and reaps, and threshes, and pays toll for having it ground."

Farmer Bennett came in then and reverently asked the Lord to bless the food he had prepared for them. He had been wiping his face on the roller towel at the kitchen door, and had heard what Dave said.

"I want you to take a grain of corn, Davie," he said, "and make it grow without any of the Lord's help."

"Sir!" said the little boy in surprise.

"Of course you mustn't use his earth, nor his sunshine, nor his rain; I want you to do it yourself."

Davie hung his head and looked a little sheepish; he began to see what his father meant, and he never again proposed eating his johnny-cake without first thanking the Lord who sent it to him.—Exchange.

An Old Family Friend.

An old man was leading a thin old horse across the commons in the northern part of the city, when a passer-by asked him where he was going.

"I'm searching for a bit of green for the poor beast," he answered.

"I'd send him to the boneyard or the glue factory," said the other, contemptuously.

"Would you?" asked the old man in a trembling voice. "If he had been the best friend you had in the world, and helped you to earn food for your family for nearly twenty-five years? If the children that's gone, and the children that's livin' had played with their arms about his neck and their heads on him for a pillow when they had no other? Sir, he's carried us to mill and to meetin', an', please God, he shall die like a Christian. Nobody'll ever abuse old Bill, for if I go afore him there are those paid to look after him."

"I beg your pardon," said the man who had accosted him, "there's a difference in people."

"Ay, and in horses too," said the old man as he passed on with his four-footed friend.—Philadelphia Times.

I placed a package of sugar on the table and my five-year-old daughter, after an examination, asked, "Mama, what kind of sugar is this?"

"Granulated, my dear."

"Why, mama, I thought you sent for paralyzed sugar!"

You can buy a chimney to fit your lamp that will last till some accident happens to it.

Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass" is that chimney.

You can have it—your dealer will get it—if you insist on it. He may tell you it costs him three times as much as some others. That is true. He may say they are just as good. Don't you believe it—they may be better for him; he may like the breaking.

RABSTON—JOHN BRYAN BRABSTON was in Jefferson county, Miss., June 7, 1818, died at his home, near Bovina, Miss., Sept. 92. His parents moved to this county in where he resided continuously until his sion upon earth was fulfilled, and the soul rned to the God who gave it, and was num-d among the "spirits of just men made fect." His grandfather, Rev. Joseph Bul-was sent as a missionary to the Mississippi ritory by the Presbyterian Church in 1799, had the honor of being the first missionary sent to this country by any church.

ro. Brabston was converted and joined the E. Church, South, at the old Mt. Albon rch in 1818, and ever afterwards lived a sistent Christian life, serving this church as ithful steward until 1863, when it was de-yed by the Federal Army. So bright was conversion that he never forgot the exact e and even spot upon which it occurred; now, according to his request, his body beneath the identical spot where forty-years before he found the Lord precious to soul. At the close of the war he was in-mental in building the Methodist Church ch now stands at Bovina, where he also e an efficient steward, Sunday school su-nteudent, trustee, etc., for many years, ll failing health prevented his attendance. the death of Bro. W. M. STEVENS.

CHARDSON—Died Jan. 10, 1893, at West-her home on the Teche, Mrs. KATE SMITH, widow of the late John W. Rich-on, in her fifty-ninth year. She had re-at her usual hour—but not feeling well—a friend who had come to spend the with her. "Are you comfortable?" she ; then turned on her pillow and breathed st without a struggle. That good, faith-eart, so noble and brave, was forever in death. That gentle voice was ed and her soul was with its Maker. But, h sudden, the summons found her her "lamp trimmed and burning," ready e bridegroom. She was born at Renton, ntonshire, Scotland, but soon after made ow her home. From there, in early girl-she came to New Orleans with her uncle, acaulay, a kinsman of the great historian. completing her education at his semi-there for young ladies, she engaged in ing, and left a warm place in the hearts rents and pupils in lower St. Mary. In he was married to Mr. Richardson—his d wife—and life was before her all carn-d rest. She became eyes to the blind ed him by the hand of love through nearly years of wedded happiness. She came m amid war's desolation when clear-ed, strong-minded, brave men went down e the financial storm that swept our -laed, to be driven from their homes like over the world. He begun life anew, and s great industry and energy, with her n thrift and canna hand, it became a omeal success. By her strong mind and ed heart she helped to place him in local with those brilliant lights which out of tual darkness have astonished the world. his proud boast that to the "good wife ord had given him" he owed the home-r for his family. From this marriage was one child—F. Rivers—now of the profession in New Orleans.

ess than two years she has followed her and from their beautiful Westover to the y cemetery at Bayside and into the sweet d. Amid all the unusual cares and re-bilities of her domestic life, her Christian were never neglected. Long has she recognized as a lovely pillar in the odist Church at Jeanerotte, erected mainly th the efforts of her husband and herself. its beginning she has been the faithful tendent of its Sunday-school, and her eachings of its lessons will long be re-ered. Weeping, that Sunday-school red around her lovely flower-covered , while her pastor, Mr. Cassity, briefly ed up her life-work to the crowd of be-d friends around her. "God moves his ers, but his work goes on." "So may it be" came from sad and bereaved hearts.

For the third and last time in this generation this lovely home has been draped in mourning. The life-work of three noble hearts and willing hands now spreads itself in those deep umbrageons shades and lovely orange groves. As in nature their works do follow them, so may the precious seed sown broadcast through their lives bear rich fruit in coming time.

DICKERSON—Christ, when upon earth, selected from the vast universe of sentient beings a child as the model of heavenly character. A "little child" was the earthly type of the perfect, Christ-like character, a prerequisite to eternal life and glory. "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven." How fitting this selection! How matchless such a type of character! Such was the beautiful young life of our dear little friend, SALLIE HENRIETTA DICKERSON, whose holy example and precious influence still abides with us, though she has gone to dwell forever in the beautiful "mansions above." Her pastor talked and prayed with her during her last illness, and she gave happy assurances of being ready and willing to obey the summons, "Come up higher." Her last act of Christian work was for the missionary cause. A few days before her death she gave the writer her "missionary box," containing three dollars, the result of her zeal in this holy cause. The attending physicians were the last, at her request, to give to her "box." She seemed to have a presentment of an early death, and was filled with zeal for the cause of Christ. As she neared the verge of life, her face was radiant with the smile of a soul filled with the symphonies of heaven. She sang distinctly and touchingly several favorite songs, such as, "I hear thy welcome voice," "I am coming, Lord, to thee," "My home is in heaven," and others.

After her bright spirit had taken its flight, and the lifeless body had been laid in the grave, as the broken-hearted ones at the old home began putting away Sallie's little treasures, two small pieces of writing were found, saying, "Farewell to all; farewell to friends, both old and young." "Meet me on Canaan shore." "I crave the prayers of all. Farewell to all!" Again she wrote:

"O sing to me of heaven when I am called to die, Sing songs of holy ecstacy to wait my soul on high."

Thus a beautiful young life closed, making this world darker and sadder, the celestial city brighter and more joyful.

Sallie Henrietta was the daughter of C. L. and Martha Dickerson, of Shrook, Miss.; born Jan. 14, 1880; died Dec. 15, 1892. Sallie joined the Methodist Church in August, 1891.

She was a faithful, devout little Christian. Her Bible and Sunday-school were foremost with her always. All loved and admired her, but none, except the sorrowing family, loved her more than her pastor.

May God, in his infinite goodness, comfort the sorrowing ones, and bring them together again, an unbroken family in heaven!

"How joyful is the thought that lingers
When loved ones cross death's sea,
That when our labors here are ended,
With them we'll ever be.

"We'll never say good-by in heaven,
We'll never say good-by.
No, in that land of joy and song,
We'll never say good-by."

E. F. EDGAR.

CHAMBERLAIN—EMILY CHAMBERLAIN (nee Marshall) was born in Warren county, Miss., July 22, 1817. At fifteen years of age she was converted and joined the M. E. Church. Was married to Willard Chamberlain, Dec. 15, 1836; moved from Mississippi to Erath county, Texas, November, 1874, and quietly fell on sleep Dec. 26, 1892, in the seventy-fifth year of her age, having been a consistent member of the church for more than sixty years. Her husband, a Texas veteran, preceded her to the home of the good six years.

Sister Chamberlain was a benediction to her family, an ornament in society, and a friend of the poor; and while she was fully identified with Texas, church, people and preachers, yet her love and devotion for the church and preachers of the home of her youth never abated. Her last sickness was long and painful, but she did not murmur, and when the final hour came, she said to weeping children and devoted friends, "I want to go; I want to rest." The conflict is over, the victory won, the crown is worn. J. W. HEARN.

DECKER—Mr. ANTHONY DECKER was born in Germany, Jan. 25, 1837, and died at his residence on Maurepas Island, Livingston parish, La., on Jan. 4, 1893. His illness was of long duration, but the summons found him ready, as he is said to have "died in the triumph of faith."

He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss. He has been a member of the M. E. Church, South, about ten years. He was a member of the Maurepas Church at the time of his death.

Bro. Decker's family loved him dearly. What is their loss is his eternal gain. Only a few days ago we laid him to rest under the boughs of a beautiful oak where he sleeps the blessed sleep.

May the same Spirit that caused the fear of death to flee, comfort his bereaved family!

Growing Roses.

There is a world of pleasure to be derived from a garden full of roses; even a single flower, in a little red pot, will brighten the home and bring good cheer. With the right kind of plants there is no difficulty in the way of everybody having the choicest roses; a little soil, water and sunshine is the only care they require, and they amply repay for the slight trouble and expense. The best roses for home culture are those grown by the Dingee & Conard Company at West Grove, Pa. For twenty-five years this firm has been propagating roses of every variety on their own roots and sending them by mail to every part of the land. Their method of starting a rose is peculiarly their own. When the plant leaves their hands it is ready to thrive and bloom in pot or garden. This firm publishes an illustrated "Guide to Rose Culture," which contains complete instructions for growing flowers of all kinds, and much other information interesting and valuable to the lover of flowers. They offer to send it Free, and enclose a specimen copy of their floral magazine, "Success with Flowers," to all who make application.

Special Clubbing Offer.

THAT GREAT FARMERS' PAPER—"THE PRAIRIE FARMER"—AND THIS PAPER ONE YEAR FOR ONLY $2.50.

We are pleased to announce that we have made arrangements with the publishers of THE PRAIRIE FARMER, of Chicago, Ill., whereby we can offer that popular farmers' paper, in connection with our own. The regular price of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is $2.00 a year. The regular price of THE PRAIRIE FARMER is $1 00 a year. We will send both papers one year—52 numbers each—for $2.50. This offer is made to each of our subscribers who will pay all arrearages on subscriptions and one year in advance; and to all new subscribers paying one year in advance. THE PRAIRIE FARMER is handsomely printed and illustrated, and for more than fifty years it has been recognized as the leader of the agricultural press. It is issued weekly, filled with interesting and practical matter, and is now read in more than 50,000 homes. Its departments—Agriculture, Live Stock, Horticulture, Dairy, Poultry, Apiary, Gardening, Household, Young Folks and Miscellany—contain matter in each issue from noted writers. It is a most welcome weekly visitor. Read what some good farmers say of this great paper:

Mr. J. J. Sittler, Randolph, Missouri, writes: I am a careful reader of your esteemed paper; have been so for the last ten years. It seems as though I get more interested in your weekly budget and good advertising the older I grow. I have been, and am, reading different farmers' weeklies, "worthy papers," but always come back to the old reliable PRAIRIE FARMER. It has given me much good advice, much consoling comfort and interesting pastime, in and out of its inexhaustible treasure box of farmers' literature. It offers more help and good to the public as well as individual welfare, in and through its columns, than any other weekly paper of the same size and for the same money.

Mr. Henry Leman, Woodford county, Ill., writes: I send you my name and two new ones for the good old PRAIRIE FARMER, which I have read since long before the great Chicago fire. I have always found it a good and reliable paper, and think all farmers should read it.

THE PRAIRIE FARMER is thoroughly adapted to all sections of the country, and Southern farmers will find it helpful in many ways. We hope that our readers will appreciate our efforts in securing this great paper at so low a price. The publishers advise us that they will send a sample copy to all who so request.

Dr. Price's Baking Powder.

SUPPLYING THE ARMY, NAVY AND INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The purchasing agents of the United States Government ordered nearly one hundred thousand pounds of Dr. Price's Baking Powder in the first five months of 1892.

The government exercises great care in selecting its supplies of all kinds, rejecting everything that is not of the best, and the very fact that it has adopted Dr. Price's Baking Powder is proof that it has found it the best of all the baking powders. Dr. Price's is peculiarly adapted for export, as neither long sea voyages nor climate changes affect it, this brand keeping fresh and sweet for years, while other baking powders deteriorate rapidly.

It is guaranteed to the government to be a pure cream of tartar powder, free from ammonia, alum, or other harmful substances, and it is also the only baking powder prepared by a physician of high standing.

The new Gregory Seed Catalogue for 1893 is the most valuable ever issued. It is greatly enlarged and contains new departments, as well as new varieties of seeds and plants. No more reliable catalogue is ever published than this, as every seed sold from it carries the guarantee of a dealer who has always received and merited the confidence of his customers. Mr. Gregory raises the large majority of his seeds on his own farms, and has been very successful in the new varieties he has introduced. A card to J. J. H. Gregory & Son, Marblehead, Mass., will bring a copy of this handsome catalogue FREE, to any applicant.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

It is said that President Harrison will nominate a successor to the late Justice Lamar.

An explosion of dynamite occurred in the mixing-house of the Sterling Dynamite Company's Works, near Bessemer, Ala., on Jan. 27. Two men were killed and the building blown to atoms.

The Romish propaganda has addressed a circular to the American archbishops relative to the foundation of a permanent apostolic delegation in the United States with Archbishop Satolli as titular.

The Supreme Court has decided that the Austrian premium bonds constitute a true lottery within the meaning of the statutes, notwithstanding the plea that they are a part of the Austrian debt, and that they are, therefore, not maliable.

Toward the fund needed to buy the home of Walt Whitman in Camden $500 has now been subscribed, and $1,500 more is needed. It is intended that the poet's bed-room and study shall be preserved unaltered in contents and all.

The President has sent to the Senate a new extradition treaty with Sweden, recently negotiated. Among other things the treaty provides that each government shall deliver up persons charged with or convicted of certain crimes within the jurisdiction of one of the contracting parties and seeking asylum in the territory of the other.

Boyd county, Nebraska, has practically seceded from the State, and declares that it will pay no taxes until it is accorded representation in the State government. When the county was organized, some two years ago, no measures were taken to attach it to any representative district, and it has practically been unrepresented in the State Legislature.

Mr. Wong Sing Woo, representing the Chinese Equal Rights League, appeared before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on Jan. 26, and advocated the repeal of the Geary Chinese act. He represented, he said, 150,000 Chinamen in this country, who are no longer emigrants, but bona-fide residents of the United States, Chinamen who have been in this country from ten to thirty years and understand and abide by our laws.

The most notable event of the week in Congress will probably be the disposition of the anti-options bill in the Senate. It will in all probability be sent back to the House, with its many amendments, an entirely different measure from the original Hatch bill as passed by that body. The first two of the regular annual appropriation bills are now on the calendar of the Senate—the army bill and the fortifications bill—and it is expected that the District of Columbia appropriation bill will be added to the list early in the week.

President Harrison has just signed a bill which authorizes Chicago men to construct over the Mississippi river, at New Orleans, the largest cantilever bridge in America. Surveyors and engineers will leave the city at once to begin preliminary operations, and within three years the $5,000,000 structure will be ready for traffic The length of the main channel span will be 1,095 feet, and the two side spans will be 757 feet long, with the lowest part of the upper structure not less than 85 feet above the extreme high water mark.

FOREIGN.

The Rothschild syndicate has borrowed $10,000,000 in gold in the United States for the use of Austria in introducing her currency reform.

The Panama Canal frauds are still under investigation in Paris. Violent debates occur in the Chamber of Deputies almost daily, the government being attacked for its past and present attitude toward those implicated in the scandal.

It is reported that the Czar of Russia contemplates soon assuming the title of Emperor of Asia to offset Victoria's title of Empress of India. The recent visits of the Ameer of Bokhara and of the Khan of Khiva to St. Petersburg are thought to have been preliminaries to this step.

The British Parliament re-assembled on Jan. 31. Owing to the small majority possessed by the government, there exists a quite general impression that the present Parliament will not last even through the usual term of a first session, and as the opposition is not only numerically strong, but likewise possessed of the ablest debaters and leaders in Parliament, the Ministry will be assailed on all sides from the very start.

Liliuokalani, Queen of Hawaii, has been deposed from power, and a provisional government has been appointed over the island. Queen Liliuokalani attempted on Saturday, Jan. 15, to promulgate a new constitution depriving foreigners of a right of franchise and abrogating existing House of Nobles, at the same time giving her power of appointing a new house. The Cabinet, backed by the foreign element, objected. The provisional government has sent commissioners to Washington, who will ask that the island be annexed as a territory.

When the concession lapses next month it is probable that the government of Columbia will take immediate possession of the Panama Canal and the visible assets of the company. If this is done the Columbian government expects the aid of the United States, if necessary. This expectation is based on the treaty with the United States by which that government is bound to protect the interests of Columbia. A new concession may be granted to an American and British syndicate if it is anxious to secure it. If not, the Columbian government may undertake to complete the work as a national enterprise.

To-Day Hood's Sarsaparilla stands at the head in the medicine world, admired in prosperity and envied in merit by thousands of would-be competitors. It has a larger sale than any other medicine. Such success could not be won without positive merit.

Hood's Pills cure constipation.

BABIES ON FIRE

Babies burning up, babies agony from itching and burning eczemas and other torturing, figuring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly and blotchy skin and scalp diseases. None but mothers realize how these little ones suffer when their tender skins are literally on fire. To know that a single application of the CUTICURA REMEDIES will in the great majority of cases afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a permanent and economical (because most speedy) cure, and not to do them is to fail in your duty. Think of the years of suffering entailed by such neglect, yea not only of physical, but of mental suffering by reason of personal disfigurement. Why delay a moment longer the use of the great skin cures, blood purifiers and humor remedies? Cuticura, made in infancy and childhood, are speedy, economical, and most invariably permanent.

Dedication at New Iberia.

The engraving we present our readers on this page represents the new M. E. Church, South, at New Iberia, La. Its solemn dedication to God, last Sunday, by Bishop Galloway marks the completion of an enterprise taken in hand almost three years ago, and now brought to a happy and successful issue through earnest work and self-sacrificing giving by the congregation, whose deep poverty has abounded unto liberality.

The building formerly occupied by the people of our church at New Iberia was built in 1859, under the pastorate of Rev. Thomas B. White, and was at that time one of the handsomest and best furnished of our church edifices outside New Orleans. The Annual Conference of 1868 was held there. Situated in what was then a most advantageous locality in the upper part of the town, the church had for thirteen years been unpleasant, even vexatious, by reason of changes in the surrounding population, and by the laying of the Southern Pacific railroad track on Washington street, parallel with the length of the church, and not over thirty feet away. This rendered the church almost useless at times, and, as the railroad traffic increased, the annoyance caused by freight and passenger trains passing during the hours of public service became almost intolerable. For some time the need of a change of locality had been apparent. Nothing short of self-preservation demanded the change, and yet the years went by, nothing done, the people becoming more and more discouraged. The rich members of the church died, became bankrupt, or were reduced in fortune. The present pastor was sent to New Iberia by Bishop Duncan with instructions to "move that church." Providence aided the project by permitting the burning of the old, historic house of God, in which were centered so many holy memories, and with which were associated so many sacred events. The Lord finally ended all debates as to the ability of his people to build him a place where he might put his name, by the logic of events. Saturday evening, May 24, 1890, the old church and parsonage put on red wings, and, despite the most courageous exertions of the fire department, the places thereof knew them no more. The people living at a distance came next morning to worship God in the sanctuary, but to find the house of God in ashes. The parsonage was burned, and the pastor, Rev. [illegible] S. Parker, became the guest of his [illegible]frere, Rev. C. C. Kramer, rector of the Protestant Episcopal Church; after [illegible]rds found a cordial welcome at the [illegible]ome of James A. Lee, Esq., where during the long illness which soon attacked him, he was carefully attended by Dr. Lee and his wife.

By the first Sunday in June the Methodist congregation had secured the opera house for temporary use. Their pastor preached two sermons there. That at the morning service, on Job xxvii, 21, dealt with the general subject of providences hard to be understood now, but which would be justified by future events. "And now men see not the bright light which is in the clouds; but the wind passeth, and cleanseth them." The congregation, in their total loss of church and parsonage, without insurance or resources of any sort, were exhorted to look for God's good purpose in their loss. Sweet Scripture promises assured them that they needed not to fear, but simply to trust. Then the first subscription was made toward the building of a proposed brick church on a new and advantageous site. The work, however, was retarded by the long sickness of the pastor, by which, for over three months, he was kept from work. Difficulty was met in procuring such a piece of ground as was to be desired for building, the trustees deeming the location of the church most important.

The lot having been purchased, a temporary building was erected upon it, and there during two years the congregation has been worshiping while awaiting the temple to succeed the "tabernacle." But what blessed years were those of waiting, while many, many souls found both Bethel and Peniel at the rude altar of the homely little tabernacle. There were many amens, silent and expressed, at the dedication service when the Bishop said: "Only one thing in the magnificent temple of Solomon was taken from the old tabernacle of the wilderness; they put aside the old brazen altar, they folded and laid away the old curtains of fine twined linen; but the ark of the covenant, containing Aaron's rod that budded, the pot of manna and the Tables of the Law, was brought into the new sanctuary. It was the same old law and covenant, though all else was new. So, brethren, you may move out of your tabernacle into this beautiful temple, with its magnificent organ, beautiful memorials and furnishings—that is well: let us have beauty and brightness in God's house; but keep the same old gospel. . . . St. Paul's great boast as he sung his own triumphant requiem, was not that he had fought a good fight, overcome the adversaries, conquered the beasts at Ephesus; not that he had finished his course; not that his brow was now almost ready for the glittering diadem, the crown of righteousness; but that he had kept the faith."

The new church edifice is a demonstration that the Lord will provide means for carrying on his work, even against human prospects, and when people prognosticate failure. The starting-point was a bequest of $500 by the late Dr. J. Schriener; $650 was obtained from the sale of the old church lots; help from the Conference and General Boards of Church Extension to the amount of $1,300 donation, and $1,000 loan on five years' time at four per cent. interest (part of which has been repaid) was cheerfully given and gratefully received. We wish here to say that this beautiful temple would probably not have been builded but for the timely aid from our great Church Extension Board. We expect New Iberia, at least, never to fall short of the full amount of her assessment for church extension. We beg leave also to advise every congregation in the connection to equal faithfulness in meeting this claim. You do not know when you may become petitioners for funds of the Board in a time of need.

"Built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief Corner-stone."—Ephesians II,20—

was laid March 30, 1892, by Girard Hope Chapter F. and A. M., orations being delivered by Judge A. C. Allen, of Franklin, and Rev. W. H. LaPrade, D. D. Six hundred dollars were raised for carrying on the building at the corner-stone celebration. The remainder of the total expenditure of nearly $8,000 has come from the free-will offering of the people in answer to prayer and hard work. At the dedication service, Sunday morning, there remained $1,800 to be provided for, over and above $800 due the Board of Church Extension.

The Sabbath came, cold, leaden, threatening; but by the hour of service, as announced by means of much printer's ink, the church presented anything but a sombre appearance. Within everything was bright. The two large, three-panel memorial windows to the memory of Mrs. F. X. Gall and Mrs. A. W. Peebles; the gifts, respectively, of Captain E. A. Puarr and Mrs. J. W. McPherson, caught the gray light and transmuted into prismatic chromos and glowing hues—the terra cotta walls and polished cypress ceilings and wainscoting—the illuminated open diamason pipes of the exquisite Barckhoff organ—the eager faces that looked from tier on tier of the convenient and comfortable amphitheatric auditorium, crowding the house to its utmost capacity—all offset the gloomy aspect without, and presently the sun, envious of the scene, himself came out to look in through cathedral glass upon it.

The service was conducted by Bishop Galloway, assisted by presiding elder Rev. John A. Miller, and the pastor, Rev. F. S. Parker. The Bishop's sermon we shall not attempt to criticise—who can criticise Bishop Galloway? You have to listen to him; you do listen to him in such a pleased delight and joy in every faculty that you are ready to club the first critic that "chirps." At the conclusion of the sermon the Bishop, assisted by Bros. Miller and Parker, lifted $2,300 in subscriptions and cash. This made everybody feel good; the people who had given most felt best. The officers of the church, led by Captain E. A. Pharr, who made the presentation, solemnly surrounded in consecrating circle the new altar, and the Bishop pronounced the sentence of dedication, and led the prayer of consecration. The Quarterly Conference has passed a resolution forbidding the use of this now holy place for any purposes whatever other than divine service. In this step they are to be much commended in a day one tendency of which is toward diminished reverence for, and secularizing of, the house of God.

The church-building is very beautiful and in good taste within and without, and in every part represents home industry. Messrs. O. J. Trainor's Sons & Co. have done the factory and sash work; the timber was cut at the mill of Messrs. Gall & Pharr; lumber was furnished also by the Iberia Lumber Co.; the brick was made out of the banks of Bayou Teche; the pulpit, perhaps as handsome as any in the State, was made and presented by Mr. E. W. Phillips. The magnificent reflecting chandelier was made by I. P. Frink, New York, and is a wonderful improvement over old methods of lighting. The beautiful Carl Barckhoff pipe organ, manufactured at Salem, Ohio, is the gift of the "girls" of the church. The church still lacks a bell and new pulpit Bible and Hymnal, however, and as our means are about exhausted, must lack these for a time unless—but we fear to proceed lest we be accused of hinting.

We feel that Methodism has here well occupied a strategic point; our New Iberia people have planned for the future; their work will remain when they and their children are gone. But how much of an uplift the visit of our dear Bishop has been to them none can now say.

LA TECHE.

New Iberia, La., Feb. 6, 1893.

The Church and Prohibition.

The church is a conservative body. Freighted, as she is, with the great interests, hopes and destinies of mankind, she can not be otherwise than conservative.

The church is not the antagonist of one, but of all social and moral evils. The ægis of her protection is not only thrown around man in his contest with the manifold enticements to evil of his fallen nature, but over society, as an organized congregation of men, she extends the guardianship of her protecting care.

The relation existing between the church and the communicant gives rise to reciprocal rights, duties and obligations. To the one belongs the right, duty and obligation of direction, protection and correction, where the same may be necessary; to the other belongs the right, duty, and obligation of obedience, respect, support and maintenance. A violation of these, or either of these, so far, tends to the disintegration of the church and an apostacy of the communicant. With us, as a church, these rights, duties and obligations, whilst having and preserving, at all times, their proper binding force and effect, have also their precise limitations; and the most important limitation, and the great jurisdictional fact as to the powers of the church, is, that the powers of the church, the scope and sphere of its operation, and, consequent upon this, the duty and obligation of the communicant to obedience, respect, support and maintenance, extends to and includes spiritual matters only.

The church does not regulate the communicant's temporal affairs, his business or his politics; and, before the jurisdiction of the church attaches to any matter, it must be of a spiritual nature. But when this jurisdiction once attaches, it is exclusive. At each church the communicant can not assume and exercise the powers of a minister of the gospel, unless he has first thereunto been duly licensed and commissioned by the church; but, when once licensed and commissioned, he becomes amenable to the jurisdiction of the church—and the church only.

The church is conservative. It is the salt of the earth, with love for all and ill-will towards none. It reaches down after man in his sin and iniquity, lifts him into the sunlight of truth and purity, and speeds him on his high destiny. Her ministers—the highly commissioned officers of her sovereignty—contend, not with one foe, but with the arch-enemy, however and wherever he may present himself.

In the sale of intoxicating liquors the church recognizes a great evil, but not the only one, nor as an evil which should claim the entire time and attention of the church; and, whilst temperance lecturers and others who may expend their entire time and energies in this behalf may find fault with what they are pleased to call the lukewarmness of the church, yet they fail to note the fact that intemperance is only one evil, and that the efforts of the church are not confined in one channel. Further, the field of the church's operations is very extended, and much good is done which is not at once apparent, and also much good is done which is erroneously attributed to other sources.

The church is the great and potent enemy of intemperance, and were it not for the efforts of the church, not only as directly exerted against intemperance, but also in molding and elevating public sentiment along the lines of truth and righteousness, many itinerant temperance lecturers would abandon their avocations for lack of support and encouragement.

The church has placed the mighty stamp of her approval on the temperance movement, but there are some things which will be left to take care of themselves. There are excrescences attaching to the temperance movement; there are some things inimical to that well-balanced, highly-ordered condition of society so characteristic of our Southern society. It is our pride that we have always yielded a chivalrous courtesy and high regard for our women that is found, perhaps, nowhere else on earth; yet certain parties coming from a section where men and women are pretty much on a par, and roughly jostle each other in the commonest walks of life, and who are strangers to that high-bred deference we yield to our women, come amongst us with their short hair and sharp voices, strutting the stage and decrying against the lukewarmness of the church, our peculiar way of doing things, and, in fact, against pretty much everything except the collection which they never fail to take up, and the best of good, warm, comfortable quarters for themselves. Such parties, under the cover of prohibition, sow the seed of other new and strange doctrines, such as female suffrage. Never having succeeded in catching a man, they wish to become men themselves, as is evidenced, among other things, by their assimilating the garb and dress of men.

Temperance is a great and good thing, but these things are not temperance, though they may be a certain kind of prohibition—although they should operate as a prohibition against their imitation. There is a growing impression among the laity that there is getting to be too great a disposition towards this general evangelizing. At any rate, it is a subject to be strictly regulated by the church.

In conclusion, let everything be done rightly and in order. Stand by the established authorities; support the church, her ordinances and ministers; hold up their hands, urge on the wheels of Zion, and then—the church will put on her beautiful garment of righteousness, and be as a bride adorned for her bridegroom. But be not deceived; hold fast that which is good; by their fruits ye shall know them, and if this fruit is principally money, you may know that this is what they are planting to reap. We have the means of preservation among ourselves. We need no foreign importations. A sound conservatism will have none of these things. Conservatism is, in its nature, protective. It builds not upon the sand; it proves all things, knowing full well that where there are many isms, there is necessarily much error. Extreme measures are not always the best, and sudden action is not likely to be continuous. It is by persistent and continuous efforts that the best results are accomplished; and it is through the efforts of the church that prohibition will finally be accomplished. Any other kind of prohibition is transitory, and the reason of this is, that a man will not conscientiously oppose the sale of liquor until his moral nature is so quickened that he looks upon such sale as morally wrong. In this respect prohibition is very similar to the subject of missions. The foundation of the support of missions is laid in the quickened conscience of the people, and just so it is and must ever be with prohibition. The true and continuous opposition to the sale of liquor arises from that condition of mind and heart which opposes everything that is evil. Then, is it not evident that a man who is opposed to such sale is a better man? But one man is not sufficient to enforce prohibition. A majority of the men must be opposed to the sale. But a majority of the men will not be opposed to the sale of liquor until they are better men. Then the question resolves itself into this: How are a majority of the men of the land to be made better men? You mistake the issue when you call it prohibition. That's not it. The question is, How are a majority of the men of the land to be made better men? The way we reach this conclusion, to repeat, is this: A man will not conscientiously oppose the sale of liquor until his moral nature is so quickened that he is a better man; but one man is not sufficient. Then, a majority of the men of the land will not oppose the sale of liquor until they are better men. Then, how are a majority of the men of the land to be made better men? What great means has God placed in the world to make men better men? The answer is obvious. So we repeat, that if prohibition ever finally prevails—and that it will finally prevail no man who believes in the eternity and perpetuity of God's Word can doubt—it will prevail and be accomplished through the instrumentality of the church.

Right royally has the church waged her warfare against intemperance. The bright gleam of her scimitar has always flashed in the thickest of the fight, and the clarion notes of her bugle charge have always called her sons to battle. All glory to the church! May God speed her destiny until, no longer the church militant, she sits down at the bridal supper of the Lamb!

LAYMAN OR SEXTUS.

Are We Safely Drifting?

Any act of administration not justified by law is against law, and may be denominated drifting. Such action is never patriotic; is it ever safe? I know of but one hypothesis upon which it may be justified, viz.: that it is right to do evil that good may come. But can the morality of the hypothesis be maintained, though the sole object be the amendment or repeal of a bad law? If such action might be justified in itself, it never could be in relation to subsequent action, which history shows almost invariably leaves the original law untouched by legislation following such action bad and legalized by custom.

It is not an infrequent thing to read of some State or corporation being greatly annoyed by some law thus hid away coming to light, to vex the citizenship by its provisions. But what would be the effect of such an experience upon so sensitive an organization as that of the church? Gen. Grant announced a correct principle of government when he said the surest and safest way to secure the repeal of a bad law is to faithfully execute it. By this means alone can we certainly know whether any law is objectionable, as well as the more accurately ascertain what amendments should be made, or repeals had. That we have some laws governing the church that might be amended and improved, or that should be repealed, may be true; but, so long as they remain as they are, they should be loyally obeyed and faithfully administered. To wholly disregard them seriously endangers organization; to partially disregard them results in oppression, and will force disorganization. But do we really desire, and are we in need of a change of law and of administration? If so, let us have both, for one can not possibly come without the other. If the best interest of the church demands that our laymen shall have more power than the law now gives them in the selection of the pastor, by all means let them have it by the enactment of law, and not by a disregard of law; but if they must have this increase of power in the selection of the pastor, then the law of self-defense—the most righteous among laws—also demands that the pastor shall have more power in the acceptance or the rejection of their choice. But are we drifting in this direction? More rapidly, I fear, than appears at first thought on this subject. But whether this change comes by the conduct of the laymen in selecting their pastors, or by the action of the preachers in defending themselves, the gravity of the case calls for serious reflection before it does come. There are few, if any, forms of government, to be imagined, that have not been thoroughly and long tried by some branch of the church of God. Are there any known and tried methods of government that we can adopt, and better ourselves? If so, what are they? We have seen and heard enough from those nearest to us to know that their methods are far from satisfactory to themselves—not universally so; and yet the desire is expressed for some form of government that would always insure each church a pastor and each pastor a church, and, at the same time, save them from internal divisions, with their hurtful consequences. Then, how shall we choose?—and, more important still, what shall we choose that will better our system, and, at the same time, retain that aggressive spirit that has made us such a blessing to humanity? I see nothing better in anything that now is, nor in any combination of government that may be formed; yet it is not mine to have and to exercise all wisdom. The practicability of our present form of government is not seen alone in the pages of a history that is past and never to return. Its adaptability is recognized wherever faithfully administered. But slight damage ever follows, and even that is soon remedied, where the Bishop and presiding elders are left to their best judgment in making the appointments. It's the church and the preacher that acts outside of the provisions of law that ought and usually does suffer. Men may think and speak as they may, and yet there is a divine manifestation of grace through these human agencies that gives the pastor access to the church, and both pastor and church success in their work. This is the history of yesterday and of to-day.

SHARED.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

I said it in the meadow path,
I say it on the mountain stairs—
The best things any mortal hath
Are those which every mortal shares.

The air we breathe, the sky, the breeze,
The light without us and within—
Life, with its unlocked treasuries,
God's riches—are for all to win.

The grass is softer to my tread,
For rest it yields innumbered feet;
Sweeter to me the wild rose red,
Because she makes the whole world sweet.

Into your heavenly loneliness
Ye welcome me, O solemn peaks!
And me in every guest you bless
Who reverently your mystery seeks.

And up the radiant peopled way
That opens into worlds unknown,
It will be life's delight to say
"Heaven is not heaven for me alone."

Rich through my brethren's poverty—
Such wealth were hideous—I am blest
Only in what they share with me,
In what I share with all the rest.

To the Church Member.

Dear Brother and Sister: I promised to write to you if the editor published my letter to the steward, and now keep the promise. I address you in the singular, for I am writing to you individually. Your preacher has come now, and I presume that you met him and his family when they came—tired as they were from their long move—and bade them welcome, not only in words, but you, of course, had something at the parsonage for him and his horse to eat. Of course, you knew that he would hardly move provisions and horse feed that long distance he came.

Now, do not tell me you waited for the steward to make these provisions, and the steward neglected it, and you are ashamed, and sorry, and such stuff, for if you are truly sorry, you would not have let it happen. I knew a preacher and his family, not long since, to come in one evening to their new home, after driving all day in the mud and cold and rain, across swollen streams, and he and his family wet, cold and tired, to find a fireless parsonage, and who had to leave his hungry, wet family to get a fire made, and drive that tired horse four miles in the rain, and haul home in his jumper horse feed and provisions. Of course, when his people told him how glad they were to have him as their preacher, and bade him welcome, he knew they meant it.

Again, I presume you did not enter a protest as soon as you saw the "new preacher," and tell him how badly you had been treated by the presiding elder and Bishop in not sending Bro. A to preach for you. If you did, he knew the glad (?) welcome you gave him came clear from your lips. Old Bro. Grumble has already been to see him, and told him of all the shortcomings of his predecessor, and has told him of the meanness of all the members on the charge, and has given him some valuable (?) hints about how to do this year.

Now, brother, sister, a hint to you: I know you are poor (Methodists, as a rule, are, when you talk of church finances), but it is possible your preacher has not five dollars in the world, and he has not a chicken, pig, cow, sheep, or ounce to eat, and that five dollars can't last two months until Quarterly Conference.

Do not stand around and squeeze your pocketbook until nearly time for the Annual Conference, and then come up with a widow's mite look in your eye, and hand twenty-five cents left from your tobacco bill, and send him away rejoicing at your self-sacrifice, but divide with him now, and each month hereafter, and pray God's blessing upon what you give. It is the duty of each of you to see that your entire assessment is paid up.

In the Mississippi Conference, for the three years preceding last year, the several charges fell behind their assessments for the preachers in charge more than $18,000. Just think of that amount, and then realize that this was mostly country circuits, where the assessment is small, and you will see that our poorer class of preachers have contributed more than $6 000 per year to the support of a poor (?) laity. Some of you are worth $5,000, but you got your share of the preacher's money, and you have it in your pocket. Did I say the preacher's money? I should have said the Lord's money.

Just another suggestion. Perhaps the preacher has six or eight churches, and three hundred families to visit, besides the sick to visit often, and the dead to bury, and his sermons to prepare, and possibly his "Conference studies" to get ready, and you may live away off in a corner. Bear with him; he wants to visit you, but possibly can not this year. Don't fly off the handle and tell the steward you are not going to pay him that quarter of a dollar, for that is a mean mask to hide your stinginess behind; and God is going to hold you responsible, not only for your stinginess, but also for appropriating his money to your own use.

I have not said all I want to say, but I am afraid the editor is frowning now, and seriously looking towards the waste-basket, and so will close by urging you to turn over a new leaf during this year. Help the church and preacher with your sympathy, money and prayers, and God will give us the greatest blessing this year that we have ever known.

Yours in Christian love,

BETA TAU.

How Discipline Should Be Enforced.

No organization without rules for its government is of any worth whatever, and not even then, if they are not enforced. Perhaps no one will question this statement. The question, however, seems to be about the manner of enforcing rules of government. As respects this matter, we must confess that the views of some, in our judgment, amount to no enforcement at all. For illustration: Brethren recently have said that when a member of the church dram-drinks, gets drunk, attends the theater, circus, or dance, or does anything else in violation of our Rules, we should either educate him from the pulpit, or privately, concerning its wrongness, or let him entirely alone. Such brethren seem to overlook the fact that a violation of any one of our Rules, whether intentional or not, involves a principle that is essential to the right existence of all true government, whether civil or ecclesiastical. That principle is the principle of making the necessary amends for the wrong done. Something of the sacredness of this principle in the government of God appears when we remember that it required the blood of our blessed Savior to preserve it, and, at the same time, to forgive man, who had broken God's law. Although this principle is the same in all forms of true government, even the government of God, yet we must not lose sight of the fact that it is in the power of man himself to make amends for the violation of the Rules of the church as a visible organization, especially those Rules the violation of which does not constitute the grossest type of immorality. This being true, we can easily see the propriety, if not the real necessity, of a member making the necessary amends for violating the Rules of his church when it is in his power to do so. When a member has violated any of the Rules of our church, it is the duty of his pastor to see that he makes the necessary amends, if he does not do so without such oversight, for the necessary amends must be made, or the end of government will not be met. In the enforcement of discipline great prudence should be exercised as respects the time when, and the manner in which, it should be done, remembering that it must be done. Our experience has convinced us that it is not best to wait too long—in fact, that it is best not to let the interval between the time of violation and amendment be much. However, circumstances and the nature of the violation must determine this matter. Great humility, patience, firmness, tenderness, love, wisdom and prudence should be exercised in the enforcement of discipline, in order, if possible, to save the offender. It is our duty to use all laudable means in the right way to save him, aiming at nothing short of this; but if we can not accomplish this end, we must be sure to save the church if the offending member has to be cut off. Save the offender, if we can; but be sure to save the church. 'Put away from among yourselves that wicked person." (1. Cor. v, 13.)

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

"Butting John."

"How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood
When fond recollection presents them to view—
The orchard, the meadow, the deep-tangled wild-wood,
And every loved spot which my infancy knew."

Thus I sat musing over the days long gone when suddenly there passed before me the well-remembered form of "Old Butting John." When I recalled the pleasures of those halcyon days, when the burdens of life were laid upon another and we gave thought only to sports and pleasure, I was ready to sing with the poet,

"Backward, turn backward, O time, in your flight,
And make me a child again just for to-night."

John was not a native of our home, neither was he an intruder. My father's love for all things that pertained to the farm and the improvement of his flocks led him to introduce many new-comers to our farm-yard friends. To this disposition we owed the pleasure of John's presence and now the vivid recollections of his sportful life.

Every reader of the ADVOCATE can appreciate the great joy among the children of the home when a new pet is introduced into their midst. So it was at the old farm-house on that memorable day when the beautiful little Southdown lamb was given to our care. From him we looked for much improvement to the common herd. Everybody admired this lamb, and the long-sung little lamb of Mary never had more petting. Soon the question arose as to name, and, after many disagreements, we finally settled down in our childish fancy on that of John. How rapidly John grew! How could it be otherwise, with all the attention and petting that he received? Soon his coat of little kinks began to lengthen into a suit of genuine wool. How clean and pretty those brown legs and that smutty nose! John was a picture admired by everyone.

This, however, was not the only feature connected with John which gave delight. He had shown an aptness to learn tricks, none of which afforded more delight than the ease with which he learned the art of butting scientifically. From his first efforts at jumping against our hands up to greater feats in the art of butting we watched with great delight his development in the ovian art. Had it remained thus with John it would have been well for him and better for us. Such attentions soon began to tell on his disposition for peace and the welfare of others. Long before he had reached the years of maturity he had lost his powers of discretion, and in his supreme selfishness would dispute the mastery of the farm with his owner, and woe unto his former small friends who happened in his way. John was always ready for a dispute. No plat of grass was so sweet that he would not leave it for a fight. And how many times have I seen him, without provocation, deliberately rise from his bed in the shade of the tree, stretch his limbs and bow his neck with pleasurable defiance! John became a veritable menace to the happiness of all, for he was no respecter of age or sex.

From my musing I turned away to think how many Johns there are in the world about us. From the petted, spoiled child in the nursery up to the aspirant for the highest office in the gift of the people.

In all the walks, avocations, associations and professions we find the much-dreaded "Butting John." Nothing in society, Church or State is done right. Boards, committees, Legislatures all may do their work faithfully and well, but nothing meets his approbation. If he only had been consulted, how much more correct and satisfactory everything would be. Money would be saved, debts avoided, and great trouble averted.

Again, I thought how easy it is to convert an innocent, lamb-like creature into this selfish, pugnacious "Butting John." Some children can't stand petting, some men are spoiled by extra attention.

Sequel: John became detested of all and was driven forth with the common herd, to fare as they, unadmired and unsought by any.

Mr. Editor, did you ever see a "Butting John?"

The Kings of Israel.

The Kings of Israel present a view of life which, from their varied habits and customs, successes and defeats, is necessarily highly instructive to us. In fact, all past sacred and profane history is in the natural order of things one vast object lesson to us.

Such is the lives of the Kings of Israel to all rulers, whether of kingdoms, empires, states, churches or households. Every man is the maker of his own destiny. Talk about predestination is all bosh. They had their destiny in their own hands and made their weal or woe. The Word of the Lord was to the effect that if they did good, they should be protected from famine and their enemies; that they should be blessed in fruits and cattle abundantly, so that they should have no want. "But," said Samuel, when Saul was proclaimed king, "if ye shall do wickedly, ye shall be consumed, both ye and your king."

The law of free moral agency was given full sway. There was danger, too, in those days of falling from favor with God by sinning, known in these later times as "falling from grace." The records are full of these cases.

Saul and Solomon are the most noted of the Kings of Israel for backsliding. Many began well, but did not keep up in God's service. But such men as David, Asa, Jehoshaphat and Hezekiah show that God would bless any that served him, for these served the true God and were blessed.

Reader, do you try to serve God? If you will serve God, he will bless you. Who ever called upon God in vain? Read all history, draw upon your memory, ask the oldest persons who ever served God, truly and sincerely, and was not blessed?

Brother preachers, if you serve God with all your heart, and strive to build up the Lord's work in your place of labor, will he not bless you? I tell you he will!

Fathers, mothers, how about your children? As you serve God, and govern your children according to the principles of the Bible, so will be your success.

Lord, help us all to realize that "as we sow, so shall we reap," "whether of sin unto death, or of righteousness unto eternal life." O. B. DIAL.

The Christian Race.

"So run that ye may obtain."—1. Cor. ix, 24.

These words of the Apostle Paul convey to us the idea that there are more kinds of running than one. As then, so it is now. There are those who run as far as church membership. That is as far as they go. Others go as far as water baptism. They are depending on that to take them to heaven. Some are running on predestination and election, and trusting in that for heaven. But there are those running the Christian race who so run as to obtain the prize.

The prize is heaven, and if we would win it we must run for it; and not only run, but "so run that ye may obtain." Hence we have divine direction how to run in Hebrews xii, 1, 2: "Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race set before us." "They that would have heaven, must run for it," said Bunyan.

But there are two important things to settle in the mind of everyone before he can run the Christian race. The first is to decide as to the worth of the prize. Is heaven with its lasting joys worth more than "the pleasures of sin for a season"? Is eternal happiness in the future worth more than "everlasting shame and contempt." (Dan. xii, 2) Having counted the cost, the next thing to do is to find the way to heaven. Christ says: 'I am the way, the truth and the life; no man cometh unto the father, but by me." (St. John xiv, 6.) We find that this is the way the Apostle Paul obtained the prize. After he met with Jesus on his way to Damascus to prosecute the church, and there found him to be indeed the Savior of the world, he says: "I so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: but I keep under my body and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." (1. Cor. ix, 26, 27) When he was nearing the end of his Christian race, and heaven with its beauties were about to be opened to his view, he says: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day." And not only does he think of himself, but others who, like him, should run the Christian race, are comforted by these words: "And not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Rev. J. T. Nicholson.

We were delighted to have Bro. J. T. Nicholson to visit us yesterday and to spend last night with us. He left us this morning near noontide to dine with a relative, not far on the road to his relatives with whom he and his family are now living, at Rose Hill and Paulding. The best of all, he was looking so much better than I expected, or could have expected, after such reports as had come to me concerning his condition. It fortuned me to be associated with him much two years before his affliction, and I must confess that I esteem his present condition better than his condition just before he received his last appointment, although he is not as fleshy now as then. Before he had received his last appointment he had been in quite a number of protracted meetings of from one to two weeks' duration, preaching most of the time twice daily, and consequently nerve exhaustion was discoverable some time before the crisis came. After he went to Natchez he was taken with the grip, and before he had thoroughly recovered he engaged in a two weeks' meeting at Vicksburg, preaching twice every day, and, therefore, the awful time came with him. His condition was such that he needed quiet and rest more than anything else, except suitable diet. There is no likelihood of a return of his affliction as long as his health is good and he guards against overwork. I feel confident that this year's rest will place him in as good condition in every way as he ever was in. Preaching occasionally will not hurt him. May God continue to bless him and his precious family!

The Church and the Drama.

In the volume of the Book it is written, "There is no new thing under the sun. Is there anything whereof it may be said, See, this is new? it hath been already of old time, which was before us." The attitude of the Methodist Church of to-day towards the drama may, to a casual observer, seem a new thing. Certainly, as compared with her position in the past, it is new; but when we look into the history of the church in the dark ages we find that "it hath been already of old time."

The drama, which had its origin with the Greeks, was at first used to inculcate moral principles; adopted by the Romans, it became finally so corrupt that the worst of Roman emperors suppressed it. At this period of its history it was revived by the Roman Church to represent scriptural subjects; and miracles and passion plays acted by priests and nuns became the amusement of the laity and the curse of the church.

It has been said that the passion play will never be re-enacted; that when the next period of ten years shall have rolled around, the moral sentiment of the world will forbid it. Yet at this time of enlightenment the Methodist Church adopts the drama, and theatrical exhibitions in the form of Christmas and Easter entertainments, etc., are held in many of the churches. Books of such plays are advertised in religious papers; missionary societies issue programmes, and too worldly and thoughtless are training the children of the church for the world and the stage. It well becomes the thoughtful and the pious to inquire whereunto this thing has grown, and to endeavor to put a stop to this tide of Romanism in our midst. Anything which appeals to the senses, anything which sets itself up in opposition to His plan, who chose the "foolishness of preaching" to save the world, is and must be evil, and only evil. Recitations, displays, acting of any kind, are all theatrical, all belong to the drama, and, therefore, to the prince of this world, who hath no part in our King.

"Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, forever."

In His Name!

MR. EDITOR: I see from the ADVOCATE, of Jan. 26, you take from the leading, if not the only, newspaper of our capital city a "personal." There was in the same issue, if I mistake not, of that paper another notice, something like the following (I regret not having the sheet before me): "Our city will soon be treated to a ball given by the King's Daughters for the benefit of the poor of the city."

Now, Mr. Editor, I am surprised you did not observe that.

I find here some suggestions. The motto of the King's Daughters is, "In His Name." They wear a cross with the initials, 'I. H. N." And "in his name" a public ball is to be arranged and operated. "In his name" the young, not only of the capital, but, by special railroad rates, the youth of the whole State are to be corrupted under its baneful influence. No more can our Bishops, our chief pastors, proclaim against "the modern dance" as a "class of worldly amusement that can not be taken in the name of Christ." And it is all the more alluring that this is to be done under a pretense of charity.

Is not this a disgrace to Christian civilization? With a city government that has at its command a right of taxation upon millions of dollars' worth of property; with a half-score, or more, Christian churches, and yet the poor, who are a natural charge upon the government and a divinely appointed charge upon the church of God, are to be made dependent upon the devil for a pittance to keep the wolf from the door, and he (the devil) meets the exigencies of the case by debauching the young men and women of our fair Southland.

It is not popular to tackle "sin in high places;" but just such exhibitions as this now under consideration gives excuse—yea, a license—to the low and nonsensical sociables, storm-parties, etc., with which our country districts are cursed.

I earnestly hope no 'Daughter of the King," who is a Methodist, will be found conducting a ball or any other hot-bed of iniquity, disgracing Christianity in the name of humanity.

Mr. Editor, if it is not too much trouble, look up that notice and see how it reads. E. K. S.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.

Lesson VII.—Feb. 12, 1893.

PREPARED BY REV. A. F. WATKINS.

SUBJECT.—Nehemiah's Prayer. (Neh. i, 1-11.)

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Lord, be thou my helper." (Psalm xxx, 10)

TOPICAL OUTLINE.—I. The Desolate Condition of the People (vs. 1-3). II. Nehemiah's Grief and Prayer (vs. 4-11).

HOME READINGS.

Monday—Nehemiah's Prayer. (Neh. i, 1-11.)
Tuesday—The Answer. (Neh. ii, 1-8.)
Wednesday—The Journey. (Neh. ii, 9-20.)
Thursday—Moses' Prayer. (Ex. xxxii, 7-14.)
Friday—Solomon's Prayer. (I. Kings viii, 44-52.)
Saturday—The Promise to the Penitent. (Deut. xxx, 1-10)
Sunday—The Covenant keeping God. (Deut. vii, 6-11.)

INTRODUCTORY.

TIME.—B. C. 445. A. M. 3559.

PLACES.—1. Shushan the palace; 2. Jerusalem.

PERSONS.—1. Nehemiah, the patriot. Of this remarkable man but little is known. He was of the tribe of Judah, and, according to one tradition, was of priestly origin; and, according to another, was of the house of David. He was "a Jew of the dispersion," and was cupbearer to the king, with whom he was a favorite. He was the author or compiler of the book called by his name. He was pre-eminently a man of prayer, and patriotism and piety were conspicuous among his virtues. 2. Hanani, the kinsman probably the brother of Nehemiah. 3. The King of Persia, Artaxerxes (Longimanus), the son of Xerxes, the Ahasuerus of the Book of Esther.

EXPLANATORY.

I.—THE DESOLATE CONDITION OF THE PEOPLE.

Ver. 1. "The words," etc. The writings—the record of what he saw and did—his words and experiences. "The month Chisleu." The ninth month of the Jewish year, answering nearly to our December. "The twentieth year" of the reigning monarch. "Shushan, the palace," or Susa (the word means "lily"), the beautiful capital of Elam, where the Persian kings had their winter residence.

Ver. 2. "Hanani." (See above and refer to Neh. vii, 2.) "Came" from Jerusalem to Susa. "I asked them concerning the Jews." His own prosperity did not cause him to forget the returned captives. "That were left of the captivity." The remnant of the returned exiles who were still to be found in Judea. "Jerusalem"—the city of the great King, the most sacred place on earth to the Jew.

Ver. 3. "There in the province." Judea was now a province in the Persian Empire. "In great affliction and reproach." "This was due partly to the enmity of the people around them, and partly, perhaps, to misfortune, poor crops and hard times; but most of all to the neglect and bad conduct of the people themselves." (Hurlburt.) "The walls . . . and the gates." The walls had been broken down and the gates burned by Nebuchadnezzar one hundred and forty years before and had never been rebuilt. The work of the returned captives seems to have been confined to the temple and their dwellings.

II.—NEHEMIAH'S GRIEF AND PRAYER.

Ver. 4. "When I heard these words, . . . I sat down and wept." The news of the distress of his brethren came upon him like a shock. Perhaps he had not thought much about them, and now for the first time a full realization of their condition came upon him. His season of mourning and prayer lasted three or four months, during which time God was preparing his servant for his work.

Vers. 5-11. "The prayer." Notice in this prayer (1) adoration (v. 5); (2) petition (vs. 6 and 11); (3) confession (vs. 6 and 7); (4) his plea (vs. 8 and 10).

Ver. 5. "Great" in his nature; "terrible" in his judgments. He is the God that "keepeth" his "covenant" of "mercy" with them that obey his law.

Ver. 6. "Let thine ear now be attentive and thine eyes be open." These are figurative expressions, indicating his earnest desire that God would consider his prayer. "Which I pray before thee now day and night." The prayers which he had been making to God because of his sorrow on account of his brethren. "Both I and my father's house have sinned." See how in his confession the good man identifies himself with his stricken people.

Ver. 7. "We have dealt very corruptly against thee." Nehemiah clearly saw and humbly confessed that their calamities had come upon them because of their failure to keep their promises to God. "And have not kept the commandments nor the statutes." The moral law had been violated and the ceremonial law disregarded.

Vers. 8-10. (See Deut. xxx, 1-5.) The appeal is to God's promises. His "terrible" judgments had scattered them and God's Word had been fulfilled. 'Now these are thy people." Will thou not now fulfil thy promise and show "mercy?" The very captivity and desolation were proofs that God was keeping his word with them, and gave reason for the belief that restoration and blessing would follow their repentance and their prayer.

Ver. 11. "Prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man." His strong faith seems already to have grasped the assurance of God's favor, and now he asks that God will prosper him in his plan by inclining the heart of the king toward him. "The king's cup-bearer." This was an honorable and responsible position; one that gave him access to the royal presence and the personal charge over the king's food and drink. It gave a large salary and conferred dignity and influence. The mention of the office in connection with his prayer for favor in the king's sight would indicate that through its advantages he hoped to carry out his purpose.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

(1) In our prosperity we should not be unmindful of the condition of others. (Vers. 1-3.)

(2) Prayer is the best preparation for work. (Ver. 4) Many a great work is nearly done when to the eyes of men it is just beginning.

(3) The faithfulness of God to his covenant is the ground of the good man's trust. (Ver. 5)

(4) Repentance and confession are essential parts of every prayer for pardon. (Vers. 6 and 7.)

(5) The memory of past blessings is an inspiration to present faith. (Vers. 8 and 10)

(6) Prayer should always be accompanied by a purpose; a petition should inspire a plan. (Ver. 11.)

(7) A practical prayer is always definite and specific, as in this case. "Grant thy servant mercy in the sight of this man." (Ver. 11)

(8) The most practical sympathy is that which resolves to relieve the needy. (Vers. 4 and 11.)

People with hair that is continually falling out, or those that are bald, can stop the falling and get a good growth of hair by using Hall's Hair Renewer.

The Center of Doubt.

BY REV. W. P. M'KEE.

What is the use in studying Genesis, before we know what we think of Christ? Skepticism gathers itself about three points: "Inspiration," miracles, future life. Thoughtful people peruse the life of David, and ask, How could such a man be an inspired man? John Fiske remarks that our grandfathers used to read Kings and Chronicles without noticing any differences between the parallel accounts contained in them. The vast majority of so-called Bible students do the same today. Occasionally, however, an earnest inquirer really looks beneath the surface there, and he is apt to ask, Can such accounts be inspired? The movement against miracles has come to be almost alarming. No statement inspired, or uninspired, can convince an expert in astronomy that the earth, one time, stopped in its revolution about its axis. Such a thing is unthinkable to him. He could as easily believe that God might lie. Laws of nature seem to be invariable, and as incidents get deeper into nature this invariability is emphasized, until some wonder whether the upshot of it will be, "All law and no God." The nature miracles in the New Testament—walking on the water, raising the dead, etc.—raise a storm of objections. Skepticism clusters about miracles.

The future life is the third source of doubt. The questions raised here are so vast and vague and difficult, that many people refuse to think of them. The fact that men have always believed in a future life is not enough to prove it. They have always believed in ghosts and witchcraft.

Beset with the problems raised on these points, some go to philosophy. Others go to the Bible, but begin with the Old Testament, or the Revelation, or the Epistles. Are we not beginning at the wrong end when we do either of these things? Is it not true that all these questions, in the last analysis, must have a solution in Christ, if they have any solution at all.

The doctrine of "inspiration" must stand or fall, not with Joshua, but with Christ. Without question Christ used the Old Testament as a source of divine truth. He did not declare a theory of "inspiration." He did not explain the Old Testament in detail, as we might wish he had done. But he taught plainly that God has spoken in a unique manner through the Old Testament. As a revelation of God's ways and will it stood alone in the mind of Jesus. Now, if Jesus declared the Old Testament to be, in substance, "a trustworthy record of divine revelation," the question is narrowed down to this: Can Jesus be trusted in this matter? If so, that settles it. If Jesus was the truth, and testified to the divine character of the Old Testament, it was such a book, and every fact in it can be, in some way, brought into harmony with his teaching. On the other hand, if we can not trust Jesus on this point, it is quite useless to study the matter further. In like manner the "inspiration" of the New Testament stands or falls with him. If the substratum of the gospel is true, the heart of the New Testament is sound. If the essential features of the narrative in the Synoptics are discredited, what remains in the New Testament is not sufficient for faith. "Inspiration" stands or falls with Christ.

Concering miracles the prime question is, Was the character of Jesus a great "moral miracle?" (Bruce.) After naturalism has used the pruning-knife in its severest fashion, the main features of the Synoptic narrative are still allowed to stand. These disclose to us a sinless life. At most, Jesus is charged with undue severity against Pharisaism. The world refuses to see in this a moral blemish. He was vigorously good. He gave no hint of being rebuked by his conscience, though he most strongly rebuked even impure thought in others. Moreover, he had a wisdom the like of which other men have not shown. Jesus is an exception in history. The world has had no experience of another like him. In other words, the character of Jesus is a miracle. What of it? This: If God wrought a miracle in the character of Christ why may he not have wrought another in his sinless birth, and another in his resurrection? And if God wrought three miracles, why may he not have wrought others?

If we can not accept the character of Christ as a miracle, it is idle to think we can believe in miracles elsewhere. But if here we find evidence that one miracle has been wrought, the question of miracles in general may be considered closed. The doctrine of miracles stands or falls with Christ.

The doctrine of the future life stands or falls with Christ. If he was the truth, immortality is a fact, for he declared it. If he was not the truth, it is useless to try to get assurance of a future life elsewhere. What help is it to know that Plato guessed there was a future life, if Jesus can not be trusted about it? If he did not know, who does?

Are we not wise in ignoring intellectual difficulties which do not have immediate connection with Christ, until we have come to a definite decision concerning him? Moses and Jonah and Elisha can not help us, if we deny Christ. But if we can believe in the divine character of Christ, with its implications, we have the core of Christianity, and have a right to the name "Christian." If we have clear and true vision of him, we may allow difficulties with "inspiration" and miracles and the future life to rest, until as light increases these difficulties may be adjusted. Meantime we may believe in him, and may believe as much more as possible. The believer who has firm standing in Christ need not have the slightest fear as to what criticism may take or leave him. And such a man may wisely and successfully and fearlessly examine every fact in connection with the Bible, for, whatever the facts may be, his foundation standeth sure. Faith in Christ does not hang on any theory of "inspiration," nor on the explanation of any Old Testament narrative of miracles, nor on the doctrine of immortality taught in Ecclesiastes. "Christ's character is the one miracle vitally important to faith" (Bruce).—Standard.

Good Roads and Country Life.

An unmistakable demand for good common roads is being heard in all parts of the United States. This demand is rapidly growing in volume and is taking on the systematic organization which is essential to the success of such a movement. That bad roads in this country cause an enormous loss of money each year to those who use them may be clearly proved, but this fact is veiled from many persons because they have never known anything better. Just how loss arises from bad roads is being shown very ably in the magazine, Good Roads, now in its second year, which is edited by Mr. Isaac B. Potter, of New York. The farmers are the greatest sufferers. Where wagon wheels sink hub-deep in mud at some seasons, a farmer who has much hauling to do must keep one or two more horses than he would need if he had only hard, even roads to go over, and his loss in the wear and tear of horseflesh, harnesses and wagons is a heavy tax on his income. It often happens that a farmer finds the roads absolutely impassable with a loaded wagon just at the time when some of his produce would bring the highest price if he could haul it to a railroad, and he is forced to wait and take a lower price later. Livery-stable keepers and all other owners and users of horses and vehicles suffer from bad roads in similar ways.

The welfare and prosperity of a district that has had roads suffer in many respects. If getting about for business or recreation is unreasonably difficult, its inhabitants tend to crowd into the towns and cities rather than live in the more wholesome conditions of the open country. Manufacturing concerns are often driven to place themselves in the villages and draw their employees to them there, when, but for the one item of teaming over bad roads, they could be carried on to better advantage in the country. Good roads would keep the employees of these concerns and the other persons above mentioned in the farming districts, thus making these districts more thickly settled and increasing the value of their lands.

In order to obtain better roads two things are necessary. The first is to create a general conviction that the improvement of our highways is imperative, and that money wisely expended for this purpose is sure to return. The second requisite is to place all road making and mending under the charge of competent road-builders. Various efforts to secure these ends are being made, and the aid of county and State authorities, and even of the national government, has been invoked to further the movement. While it is very desirable that the highways of adjoining localities should be under some central supervision, so that they may be made to form a connected whole, it may yet be questioned whether the national government could be an effective agency in road improvement. Why, for instance, should the dwellers beyond the Mississippi and on the Pacific coast be taxed to maintain in Washington a school for road engineers and a museum of road construction that few, if any, of these distant communities could derive any benefit from? A more practicable scheme would be to have instruction in road engineering given at each of the State Colleges of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. In a country showing such wide differences in soil, rainfall, temperature and topography between different sections as the United States does, road-building can be taught and administered far more efficiently by the State or the county than by the nation.

There is need of much intelligent care in framing legislation in the interest of the movement for better roads. Annoying prohibitions should be no part of the policy of the road reformers. For instance, large loads carried on wheels having narrow felloes and tires do great damage to roads; hence it has been proposed to prohibit narrow tires on heavy wagons. A much better policy is that adopted in Michigan, of giving a reduction of one-half their road taxes to those who will use broad tires. The movement for good roads shows a lusty vigor. The success that it has already achieved is splendid testimony to the efficiency of voluntary association of individuals, and if its leaders continue to carry it on without the paralyzing patronage of the general government, it is likely to attain great results.—Popular Science Monthly.

Asthma can't be cured? Oh! yes it can. Dr Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar will do it. I know it because it gave me relief. Every winter I was troubled with asthma, especially if the weather was damp, suffering severely. I took about six bottles of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and am completely cured. It is the remedy for asthma. CHAS. HEGNES, 500½ Chippewa Street, New Orleans, La.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar is a sure and speedy cure for coughs, colds, catarrh, bronchitis and consumption, and gives immediate relief in cases of croup and whooping-cough. Try it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Without memory the judgment must be unemployed, and ignorance must be the consequence. Pliny says it is one of the greatest gifts of nature.—Montaigne.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Deaf for a Year
Caused by
Catarrh in the Head

Catarrh being a CONSTITUTIONAL disease, requires a CONSTITUTIONAL REMEDY like Hood's Sarsaparilla to cure it:

"Three years ago, as a result of catarrh, I entirely lost my hearing and was deaf for more than a year. I tried various things to cure it, and had physicians, but no improvement was apparent. I could distinguish no sound. I was intending putting myself under the care of a specialist, when some one suggested that Hood's Sarsaparilla might do me some good. I began taking it without the expectation of any lasting help. To my surprise and great joy I found when I had taken three bottles that my hearing was returning. I kept on till I had taken three more. It is now over a year and I can hear perfectly well. I am troubled but very little with the catarrh. I consider this a remarkable case, and recommend to all who have catarrh." HERMAN HICKS, 30 Carter Street, Rochester, N. Y.

BRIEFS.

God give us men! A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office can not buy;
Men who possess opinion and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog,
In public duty and in private thinking.
—Exchange.

Dr. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, has laid us under special obligations by sending us a copy of his "Inaugural Address," delivered on the occasion of the opening of that institution. We heard very flattering opinions of this address when it was delivered, and that served to intensify the desire to see it in print, and now the desire is fulfilled. We read it with great interest and pronounce it worthy to take rank with the foremost papers on the subject of education. Dr. Murrah will please accept our thanks.

Lady Henry Somerset, the president of the British Women's Temperance Association, has complimented us with a copy of the Woman's Herald, in which is given a full account of the magnificent reception given to Miss Frances E. Willard in Exeter Hall, London, recently. It seems to have been a grand occasion. Speeches were made by Lady Somerset, Canon Wilberforce, Mark Guy Pearse, Miss Power from India, W. T. Stead, and, lastly, Miss Willard. Miss Willard completely captured the Britishers, and they were enthusiastic in expressions of hearty welcome to their guest.

The hurry of modern life is, perhaps, in a measure inevitable, but we ought certainly to check it where we can and be on our guard against the harm it is liable to do. A good point to call a very firm and decided halt is when this devil of haste and drive suggests that there is no time for family prayers. He who gives way at this point has done himself and his home an irreparable harm. He has sacrificed the great for the little. He has thrown away an opportunity of influencing his children which will never come back. He has deprived them of a hallowed and restraining memory for which no added dollars will in after years be any compensation. Let that family altar be set up at once, or reared again, O husband and father, no matter what else may seem to suffer! Time must be found for it at any cost.—Zion's Herald.

The principal topic during the past week among statesmen, politicians and citizens is the unexpected turn of affairs way down in the Pacific Ocean, whereby an empire has been overturned and a provisional government established in Hawaii. The government just inaugurated seeks recognition by the United States, not in the usual way, but by way of annexation. Opinions in regard to this matter seem divided between favoring annexation and a protectorate. On one point there is unanimity, and that is, no European power will be allowed to do either in the Sandwich Islands. It is our opinion that we should learn the lesson of governing ourselves before we essay the role of governing a people way down in the Pacific Ocean. There are questions of home rule more important and pressing than any foreign question can ever be.

"Natural Law in the Spiritual World."

Prof. Drummond is reported to have said concerning his book, "Natural Law in the Spiritual World:"

. I may have put a pressure upon certain analogies which they could not sustain. I would write the book differently now, if I were to do it again. I should make less rigid application of physical laws, and should endeavor to be more ethical. But it is still clear to me that the same laws govern all worlds.

No book was ever more overrated than this. For beautiful writing, partial analogies, and a fine spirit, it is worthy of high praise; but its principle is essentially wrong. The logic of many of its statements, carried to the last results, would be pantheism.

On its appearance, the Christian Advocate pointed out these defects. If Professor Drummond thinks what he is reported to have said, the best thing he could do for his reputation among the thoughtful—especially if he designs to assist doubters and to impress upon the present age the idea which is slipping away from it, that of a personal God in, but distinct from, all the things and beings which he has made—would be to rewrite the book. From a literary point of view, it would be successful, as the multitude that read the first would wish to see the second.

We have quoted the foregoing from last week's New York Christian Advocate. When Prof. Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" first appeared, we had a talk with one of our chief pastors respecting the merits of the book, and he did not hesitate to condemn it in unmeasured terms, and said he regarded it as a most dangerous book. Its very plausibility rendered it dangerous, and the talker proceeded to warn us of its insidious and plausible tendencies toward skepticism. It seems now that he was right, since Prof. Drummond has himself seen the erroneous trend of his publication, and would now write it differently. The New York Advocate is right, then, when it says that Prof. Drummond should proceed at once to write it over. If a man has an opportunity, he ought never to fail to counteract any and every evil tendency he has put in motion. That is the simple act of restitution which should be done at once. If the Professor has come to the conclusion that there are errors in his book, he owes it to the world to correct them as soon as possible.

This confession of Prof. Drummond shows that even a man in high position should not rush into print with his immature views on an important subject. He may start influences in the wrong direction, which he will not easily counteract. It is a good work to undo erroneous influences, but it is exceedingly difficult and may consume the balance of life. The homely saying of David Crockett is a very safe guide, even for such a brilliant man as Prof. Drummond: "Be sure you are right, and then go ahead."

We trust the Professor will rewrite his book, and correct its errors, and give the world his maturer views on the important subject of which it treats. He is a debtor that far to everyone who has read the book.

Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

A year ago, Rev. A. E. Clay, our pastor at Dryades Street Church, organized a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and last week the society held its first anniversary in Tulane Hall. There was a large attendance present to listen to the reports and hear the addresses of the occasion. Addresses were made by Dr. Markham, of the Presbyterian Church; Judge Ferguson, of the Criminal Court; and President Clay. The reports show a gradually increasing work and a rapid enlargement of the sphere of the society's influence. That our readers may have an idea of what has been done, we give the report of the secretary, Mr. O. W. Sansum:

Total number of complaints, 326; total number of children having received attention, 690; total number of cases investigated, 304; total number of cases pending investigation, 21; total number of children in private homes or asylums, 176; total number of lost children found, 11; total number of arrests, 48; total number of cases now before the court for assault and battery, etc., 49; total number of convictions, 22. In the city there are 337 members; in the different branches in the country there are 202 members; total number of members throughout the State, 539.

There is a record of Christian work which is one of the brightest credentials of our holy religion. And that report, as much as it speaks, does not speak all that has been done by this society. The mere fact of keeping this matter prominently before the public is awakening a conscience on this important line of Christian work, and that is the best thing to do in anything that is worth working for.

Bro. Clay has been the head and front and soul of the whole movement, and has infused part of his courage and enthusiasm into his co-adjutors, and they begin a new year of work under more hopeful auspices and with encouraged hearts.

Next week we will give our readers Bro. Clay's address, in which they will see the man and his work more clearly than we can reveal them.

"The World in the Church."

The heading of this article is the title of a pithy, pointed and pungent tract by Rev. J. T. Sawyer, D. D., of the Louisiana Conference. This is a pertinent and opportune production. It ought to be read and heeded by every member of the Methodist Church, and of other churches as well. The facts stated are, alas! too true. In some places, if not in all places, worldliness is dominant, if not predominant, among a large class of our members. The doors have been flung wide open and the world has been taken into the church. The leaven of worldliness is working its way into the very core of things in the church. If things go on this way for a few years longer, godliness, righteousness and holy living will be kicked out of the church, as has been done before, and those who believe in and practice these things will have to seek other quarters. This was the cause and the reason of the rise of Methodism—it was a solemn and awfully earnest protest against the world in the church. What happened then will happen again under similar circumstances. Somehow it is in human nature to cry peace, peace, when there is no peace. We boast of our numbers and our wealth while the canker of worldliness is corroding the heart of the church. The godly members of the church see these things and deplore them, but slowly they become accustomed to them, and endure, if they do not condone, them. It is well understood that the church has never been absolutely pure in her membership and in her religious life. Her purity has always been, perhaps, always will be, relative. The standard of God's Word is absolutely perfect, and in the nature of things—rather owing to the nature of man—comparatively few come up to it. All ought to do so, or be striving so to do; but many, likely a large majority, do not. Unfortunately there are too many in the church now who show no sign of trying to come up to this high and holy standard of living. If they were only trying, only expecting it, and groaning after it, the world of sin would be in a quiver of conviction.

An unholy ambition for names and numbers seems to have taken possession of us. We count more on numbers and wealth than we do on faith and character. The wheels of Zion are clogged with dead weight in many parts of our wide territory. In many places the church is hindered more than helped by the large body of her membership. If the world were only outside of the church, where it ought to be, the church would fall off half in her numbers and quadruple her power for good in the salvation of sinners. After all, the great secret of the power and success of the church is not in numbers, wealth and intelligence, but in the righteousness and holy living of those who belong to it. This given, the church will be more terrible than an army with banners, and this lacking, the church will, to that extent, fail of her mission.

The world in the church does the cause of God more real hurt than all the open and avowed infidels in the land. "Higher criticism" is not nearly so dangerous as low, and lower, living. The worst wound of the Master comes from those who sit at his table and dip hands in the dish with him. The critics may cut a dash and create a stir, but the low living inside kills the church stone-dead. The one advocates a theory, the other exhibits a life. Life-force is, after all, the greatest force in the world. The force of some lives in the early history of the world will tell for good and for God on the last generation of the sons of men.

In our cities, towns, villages and country places some forms of folly and of sin have become fashionable, and it is common for them to be practiced, or permitted, in the homes of leading and official members of the church. This evil is deep-seated and widespread. I speak of dancing, card-playing and wine-drinking. Members of the church who participate in these things are without power for good in the communities where they live. They are in the church, but not of the church. Members who permit these things in their homes compromise Christ and weaken their influence in favor of Christianity. This sentiment, if sentiment it be, is stronger against them among sinners than among saints. Sinners have sense enough to know that men and women of God, true to Christ and holiness, do not indulge in games and pastimes that are essentially worldly and sinful. They have neither heart nor taste for such things.

The quadrennial addresses of our Bishops grow stronger and plainer on these evils as the years go by. Faithful pastors reprove, rebuke and exhort, but still the world in the church continues to drift with the worldly tide with increasing momentum and velocity.

Those in the church who are truly born of God, who have the Spirit of Christ in them, stand aloof from these things, and have no fellowship with these works of darkness. In some places these faithful few are in the minority so far as members go, but they are the salt that seasons the things of God in the communities where they are found. They are the church so far as real saving power goes.

Increased faithfulness and fidelity to Christ at the door of the church will go far towards staying the drift of the world inside of it.

Let candidates for membership know that they are expected to give up sin and devote themselves to holy living when they come into the church.

GILDEROY.

On the Wing.

We had the pleasure of spending the fourth Sunday in January with Rev. D. C. Rawls at Orvisburg, Miss.

Orvisburg is a mill town on the N. O. and N. E. R. R., four miles north of Poplarville, the county-seat of Pearl. Messrs. Sweet and Orvis are the controlling spirits. From the beginning they have endeavored to build nice homes for all the employees, and the little village shines brightly in the Winter sun.

The Champion Lumber Company manufactures about 50,000 feet of yellow pine daily and do a large business in Southern markets.

Everything about the mill and the place betokens thrift and prosperity. We were not surprised when these Northern gentlemen shared their kindly interest in Millsaps by paying the preacher's note and giving besides in cash and subscriptions $25.

When we left them they said, "Come back again soon and we will do better for you." I make my bow of thanks to Orvisburg.

On the fifth Sunday we had the pleasure of looking at Bro. Backus and the good people of Estabuchie and Morristown. I found the stores at Estabuchie as cheap as those in Meridian. Near this point thousands of sheep are raised, and of late years many acres of land along the Tallahala have been made to produce abundant crops of corn and cotton. These things, in addition to the fine lumber plant at this place, would seem to indicate a prosperous future.

At Morristown we preached to a congregation of young men, and received $3.80 in cash and subscriptions on the endowment.

Estabuchie paid its preacher's note for $25, and gave besides $25 in cash and subscriptions.

One of the mill owners, B. McClanahan, not only showed a lively interest in the college by giving of his means, but also gave the agent some pointers as to the care of the boys.

Orvisburg and Estabuchie, the chief points of two mission works in the Seashore district! Let the established works see to it that they do as well for our cause.

JOHN W. CHAMBERS, Agt.

A Great Fight and a Great Victory.

For several weeks past a great whisky fight has been going on in Columbus, Miss. The movement was begun by a few Christian temperance women. These noble women, with a moral courage truly sublime, and with faith in God, went to work, by petition to the City Council, to close up the saloons. The services of Rev. George S. Inge were secured; public meetings, largely attended, were held in the court-house. Rev. R. M. Standefer, pastor of the Methodist Church; Revs. K. M. Harrison and A. P. Leech, resident ministers, and Rev. Dr. Johnson, pastor of the Baptist Church, lent their voice and influence. The battle waxed warm, the interest became intense, feeling ran high, and the whole community was stirred as seldom before in the history of Columbus. The saloon men and friends of whisky stubbornly contested every inch of ground. But the godly women and friends of temperance were determined, and steadily gained ground until at last they have won a great victory.

Rev. A. P. Leech writes today (Jan. 31): "Thank God, we have gained the victory over whisky. The saloons are gone. We will have a grand turn-out to-night; a torchlight procession, and a grand time. Praise God from whom all blessings flow!"

[We congratulate our friends in Columbus for showing to the church that a determination to oust the saloons can be carried out. It is a great victory, and we pray that it may be repeated again and again until every town in Mississippi and Louisiana shall be declared "free and independent" of saloon influence.—EDITOR.]

NOTES.

The shepherd who takes proper care of the lambs will have a fine flock of sheep after while.

The Holston Methodist advocates a return to the old system of putting two preachers on the circuits. There are evidently some advantages in the system, but it would be a great "affliction" to some of the young preachers to be made juniors, and in that case the return would "kick up the biggest row of a muss."

The average newspaper reporter knows as little about theology and church government as a goat does about algebra. The current discussions among the Presbyterians puzzles the boys greatly. The reporter of a New York daily went to interview Dr. John Hall the other day. He had been instructed by the managing editor to obtain the Doctor's views on Calvinism. This was his first query: "What is the doctrine of procrastination anyway?"—Epworth Herald.

A good deed pays. In 1888 a young lady, watching people go into a drawing-room, saw an old gentleman faint and stagger, and immediately procured him a "cup of cold water," which revived him. He thanked her and asked her name and address. She forgot the circumstance until recently she learned that he had bequeathed her $750,000. Young ladies will hereafter be diligent to bring cold water to old men who faint. But all this came to pass in England.

Christians should cultivate attention to the details of life, for the very reason that they have chosen for their ultimate aim the Perfect One. Crude as are our efforts to manifest the life of Christ in our every-day living, there is no pursuit so absorbing, so satisfying, so life-giving. There is no vocation of our lives we would less willingly surrender. The quest after perfect conformity in will, thought, and deed to the great Example becomes the fascination of the soul, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and is prophetic of the day when we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. —Sunday-School Times.

When Moses set up a civil government for the Israelites, he made a powerful mixture of politics and religion. The Ten Commandments—a moral law—were set up as the law of the land—an essential part of the civil code. When he forbade to the citizens of the commonwealth of Israel, profanity, stealing, adultery, murder, etc., he regarded the moral idea as lying at the foundation of civil government. The little stone that has the moral idea in it is to smite and grind to powder the great image that has not the moral idea in it. False civil government must go. Civil government will never be normal till it becomes the reign of God, the kingdom of Christ on earth.—Holston Methodist.

It needs no Macaulay to tell us, what every man who reads history has observed for himself, that the worst and the wickedest things that were ever done were done by men who felt impelled to severity by an imperious sense of moral obligation. The Inquisitors were not always men who delighted in cruelty for its own sake; Torquemada is said to have been an amiable gentleman in private life. But the awful voice of "duty" urged them on. They owed it to religion and the church to exterminate heresy, and though, to be sure, their methods were a little rough, yet the torture was soon over, and when a man was dead he could not preach heresy any more! —New York Evangelist.

Every situation in life has its perquisites, and "to an honest mind," says Addison, "the best perquisites of a place are the advantages it gives a man of doing good." A perquisite, etymologically, is something diligently sought or asked for. But commonly we use the term to represent certain profits of office over and above the regular emolument. Every Christian is a spiritual office holder; and his perquisites are not what he directly receives, but what he gains by his peculiar opportunities of giving out. One of the glorious things about his situation is that he has power to increase these perquisites indefinitely; for, as George Eliot says, "the reward of one duty is the power to fulfill another."—Sunday-School Times.

I often think I should like to walk slowly through a pen manufactory. There is so much romance in a pen. Bulwer used to say, "The pen is mightier than the sword." It is the poetry of the pen, however, that fascinates me. Who knows what a pen may record? Is there anything in this world, as far as manufactured articles are concerned, so capable of creating joy and sorrow, life and death, as a pen? How far its dintings and its scrawlings travel; into how many homes and into how many hearts they reach! A pen has pricked the heart's blood, and a pen has envenomed a friendship, and a pen has put out the eye of hope and love. On the other hand, a pen has set free the joy and mirth and laughter, as well as the knowledge and truth of the wit and wisdom of the world.—Free Methodist.

Here is the obituary of another ill-fated Methodist college: "Poor old Centenary! The Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences gave it a simultaneous whack over the head during their late sessions. With neither Conference to act the parents' part, the old college seems to be turned out to orphanage."—NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE.

We clip this from the Alabama Advocate to say that it was a lively imagination that could make an obituary out of our note. Bro. Armstrong must have been thinking of the North Alabama College when he saw an obituary in that note. Some children never have a chance until they become orphans. "When my father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." So it is with Centenary.

Less Than Two Months

Remain for gathering up and sending forward the money pledged for the extinguishment of the missionary debt. That, however, is sufficient time, if everybody will go earnestly and zealously to work. No one can compute what a great organization can do in a given time, when everyone in it is possessed with the determination to use the whole time allowed to achieve the best possible results. The Secretaries assure the church that the end is nearly in view. Enough has been pledged to wipe out this reproach, and all that is needed now is to collect the pledges. Surely no man or woman who loves the church will lag behind in this critical moment. Surely everyone will quicken his pace in order to be at the front when the walls of this debt shall go down in ruins before the mighty momentum of redeemed pledges.

At the Conference session you promised some amount to be sent in by March 24, didn't you? Then be diligent to collect what you promised and send it forward to Dr. John, even before that date. Let preachers and people make a heavy pull together to relieve our church of this burden, so that she can address all her energies to the work of saving souls. We have been debt-paying long enough. Let us pay up and go out of the business forever. Let everybody help in this crisis and we will be free once more.

Millsaps College.

The second term of the first scholastic session of Millsaps College begins to-day. We have enrolled to date 148 pupils. The semi-annual examinations reveal remarkable improvement in the students generally, and exhibit in some instances wonderful progress. This, however, is not surprising, for I have never known more faithful work done by members of a faculty. The gentlemen I have the good fortune to have associated with me in the work here are not only thoroughly competent to instruct in their several departments, but they carry an enthusiasm and whole-heartedness into their work that is rarely seen. Students who fail to make progress under their instruction are positively without excuse.

Two weeks ago Bishop Galloway delivered a highly entertaining and singularly appropriate lecture before our Bible class on the "Life and Character of John Wycliffe." His visits to the college are always a source of inspiration to the faculty and students. W. B. MURRAH.

Other reports are looked for from day to day. A proper observance in all our charges would have wiped out the last vestige of the debt. Our Conference ought not to be behind. Let the brethren who failed to observe the first week in January observe the first week in Febuary or the second week—on circuits every week in February.

Jan. 30, 1893.

Wanted.

One thousand men, women and children to forward at once $5 each, and so complete the work of raising $50,000 in cash. Send on your name and money at once.

Brethren beloved, let us finish the well-begun work. Do not hesitate, do not wait for better times, but just now send on a substantial token of your love for Methodism, and especially the Methodism of Mississippi.

The agent scans his mail daily, looking for the answer that does not come. Three thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars is the exact amount needed today. JOHN W. CHAMBERS, Agt.

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 25, 1893.

As announced by the newspapers, our Elwood plant (except the warehouses) was destroyed by fire on last Sunday night. We fortunately had a good furnace in Pittsburgh in reserve, which is now lighted and will be melting glass in a few days—so we do not anticipate any great delay in filling orders. Besides the three furnaces in Pittsburgh, we will rebuild the Elwood plant, and in sixty or seventy days will have the furnaces going, which will insure a stock for Fall delivery.

We only ask the patience of our dealers, especially those who get car lots "quick" and the "rush" orders, and those who get special goods which must be made.

If we know the actual wants, we can anticipate very much and keep the shelves from getting empty to a considerable extent. It takes about 7 000 to 8,000 boxes each week to clear us from being called slow, and from the way the Pearl Glass and Pearl Tops are now being called for, we expect to "turn out" about 9,000 boxes each week the coming Fall.

Very truly, GEO. A. MACBETH CO.

We wish here to acknowledge the receipt of many kind expressions of sympathy and kindly disposition to accommodate us in many ways, which we could not otherwise acknowledge.

SLUMBER SONG.

Adown the twilight river we float,
Baby and I together,
Gliding along in our little boat,
Baby and I together.
Down to the wonderful land that waits
Where the river flows through the sunset gates,
While the silvery stars keep watch and ward
As we drift beneath their lovieg guard,
Bshy and I together.

Adown the river we softly glide,
Baby and I together,
As the day goes out on the ebbing tide,
Baby and I together.
The twilight river is broad and deep,
So close to the shadowy banks we keep,
While drowsy popples nod and sway
And sleepily beckon us to stay,
Baby and I together.

To Slumberland our craft we steer,
Baby and I together,
Slowly but surely our port we near,
Baby and I together.
Where the Dream tree spreads its branches wide
And scatters rare fruit on every side,
Down the twilight river we float along
While lapping waves croon a tender song,
Baby and I together.

The fair little head is drooping low,
Baby and I together.
Gently into the harbor go,
Baby and I together
Have reached the shores of Slumberland
By whispering breezes softly fanned.
Amid the fleet that are anchored fast,
Hush, we are safely moored at last,
Baby and I together.

Back Numbers.

BY REV. HANCY LEA.

This progressive age has little patience with the unprogressive. It irreverently dubs them "mossbacks" or "back numbers." The things that have been are not valueless. The things that are to be concern us. But much intenser is the interest in the things that now are. Russia is twelve days behind us in her reckoning, and it were well if this were the only unprogressive thing about her.

We have not time to enumerate all the back numbers we meet. The back-number bonnet is discarded by the ladies. The back-number business man, who will not advertise or adopt modern methods, soon goes to the wall. The back-number voter, who has not yet learned that the war is over, that slavery is abolished, and who still shouts for Clay or Jackson, is the butt of everybody's wit.

But what shall be said of the back-number Christian? He is the most out of place of all. Here, if anywhere, we should expect progress. If the "has been" is out of place in business and politics, much more in the church of God. Don't be a back-number Christian; better anything than that! Get rusty in other things if you must, but have a fresh, bright Christian experience, up to date, every day.

I found a happy illustration of my theme one day in the parsonage yard. It was a last-year's bird's nest in a leafless old apple tree. What a train of thought it suggested! I thought of the early Spring days, when bird made love to its mate, and sticks and straws were gathered here and there to build the nest. I thought of the weaving and lining of the nest, as only a bird knows how. I heard again in fancy the many happy songs warbled from tiny throats. I saw the nest full of pretty eggs, which later became birdlings with open mouths and a great capacity for food. I saw them grow and thrive under parental care till they were able to care for themselves. Then, one early Winter day, they hied themselves away to a less rigorous clime.

But now all was changed; the life, the activity, the music, the hope had vanished, and the deadest thing imaginable was that last-year's bird's nest.

Young Christian, don't have an experience like that! May the song-bird never vanish from your heart. Keep young, keep fresh, keep happy, keep musical; this, thank God, is your privilege. Be suspicious of any experience that knows only "the good old times." Have an experience "now every morning" and blessed every night. But how?

To one who ever knew Christ, the answer is easy. Keep this experience as you at first gained it. Did God come in answer to prayer? Then cease not to pray. Did God reveal himself in the Word? Continue to study therein. Did help come in the sanctuary? Neglect not the means of grace. Did your soul glow with holy joy as you gave personal testimony or invited others to Christ? These same means will perpetuate the holy fire.—Epworth Herald.

A Form of Family Injustice

Few women so thoroughly and so stupidly overreach themselves as does a mother who makes a favorite of one of her children. The favorite, even if originally of a just and sympathetic disposition, is made selfish, and he is only partly responsible for his selfishness. He easily obtains rewards which the other children can not by any merit obtain, if the favorite wishes them for himself. His brothers and sisters are afraid to insist on their rights, because they will have to quarrel with Tom. Tom has his poor, weak mother completely under his thumb. She, with little hesitation, palliates an offense by him which she would consider unpardonable if done to him. She condones and forgives, seemingly unconscious that the result is that a knowledge is borne in upon Tom that he has only to commit to be pardoned. The effect of all this is a demoralized family. The other children boil under a hot feeling of the injustice. They know, with the intuition of children, that in their mother emotion has taken the place of reason. They see that the laws of justice are broken, and that among them it is not the worker who wins, but the one who does not work.

Our character is but the stamp on our souls of the free choice of good and evil we have made through life.—Gelkie.

Changing Effects in Living-Rooms.

In Fanny Kemble's "Recollections of a Girlhood" she tells of a habit her mother had, happily, of changing effects in her living-rooms. Instead of allowing sofas and chairs to retain undisputed possession of the places to which they had been first assigned, this good matron frequently introduced new combinations and new effects. The whole appearance of a room would be altered or modified by a novel arrangement of its belongings. Sometimes rooms themselves would be transferred, so to speak, from one locality to another—not, of course, the very apartments, but the blue hangings of one chamber would take the place of the red in a former one, and vice versa. Pictures would be taken from this light and hung in that. The arm-chair that stood by the window would go into seclusion in a shadowy corner, and the big rocker would emerge from the corner and find favorable adjustment in the point of view of the window.

Monotony is to most people extremely distasteful. We weary of routine. We long for a change. A girl once said of her grandmother, a very irritable old lady, who was weary of life, and always wishing that her time had come to leave it, "I believe grandma's only reason for wishing that she were done with this life is that she has an ingrained love of change." Flippant as the remark was, it had its foundation on a substratum of truth. Many people do love change of scene, and if they can not have change of place, too, why should they not change the scenery in the place where they must stay?

Try it, if you are in a state of discouragement. Pull your parlor to pieces. Bring the piano out from the corner where it has been standing for a year or more, and set it in the middle of the room. Contrive corners by the judicious use of screens and drapery. Let the little rocker and the lounge hobnob sociably. Introduce a growing plant or two if none have been there before, and if the light is favorable. Do away with the sameness and monotony. You will find a real advantage in the the effort to change effects.—Harper's Bazar.

The Test of Laughter.

There are few tests of character surer or more easily applied than the one of laughter. If you know what a man laughs at, you can form a pretty accurate estimate of what he is. There are all sorts of laughs, from the silly simper to the broad, hearty guffaw, and each one of them tells its story to the discriminating observer. As a rule, men are off guard when they laugh; they are in the attitude of children, and so show forth without disguise just what is in them. The deep springs of character, the permanent habits of mind, are touched and disclosed by this commonest of all actions. A laugh is more involuntary and instinctive than a speech.

It is true that "a man may smile and smile, and be a villain," yet the villain's smile can rarely be a perfect counterpart to that of perfect integrity. How much it tells of a person to say that he never laughs, or that he always laughs in the wrong place! The finer shadings of a person's nature come out better in his laugh than in almost any other way. People will laugh at what is low and coarse and mean, when they would be rather afraid or ashamed to say it. So, also, the quality of the mind, whether trained or untrained, is plainly shown in the quality of the laugh and the occasion that calls it out. The disgusting giggle of the empty-headed young lady is familiar to all; so also is the twinkling sparkle in the eye that marks the keen appreciation of a nice point in refined conversation. The dull of wit, or the abnormally solemn and slow, never see anything to laugh at. The shallow-brained and frivolous laugh too much. The absent-minded or slow-paced laugh too late. The thoughtless or unreflective, and the reckless or cruel, laugh too quick. The ill-bred laugh too loud. The sly and crafty laugh too low—they snicker. The smirk, the chuckle, the grin, and the sneer also lay bare the contents of the secret chambers of the soul. Yes, very much may be learned from a laugh. It will well repay the student of human nature to observe this point closely.

Harmonious Living.

There is a satisfaction in living, and in having lived, which rarely arises out of life for those who have not acquired the habit of accommodating themselves, nobly and properly, to the temper of the passing moment. To possess a frame of mind in unison—or even better yet, in harmony—with the vicissitudes through which we are called to pass, is to be richly and sweetly content. But to be thoroughly and helplessly out of tune with the events or the temper of the passing moments, as they pass, is to be dissatisfied and miserably discontent. So then it is necessary to cultivate a power of appreciating and joyfully entering into the sudden, surprising, and the various changes that each hour of the day is likely to bring us. We may be called upon to pass without notice from sunshine into shadow, from jubilee to sorrow, from ecstasy to pain. We many need to mount from the gay to the grave, from the petty to the sublime. We may be led without opportunity for preparatory reflection from merest trifles to deciding and momentous crises. Physician, pastor, teacher, may be summoned from the feast to the death-bed, from the search for a lost pin to the search for a lost soul. A word brought by the postman or spoken by a neighbor may make revelations of existing facts that will require instant change for demeanor. In all enjoyment of peace and pleasure we are, like the soldier, to be ready for marching orders to the front; in every flush of victory we are supposed to be prepared to graciously accept the orders to retreat. And in all these vicissitudes the satisfaction of living consists in our ability to speedily adjust ourselves to the word of the Master. If we can accept cheerfully the orders that the Master gives us, and even under painful or happy surprises attune our being to the temper of that wherewith we are surrounded, our life will be enriched and glorified in its bright sides, and yet more deeply enriched and made grandly sublime in its darker side.—Christian at Work.

What Educates.

You ask what will educate your son. Your daily example will educate him; your conversation with your friends; the business he sees you transact; the likings and dislikings he sees you express—the society you live in will educate him; above all, your rank, your situation in life, your table will educate him. It is not in your power to withdraw him from the continual influence of these things, except you were to withdraw yourself from them also. Education goes on at every instant of time; you can never stop or turn its course. What these have a tendency to make your child, that will he be. Parents should invariably give good example to their children, for youths are usually apt students, and impressions made in childhood are indelibly stamped on the susceptible mind.—Exchange.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

DOLLY.

BY EUDORA S. BUMSTEAD.

My darling Dolly is one week old;
Her forehead is fair and creamy,
Her cheeks are pink and her hair is gold,
And her eyes are dark and dreamy.
She's lovely and sweet as she can be;
She's Santa Claus' own little daughter,
But she came to ma on the Christmas tree:
How glad I am that he brought her!

I never am lonely since she came,
And the only trouble with ma is
That I haven't been able to find a name
One half as pretty as she is.
Mama's in favor of "Isabel;"
And papa says, "Betsy or Polly!"
And I've thought and thought, and maybe—well,
I guess I shall call her Dolly.

A Question.

Who of our little cousins can tell the editor where the word "its" is found in King James' Version of the Bible? Mind you, not in the Revised Version, but in King James' Version.

EDITOR.

MR. EDITOR: As I see so many interesting letters in your columns, I will send you a few lines on the subject of my dear country home, although it may find its way to the waste-basket. My home is a small cottage on a farm near the beautiful stream of Sunflower river. We have a nice new church; 'tis very small, but sufficient, as we have such small congregations. We have an elegant Sunday-school. The happy girls and merry boys are deeply interested in our little Sabbath-school. I am living with my aunt and uncle. My mother lives in Jackson, Miss., but I prefer living in this country, as auntie has no girls, and is so kind and gentle to me. I find many ways in which I can spend the fleeting moments of life. Some people think it is very lonely in the swamp, but I do not find it that way. Our pastor is named Mr. Abbey. He will preach for us next Sabbath, if nothing prevents. I am very anxious to hear him. He will be warmly welcomed by others as well as myself. I will close, as this is my first letter, and I may not see it in your dear paper.

A swamp girl, LUCY LEE.

What a Blizzard Is Like.

A Dakota blizzard is something like a Sahara sandstorm, but with powdered ice instead of sand and the thermometer ranging thirty degrees below instead of 100 degrees above. A traveler may outlive a sandstorm, the only danger is that he will be smothered; but woe to the unlucky pilgrim who is caught by the blizzard! The fine frozen snow, as hard as iron filings, is driven into his face with terrific force; it becomes impossible to distinguish objects at a distance of a dozen yards, and he may flounder about for hours within a stone's throw of his own house without being able to find it. Great drifts are piled up around him, then whisked away, leaving the ground perfectly bare; the wind seems to resolve itself into a thousand whirling cyclones, and every open stretch of snow into a maelstrom. In North Dakota many of the farmers stretch ropes from their houses to their barns, so they may venture out to feed their stock during the blizzard—which frequently lasts two or three days—without danger of getting lost in the icy storm. In February, 1881, I drove out in a sleigh a few miles from Fargo to close up a land trade. The sky was clear as a bell, the air just cold enough to be exhilarating, and I enjoyed my ride out immensely. I did not enjoy the return trip, however. A cold, bitter wind came out from the northeast that constantly increased in violence, until the air became filled with fine snow, which glittered like myriads of tiny diamonds in the sun. Then the sky became overcast, the wind began to burl great banks of snow across the road, and I was soon unable to see my horse's head. I urged him onward, allowing him to pick his own course, for I was hopelessly at sea. I had heard that a horse would find his way home through the darkest night, and I hoped that instinct would serve him as well in a blizzard; but it didn't. In a little while he stopped, and, when I urged him forward, he turned squarely about and began to retrace his steps. He was lost as well as I. To sit still meant to freeze. I got out, threw the reins over my arm and started forward, calling at the top of my voice and firing off my revolver. In a minute or two there was an answering shot. I was within fifty yards of a farm-house, where I obtained shelter until the blizzard subsided, two days later.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

Improving the Time.

William Bernley was a clerk in a store in a small country town. He had a great deal of time on his hands, for customers were not very numerous. But he did not waste his time, or spend it in vain and gossipy talk with those who lounged into the store to pass away a vacant hour. He procured a text-book in shorthand, and applied himself diligently to mastering the system. A friend of his, who was an expert stenographer, corrected his exercises and helped him over hard places for a time; but William soon found that the measure of his success was in the study.

When he got so he could write quite well, he persuaded some of the school-boys of his acquaintance to read to him (and he found ways of discharging the obligation) evenings when he was off duty, until he could write fast enough to take down most of the minister's discourses on Sunday, and the lectures of occasional visitors to the town, and conversations that might be going on within his hearing.

In a year's time he had become expert enough to fill a position in a lawyer's office in a neighboring city, and to his ability as stenographer he soon added that of using the typewriter. His constant practice in both these industries made him in a comparatively short time quite rapid as a reporter and typewriter. With his improved facility he was able to command increased compensation for his work. Thus he went on until now he is supporting himself comfortably and laying up money to go through college.

All this came from his wise improvement of odd moments.—Exchange.

Johnny—"Do you say your prayers every night?" Jimmy—"I do whenever I've got to sleep in the folding bed."

This reminds us of a remark of a friend who took lodgings for a week in a home where there were folding beds in nearly all the rooms. She went to her room to retire, but soon returned to ours, saying, "I've never seen these beds on the walls before, and would be obliged if you would come in and show me how to get into them."

An Ant Funeral.

A lady gives this account of some ants which she saw in Sidney. Having killed a number of soldier ants, she returned in a half-hour to the spot where she had left their dead bodies, and in reference to what she then observed, she says:

"I saw a large number of ants surrounding the dead ones. I determined to watch their proceedings closely. I followed four or five that started off from the rest toward a hillock a short distance off, in which was an ants' nest. This they entered, and in about five minutes they appeared, followed by others. All fall into rank, walking regularly and slowly, two by two, until they arrived at the spot where lay the dead bodies of the soldier ants. In a few minutes two of the ants advanced and took up the dead body of one of their comrades; then two others, and so on until all were ready to march. First walked two ants bearing a body, then two without a burden, then two others with another dead ant, and so on until the line extended to about forty pairs; and the procession now moved slowly onward, followed by an irregular body of about two hundred ants. Occasionally the two laden ants stopped, and laying down the dead ant, it was taken up by the two walking unburdened behind them, and thus by occasionally relieving each other, they arrived at a sandy spot by the sea. The body of ants now commenced digging with their jaws a number of holes in the ground, into each of which a dead ant was laid. They now labored on until they had filled up the ants' graves. This did not quite finish the remarkable circumstances attending their funeral. Some six or seven of the ants had attempted to run off without performing their share of the task of digging. These were caught and brought back, when they were at once attacked by the body of the ants and killed upon the spot. A single grave was quickly dug, and they were all dropped into it."—Selected.

THE GIRL WE ALL LIKE.—Mable Gray is a very plain little girl; but everybody likes her. She seems never to trouble. Is never in the way. Grown-up people say, "What a lovely child she is!" Grandpa calls her "little woman." The children say she is a "queer thing!" But everybody wants her.

The peculiarity that puzzle her playmates endear her to them no less.

She never wants any of the dish that won't go around; she always prefers to walk if the carriage is too full. She never can tell which toy to choose, until all the others have chosen; and the tasks which her mates dislike to do, are the ones she always prefers.

One day little Grace Joy said:

"How strange it is, Mable. How is it you feel so about things!"

"I don't know," said Mable. "I can't help it."

"Then you don't do it on purpose?"

"O, no!" said Mable, thoughtfully. "No! it does itself. I just 'spose I'm made so."—Presbyterian Review.

THE THREE WISHES.—A gentleman, while sitting at the dinner table with his family, had these words said to him by his son, a lad of eleven years: "Father, I have been thinking, if I could have one single wish of mine, what I would choose." "To give you a better chance," said the father, "suppose the allowance be increased to three wishes, what would they be? Be careful, Charley!" He made his choice thoughtfully: first, of a good character; second, of good health; and third, of a good education. His father suggested to him that fame, power, riches and various other things are held in general esteem among men. "I have thought of all that," said he, "but if I have a good character, and good health, and a good education, I shall be able to earn all the money that will be of any use to me, and everything will come along in its right place." A wise decision, indeed, for a lad of that age.—Exchange.

MARY AND HER DOLL.—Such a pretty story I read the other day about a little girl named Mary, who lives in Pennsylvania! In some way she fell and broke her arm, and had to keep in bed for a long while. Her playmates came to see her, and often brought her beautiful flowers, of which she was very fond. There was something else, too, which Mary loved dearly, and that was her dog, whose name was Bob. He seemed to feel very sorry for his little mistress, and he noticed how happy the flowers always made her. So he thought he would give her a bouquet, too. Away he went into the yard, and plucked a mouthful of plantain leaves. He then hurried back to Mary, put his forepaws on her bed, dropped the leaves, and wagged his tail, saying as plainly as any dog could: "Don't you think that my flowers are pretty, too?"—Selected.

HOW TURKISH BOYS ARE TRAINED.—Little Turks are trained to be soldiers, every inch of them. A little Turk eats whatever is given him, obeys without a murmur, works like a horse at whatever task is set before him, walks till he drops down, draws water for his own food, cuts his own wood, takes care of his own horse and sleeps on the ground without ever giving the smallest sign of impatience. He is even taught to do this without moving a muscle of his face to show that he does not like such hard work. What about the little boys in civilized countries, who pout because they have to go on errands, and who refuse to eat porridge and milk for breakfast? What would a well-trained young Turk think of a boy who did these things?

REVENGE.—"I don't care," said the little girl who had not been invited to the party, "I'll get even with them!" and her eyes flashed as she stamped her small foot. "Why, what will you do, child?" asked her mother. "When I grow up I'll give a great big party, and I won't invite anybody."—Harper's Bazar.

After repeating, "Now I lay me," a little one asked God to bless "papa and mama, and old Flora (the family horse), and the buggy."

A little friend rendered this same little prayer as follows: "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep, if I should die before I wake—(O, mama, wouldn't that be dreadful?)—I pray the Lord my soul to take."

Little daughter (coaxingly): "Please, please, papa, can I drive?"

Father (wearied out by her teasing and beginning to get angry)—"How many times do you want me to say 'no?'"

"I don't want you to say 'no' at all, pape; I want you to say 'yes?'"

AUNT MARY'S DIPLOMACY.—Mame: "You were gone for a long time, Bobby."

Bobby: "Well, Aunt Mary and I got over a fence and stayed there a long time, 'cos there was a cow in the road, and Aunt Mary said she didn't want to scare it with her red hat."—Judge.

HUNT.—Died, at Claiborne, La., Nov. 11, 1892, LETITIA STRAIN, wife of J. C. Hunt, and daughter of Jack Strain and Lavinia Griffen; was born Jan. 2, 1861.

Sister Hunt joined the M. E. Church, South, early in life. Her kind and gentle disposition endeared her to the hearts of all who knew her, and the sad news of her death was received with universal sorrow. For many years she exemplified the doctrines of our holy Christianity, and those with whom she was associated in the various departments of Christian work will cherish her memory. Like her Master, whom she truly served, she "went about doing good"—a dispenser of charity. She fed the hungry, gave drink to the thirsty, and delighted in visiting the sick." Those who knew her best loved her most. Her last moments were such that they will be remembered longest by those near her side. Faith, hope and love were there displayed in all its Christian influence. She was willing to stay, ready to go. Verily she "passed through the valley of the shadow of death," saying: O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?

Moure not, dear loved ones, for her; but pray God to prepare you for the coming meeting, that you may then part no more.

H. WALLACE.

SCHILLING.—Mrs. SUSAN SCHILLING was born in South Carolina in 1810; moved to Washington parish, La., when a child; joined the Methodist Church while young; was a consistent member until she died. She was the wife of a Methodist preacher who has gone to his reward. She was a good wife, a fond mother. She told her children, after she took sick, that she was ready to die and prepared to meet her Savior; that all was peace with her. She was eighty-two years four months twenty days old; died July 20, 1892.

She leaves one son, six daughters and a number of friends to mourn on account of her death; but she has gone to eternal rest. Her neighbors all say, "Sister Schilling was a good Christian, and she died in the full triumph of a living faith." May the good Lord bless and save her children! W. M. SULLIVAN.

BARLOW.—Little CHARLES GUY, son of A. J. and E. T. Barlow, was born August 27, 1889, and died Jan. 16, 1893.

Dear little Guy had entwined himself around the hearts of all who knew him by his sprightliness, good humor and politeness. His death was more sad by the absence of his loved mother. But we know he is now among the angels, and his Christian parents have another child on the other shore, and can say, God's will be done! "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

May divine grace comfort the hearts of the sorrowing family and friends, and give them a place with little Guy in heaven, is the prayer of their friend, REV. W. W. BROWNE.

[illegible], Sabine parish, La.

[illegible].—L. A. SALTER was born June 24, [illegible] married to Mr. W. F. Salter, Feb. 3, 1892. [illegible] a member of any church, though a [illegible] daughter and faithful wife. Was supposed to be steady, never daring to go [illegible] of diversion.

[illegible] that all is well with her, and think [illegible] she died consciously she would have [illegible] testimony of having accepted the [illegible], and an assurance of her acceptance.

[illegible] help the parents and husband in [illegible] action to claim the blessed promise [illegible] all things shall work together for [illegible] them that love God. J. H. BROWN.

JOHNSON.—Rev. JAMES F. JOHNSON was born in Leake county, Miss., March 10, 1847. He was from youth a member of the M. E Church, South. For twenty years he fought the call to preach the gospel. In 1891 he yielded and was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of the Franklin charge. In 1892 he was employed on the Sulphur Mine circuit, where he did a good year's work for the Master. At the last session of the Louisiana Conference, he was received on trial into the traveling connection, and was appointed to the Spring Creek circuit. He had just moved his family on the work when he was taken sick with pneumonia, and was sick only seven days, and died on Jan. 19, 1893. His body was taken by his children to Franklin and buried, where it waits the morn of the resurrection.

Bro. Johnson was faithful and zealous in all church work, a man of deep piety, and promised to be a very useful preacher, but was cut off just as he had commenced the great mission.

He leaves behind five children, but they weep not as those who have no hope.

JNO. A. MILLER.

Lafayette, La.

DANIELS.—AFFIZONA, little daughter of A. W. and Elizabeth Daniels, was born May 16, 1885, and died Jan. 21, 1893.

While at school she went into the woods where there was some fire, and her clothes caught on fire, and before anyone could get to her she was badly burned; but with careful treatment and good attention she lived eighteen days. After she was so badly burned her sufferings were intense, but she is now at rest with him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

The funeral was attended by quite a number of friends and loved ones. It was a sad sight, indeed, to see the loved ones, and especially the little brothers and sisters, standing by and seeing the little girl put away in the grave, and hear them say, "never see her any more." But, dear ones, live as God would have us live, and one by one God will take you all to where you can live with your precious child and little sister. May God bless and save this family!

W. M. SULLIVAN.

MILLER.—Mrs. MARGARET MILLER (nee Jones), wife of Levi A. Miller, of Calcasieu parish, was born in Wayne county, Miss., Jan. 25, 1836; was married to her husband, Nov. 1, 1855; was converted and joined the Baptist Church in 1851, in which communion she lived till her death, which occurred at her home, Dec. 2, 1892.

Sister Miller was a Christian women. She was kind to all, and died in hope of eternal life. She was as a mother to the writer, who spent a considerable time under the hospitable roof of herself and husband. I shall never forget.

Sister Miller leaves an affectionate husband, ten devoted children, twelve grandchildren and a host of friends to mourn their loss. They, therefore, mourn not as those without hope, but expect to meet her in heaven. May the Lord bless the bereaved ones! R. C. GRACE.

KITTLE.—LOUIS H. KITTLE was born in Henderson, N. C., Oct. 23, 1846, and died at his home, near Evansville, Tunica county, Miss., of pneumonia, Jan. 16, 1893. In 1876 he was married to Emily Barton, daughter of the late Rev. W. P. Barton. She, with seven children, is left to face this great sorrow—the loss of tender husband and father.

He joined the Methodist Church at the age of fourteen, and was ever faithful and ready to serve her interests, if at the cost of great self-denial. Before disease clouded his mind he felt he would die, and calmly rested on the merits of the Master, whom he had faithfully served, and by whose life, in all Christian graces, he had himself tried to model his own. One had but to know him to feel he had in spirit been with Christ, and we are comforted now in feeling he is ever with the Lord. L. L. B.

Sister Slocumb was forty three years old; had been a member of the M. E. Church, South, ever since she was fifteen years old. I visited her in her sickness, and, though she was a sufferer for a long time, she was cheerful all the time. These were her words to me: "Bro. Sullivan, I am not going to die, for when I leave this world I will live with my Savior."

She was a patient, good Christian; loving wife, a fond mother. Hers was a triumphant death. She leaves a husband, two children and a number of friends to mourn.

W. M. SULLIVAN.

DEAVENPORT.—CLYDE ALONORAM DEAVENPORT, infant son of J. M. and Naonie R. Deavenport, was born in Pontotoc town, Dec. 2, 1892, and died on the Saltillo charge, Jan. 16, 1893.

The child of our itinerancy in transit from eternity touched the shores of time, lingered for a while in a world marred by sin, tasted the cup of life, and, as it sickened by its bitter draught, closed its eyes and went back to God, to bask forever in the sunlight of his eternal presence. "If I am bereft of my children, I am bereft." "For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen, unto the glory of God by us." J. M. DEAVENPORT.

MORGAN.—The subject of this note, J. E. MORGAN, was born in Lawrance county, Miss., Aug. 15, 1824; came to Texas with his son, J. W. Morgan, in December, 1891, with whom he resided, near Hallettsville, Lavaca county, till the day of his death, Jan. 5, 1893.

Bro. Morgan had been a member of the Methodist Church for more than eighteen years, though at the time of his death held his certificate, having never been able to attend church since coming to Texas. Two children survive him. A reunion is anticipated.

Weekly Trade Review.

(From R. G. Dunn & Co.)

Actual business is surprisingly large for the season, and grave fears for the future are entertained. Congressional uncertainties cause the fears, but the prosperity and the needs of the people make business what it is. Never before has the distribution of products to consumers been larger than it has been thus far this year, hence industries are remarkably prosperous. The volume of trade measured by clearings in January was nearly 12 per cent. larger than in any previous year, and the railway movement shows a great increase in the tonnage transported. Yet it is probably safe to say that rarely, if ever, except in a time of panic has business been more cautiously and conservatively regulated. Monetary uncertainties are excused by the continued outgo of gold, but the passage of the anti-option bill by the Senate has had no effect upon the market as yet.

Business at New Orleans is quiet, with money in good demand and easy. Cotton more active and sugar strong and trade in rice improving. The demand for dress goods continues very large, and the knit dress goods trade, especially in underwear, is unprecedented. The sale of wool at the three chief markets has been 30 600 000 pounds, against 25 000 000 last year, thus far the increase being 23 per cent. Trade in boots and shoes is very active, shipments for the year thus far amounting to 304 000 cases, against 258 000 last year.

Have BEECHAM'S PILLS ready in the household.

There has been a serious riot in Bogota, South America, which lasted two days. It is said that a hundred men were killed and many were wounded. The riot was in no sense political, but grew out of a newspaper article assailing the widespread ignorance of the working people. The artisans rebelled, and were put down by the militia after severe fighting.

The Nova Scotia House adjourned on Feb. 2 after the lieutenant general signed eleven bills, including that leasing to the American syndicate all the coal mines in Cape Breton.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

An explosion of natural gas in Urbana, Ohio, on Feb 3, blew a house to atoms and killed two women.

The New York State Board of Health has issued a summary of the mortality of the State for the year 1892. The total number of deaths in the State for the year was 130 750 This makes the death rate for the year 20.78 per 1,000 population.

The flow of gold from the United States to Europe continues. The Treasurer's statement of the public debt for the end of January shows that the government has in its vaults, over and above the gold which is pledged for special purposes, only about $8 000,000.

The governor of Arkansas has come forward with a call addressed to the other Southern governors inviting their co-operation in the matter of taking measures to attract immigration, and he sets forth a proposition calling for a convention of Southern governors at Richmond, Va., for April 12.

A movement has been started to erect a building at Harvard College for the religious societies in memory of the late Bishop Brooks. A committee, of which Profs. Peabody and Palmer are members, has been appointed to devise ways and raise the means. Some $10,000 has already been pledged.

A bill has been introduced in the New York Assembly providing for the submission at the next Fall election of the question of opening saloons on Sunday, after 1 P. M., in the city of New York, to a vote of the people, and if the majority is favorable to it, the corporation of New York is to report a bill to the Legislature which shall permit such opening.

In view of the probable invasion of Asiatic cholera during the present year, if the quarantine laws be not amended and immigration checked, the leading physicians of Illinois have been in consultation to determine what action should be taken to bring about a needed reform. Resolutions calling upon Congress to take such steps as will secure protection to the country were unanimously passed.

There are many inquiries into the reasons which led President Harrison to appoint a Democrat (Judge Jackson, of Tennessee) to succeed the late Justice Lamar on the Supreme Benoh. The statement comes very direct that he was led to do so because of Republican opposition to his making any nomination, and the responsibility for the failure to nominate a Republican is said to rely upon ten or twelve Republicans in the Senate who were determined to oppose any nomination proposed by the President.

The report of the grain inspectors for January shows that there has, for the first time this season, been a falling off in the exports of grain from this port compared with the same month last year. The totals show a decrease of 573,327 bushels in corn shipments and a decrease of 264,972 bushels in wheat shipments. The falling off in the corn movement is considerable, but may be attributed in part to a smaller crop in the section naturally tributary to this port, and to the fact that the river has either been so low or so closed with ice that transportation was difficult.

It is believed that the investigation authorized by the House of Representatives of the United States, of which Mr. Fellows, of New York, is in charge, will bring out some startling disclosures in regard to the Panama Canal. It is also hinted that some of the American senators and representatives who have been active in the promotion of that enterprise will be found to have been under pay of the French for the purpose of drawing the attention of Americans from the isthmus and leave the De Lesseps Company a free hand, and allowing them to trample the Monroe doctrine under foot with impunity.

FOREIGN.

The Archduke Franz Ferdinand, of Austria, has arrived at Calcutta on his tour in the East. The Marquis of Lansdowne and the officials of the vice-regal court gave the archduke a most imposing reception.

The Paris Siecle demands that the Czar support France's policy in Egypt and Morocco in order that the French government may feel assured that the visit of the Czarowitz in Berlin has not altered the Russo-Franco entente for which France has made great sacrifices.

A deputation of native and European merchants waited upon the viceroy of India and submitted to him resolutions demanding that, in view of the failure of the Brussels Monetary Conference to arrive at any conclusion on the bimetallic issue, the government of India should immediately close the mints to free coinage.

The Mexican War Department has received dispatches from the federal and military authorities of the State of Sonora during the last few days, stating that the Navajo Indians are committing many depredations in the northern part of that State, and that settlers in the valleys of Sierra Nevada Mountains have been the victims of many serious outrages.

This Is Meant for You.

It has been truly said that half the world does not know how the other half lives. Comparatively few of us have perfect health, owing to the impure condition of our blood. But we rub along from day to day, with scarcely a thought, unless forced to our attention, of the thousands all about us who are suffering from scrofula, salt rheum and other serious blood disorders, and whose agonies can only be imagined. The marked success of Hood's Sarsaparilla for these troubles, as shown in our advertising columns frequently, certainly seems to justify urging the use of this excellent medicine by all who know that their blood is disordered. Every claim in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is fully backed up by what the medicine has done and is still doing, and when its proprietors urge its merits and its use upon all who suffer from impure blood, in great or small degrees, they certainly mean to include you.

A Doctor's Evidence.

HOW PERMANENT CURES ARE MADE.

The order in which the symptoms of chronic catarrh occur are nearly always as follows: A cold, which hangs on longer than usual; a sensitiveness of the air passages by which one catches cold easily; a continual settled cold in head, throat or chest; discharges growing thicker and more offensive; loss of flesh, despondency, loss of appetite, headache or cough, and general lassitude. Now, this is about the order in which symptoms of chronic catarrh make their appearance, and if the sufferer is fortunate enough to find a cure, the symptoms will begin to disappear in exactly the reverse order. There may be at first no perceptible improvement in the earliest symptoms, while the latter symptoms show prompt improvement.

This is exactly what Pe-ru-na will do in the cure of chronic catarrh: It first invigorates the system, increases the appetite, then the patient begins to gain flesh, hope takes the place of despondency, and all the mischievous symptoms which the chronic catarrh has produced will disappear one by one in the reversed order of their appearance. The last symptoms to yield are often the ones which the patients expects to disappear first, but all should remember that the first symptoms to appear will be the last to disappear, while the last ones to appear are usually the first ones to disappear. Cures made in this way are permanent cures. A patient cured by Pe-ru-na is no more liable to catarrh than as if he had never had it.

A complete treatise on chronic catarrh in all its stages and complications will be sent free, on application, by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio.

CHRIST WALKING ON THE SEA OF GALILEE

AMONG the great religious paintings of modern times, Christ Walking on the Sea, by Chas. Francer, is a masterpiece. The text from which the picture was taken is this: When even was come, his disciples went down unto the sea, and entered into a ship. And it was dark, and the ship was in the midst of the sea, and Jesus alone was on the land and was not come to them. And the sea arose by reason of a great wind that blew. And he saw them toiling in rowing, for the wind was contrary unto them, and the ship was now in the midst of the sea tossed with waves. Jesus cometh unto them, walking upon the sea and would have passed them. But when the disciples saw him walking on the sea and drawing nigh unto the ship, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out for fear. And immediately he talked with them, and saith unto them, "Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid."

This beautiful biblical description the painter has chosen for his subject, and his wonderful painting appeals in the highest degree to the religious sentiment, as well as the artistic taste and refinement of every nationality and every creed.

The above handsome picture will be mailed free to each old subscriber sending $2 to renew his subscription for another year, and remitting amount due. It will also be mailed free for each new subscriber sending us $2.

A Temperance Mission.

MR. EDITOR: The subject of missions has been agitated through the ADVOCATE recently, which is praiseworthy, but only one kind of missionary work has been mentioned: a man to be sent out to preach the gospel in French. This, we think, ought to have been done years ago; but it is better late than never. If the right man is secured, and a judicious course is pursued now, a rich harvest of souls will be the result. More blinded eyes will be opened, and more deluded souls will be enlightened, than ever before in this fair land of ours. While this enterprise meets with our cordial approval, there is another movement which, we think, should accompany or precede this, and that is temperance missionary work. There have been for years—we know not how long—and there are to-day, some bold and earnest temperance workers in Louisiana—men and women who have left their homes and traveled over the State, and worked faithfully in the interest of the cause. All honor to them! But what of results? Is our State a temperance State? Has there been a revolution of sentiment upon the subject? Any towns and parishes gone dry, or making an effort so to do? With only one exception, we have heard of nothing of the kind. Does the reader ask why? We think we have the answer: Our temperance workers, like our ministers, have occupied our churches, and discoursed to a few Protestant people who are, in the main, temperance people already. What has been the result, and what will be the result in the future of this policy? Our State to-day, with all the Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and other Christian churches, all having temperance workers in them, is burdened and cursed with the whisky traffic, and its impoverishing and ruinous effects. Do not the pastors in all these churches preach against this gigantic evil? Are not the pastors in these different churches as much interested upon the subject, and as influential generally, as these special temperance lecturers? Why such insignificant results? Because whisky dealers, whisky advocates and whisky drinkers seldom, if ever, hear the subject discussed by anyone. What shall be done? Is there no remedy? Is our fair State doomed? Is time to roll on, and our sun to set at last beneath a dark and cheerless sky? No, we think not necessarily. As with our French-speaking missionary, so with a temperance missionary. Let the chief object be to reach the masses. "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." Discuss the subject in such places as those in ignorant bondage will attend and hear. Exhibit statistics, and enlighten and lead them to see themselves and their state as they are. A sinner must be convicted before he is converted. Certain long-robed gentlemen, under the guise of religion and holiness, wink at this curse and shame, guzzle down quantities of intoxicants, and thus aid in this devilish work. "Truly they shall have their reward." This state of things has existed hitherto, and how long shall it continue? We answer, Until we reach the masses and teach them better. Through perseverance and faith in a God of justice we defeated the Lottery, and now why not remove this disgrace to our fair State, and thus open the way for the greater success of the gospel of Christ?

Ecce Ecclesia!

AND CHARITY BALL.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF EDWARDS WILL HELP OUT THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The Clarion-Ledger acknowledges an invitation to attend the "Grand Charity Ball" to be given by the young ladies of Edwards, on Feb. 10, for the benefit of the Episcopal Church. The following committees have the affair in charge:

Here follow Committees of Arrangements, Invitation, Reception and Floor.)

The above astounding notice we clip from the Clarion-Ledger, of Jackson, Miss., of Monday, the sixth instant. We had thought that this so-called charity had gone to its extreme limit when we read a similar notice a few days since in connection with one of the benevolent institutions of our great State; but in the above we find a presumption which overleaps all bounds—an insinuation which is humiliating in the extreme. The church of God an object of charity! Shades of the apostles, who left all to follow Christ! Spirit of St. Paul, who would present to us a "glorious church without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing!" "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made;" and yet this same Word, who is the "Head of the church," receiving the revenues of a "charity ball" to support his body, the church. How different this to the teaching of the Son of God, when he said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength!" The church of God an object of charity, and that, too, at the hands of a universally acknowledged enemy to the cause of Christ! I wonder that the late lamented Phillips Brooks does not shudder in his new-made grave. Certainly we have misconstrued the teachings of the great apostle when he tells that the church is the disburser (not the recipient) of charities. Surely God hath forgotten to be gracious to this, his boasted only people. "Love not the world, neither the things of the world," is a teaching of the loving John, and the sturdy, practical James says that such friendship is enmity with God. Fairs, festivals, bazaars, "et id genus omne," may barely be tolerated, but a "charity ball" utterly falls in the first semblance to anything like honor to our crucified Lord, "who, though rich, for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might become rich."

To what lengths will the great enemy of the human soul not go in his darling and presumption! Truly he goeth about seeking whom he may devour, and he hesitates not to come in among the people of God. In the name of decency, I protest; in the name of the church, I protest; in the name of the "Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, which was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be," I protest. For the honor of our blessed Master and his beloved church, I would hope that the "charity ball," with all its revenues, had been rejected as a thing offered unto idols.

Work in Brazil.

For some time past I have been a witness to the fact that the Lord's hand is not shortened that it can not save, and that even here in Brazil the preaching of the gospel is mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan, and the building up of the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I have been in Brazil about six months, and since I came out here I have been made to wonder at seeing men so willing to be led into the way of life, especially Roman Catholics.

At the last Annual Conference I was ordained to deacon's orders, and appointed pastor of an American settlement of English-speaking people, until I should acquire the Portuguese language. I am living in the house of my brother-in-law, Rev. M. Dickie, in Piracicaba. He is pastor of the church here as well as presiding elder of the district. In this place I have seen the power of God at work among the people. Shortly after I arrived I was filled with thankfulness to Almighty God by seeing eight persons come forward for baptism; since then I have seen many thus break with the Church of Rome.

At Christmas we had a very good time, that festival being observed in a right spirit, even of joy and thanksgiving. We had also a watch-night service, which was well attended. As the moment drew nigh which was at the same time to close the old-year scene and usher in the new, all knelt in silent prayer, and we trust that then and there many lives were laid upon the altar that sanctifieth the gift. At the close there was much greeting, handshaking and hugging in true Brazilian style.

But this was not all. The next day, Sunday, we had good times at the services. At the night service there were seven strong, intelligent men (one of them a police captain) and two women came forward to be received into the church by baptism, thus openly renouncing the Church of Rome, and standing up for true evangelical teaching, others coming forward and offering themselves as candidates for church membership. I hold that this is greater victory than to see so many open heathen come out of darkness into the light, for the Roman Church has the minds of her people prejudiced against the teaching of the gospel. They are trained enemies, but they are waking up to see the hollowness of their church, and to find that it has not wherewithal to satisfy their felt need. Her corruption is appearing unto all. Brazil needs the gospel, and, thank God, Brazil is open to the gospel. We need more churches, we need more workers; the harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few.

I remain, Yours in Christ,

JAMES HAMILTON.

Piracicaba, Estado de São Paulo, Brazil, Jan. 6, 1893.

Temperance in Aberdeen, Miss.

Assisted by able lawyers and other true friends of the temperance cause, we have diligently labored for the past month to defeat the granting of license to retail spirituous liquors in the city of Aberdeen. As is well known, the question turns on the majority of qualified electors. Our endeavors have been put forth to ascertain the number of legal voters who signed the liquor petition. We soon found that legal and constitutional objections could be made to about one hundred and forty names on the petitions, which would defeat whisky in Aberdeen. Worst of all, several of the county records pertaining to the tax list were taken or stolen from the court-house. This was done when the whisky fight began. It does not take a very wise man to see why these important books disappeared! From the above we conclude that if license is granted, it will be because the records are gone or stolen, and the balance of power is in the hands of those who are not qualified voters.

The whole county is agitated on the subject. We will go into the county election soon. Both sides believe that Monroe county will go "dry" by a large majority. Church work and the cause of prohibition grow all the time. Pray for us. J. A. BOWEN.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. G. E. Greene, Big Cane, La.: "Affairs on my work—Melville and Big Cane—are pleasant and hopeful. Parsonage very neatly furnished. Stewards faithful. Good Sunday-school at Melville. Had one of my church secretaries to furnish me with a carefully made list of members—the first time in five years. He did so, too, without being reminded of his duty."

Rev. W. W. Drake, P. C., Crowley, La., Jan. 30: "I arrived at Crowley, Dec. 30, 1892, and have preached here every Sunday since. Congregations average over 150. Sunday-school is full and interesting. Large prayer meetings. Collection for Week of Prayer and Self-denial amounted to $13. We are planning for revival services early in the year, and expect large results."

Rev. H. L. Norton, Jan. 30: "We are not an extreme people at Madison. The elements have not been in commotion. We have had no cyclones, no thunder-storms or tornadoes, but be it known that the atmosphere is not stagnant in these parts, inasmuch as it was agitated into a gentle breeze in the neighborhood of the parsonage on the afternoon of the twenty-eighth instant. Each appointment has been filled during the year."

Rev. C. R. Godfrey, Floyd, La.: "The first quarterly meeting for the Floyd circuit, Delhi district, Louisiana Conference, was held at Floyd, on Wednesday, the first of February, 1893. The presiding elder, Rev. H. O. White, was on time, and preached three sermons to the use of edifying. Had a delightful communion service; pleasant and profitable Conference. The presiding elder told us that the outlook for the Floyd charge is very bright, hopeful and promising."

Geo. L. Jones, Maurepas, La., Feb. 1: "I hope that a report from this Sunday-school and prayer meeting will not be out of order. A revival has been going on for four weeks. Several conversions in the school, and the prayer meetings generally revived. Maurepas has one young man at school preparing for the ministry. I expect others will follow soon. We, at this appointment, expect to pay the preacher in charge one hundred dollars this year. There is good prospects for the ADVOCATE."

Rev. G. W. Gordon, Coffeeville, Miss., Feb. 8: "In reporting the first Quarterly Conference for this charge, I neglected to mention the presence of our efficient colporter, Rev. G. W. Bachman. This was an oversight, and wholly unintentional. In the Quarterly Conference and in the Sunday-school mass meeting, Sunday afternoon, he rendered appreciated help. There is no man in our Conference who is doing a better work than Bro. Bachman. The distribution of sound literature is a most important work, and our presiding elders, and pastors especially, should give their aid in furthering this work."

Rev. John H. Rogers, P. C., Poplar Creek, Miss., Feb. 7: "The first Sunday in January found me on my new field of labor, ready to begin my year's work. We had to move about 175 miles; but when we got here we found a good parsonage and a generous people. We have started on our second round; will hold all our Church Conferences this round. Our first Quarterly Conference was held Jan. 27, but, owing to the rain, the officials did not come out—only one steward present; but our beloved presiding elder (W. T. J. Sullivan) was on hand, and preached an excellent sermon for us. Brethren, pray for us, that we may have a baptism of the Holy Spirit during this Conference year."

Rev. W. T. Currie, P. C., Springfield charge, La., Feb. 7: "I came to my new home on Dec. 28, 1892. I finished moving the second week in January. My family did not get here until the twenty-fourth day of January. The people of Ponchatoula were very kind to me in taking care of me. They threw their doors open to me. On the evening of Jan. 24 my family arrived. Ever since the morning of Jan. 26 there has been a gentle breeze blowing, and there has been blown into the parsonage nice sausage, pork, light bread, cake, strawberry and chickens, and I can say with David, 'The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage.' My congregations are large and attentive. A great many have asked interest in prayer; therefore, I ask you and all the brethren to pray for us this year."

Rev. J. N. Tucker, Learned, Miss., Feb. 8: "Learned circuit is a new one, composed of three churches which previously formed a part of Utica circuit, viz.: Bear Creek, Learned, and Reaves Chapel. To these is added an appointment at Dry Grove, where we expect soon to organize a church. Since my arrival here I have preached nine times, held several prayer meetings, visited fully two-thirds of the membership, and prayed with and for each family, except two, whom I have visited. I have sent three renewals and two new subscribers to our paper—the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—and have others now to forward. We have held a Church Conference at each church, elected secretaries, appointed class leaders, and, as far as possible, begun systematic church work. We expect large things from our God this year. Pray for us."

Rev. T. B. Holloman, Wesson, Miss., Feb. 10: "Recognizing the magnitude of the work committed to our charge, we have begun rising early (5:30 A. M.) and running until 10 to 11 P. M. In these five weeks we have met every service in the church; visited 125 families, besides numerous office calls; have kept fairly up with our library work, and have nearly completed one of the most delightful books I ever read—'The Bible in the World's Education,' by Bishop Warren. Get it, brother; you'll enjoy it. Bro. Woodward was with us last Sunday, preaching and holding Quarterly Conference. Church not yet recovered from extra exertion of fourth quarter of last year. The Board of Stewards devised liberally for our support. Indeed, such an increase over any previous salary that we begin to think that we may some day, even yet, reach up among the big preachers. We have renewed for ten copies of the ADVOCATE and secured one new subscriber. Congregations continue good, and, all in all, we start off well."

Rev. J. H. Evans, Williamsburg, Miss., Jan. 31: "This is my fourth year with this people, and, best of all, my return was a source of joy to all, both preacher and people, and we do hope and pray that we will be blessed by our heavenly Father in our work, and be the instrument of bringing many souls to Christ. Our new presiding elder came and held our first Quarterly Conference, and left a lasting impression for good on the hearts and minds of the people of every denomination. He is a man full of the Spirit of the Master and fine intellectual powers; preaches with spiritual fervor, and presides over the Quarterly Conference like a born elder, and he will always find open hearts and arms when he comes on this work. It seems to me that our presiding elder comes up to that commandment of our Lord which says, 'Be ye wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove.' May God grant us all such a spirit as this! We can say for Williamsburg circuit that there is a move in the right direction, and that is a deeper work of grace in the hearts and lives of our people, and a more consecrated spirit of working for the Lord. Pray for us, that this, the fourth year of our stay with this people, will be the best and most prosperous."

Rev. S. S. Began, Cane River, Louisiana Conference: "I am happy to report, 'Right side up with care.' I have made my first round on Cane River circuit, and have met a great many of my people, and claim among them many friends. I am very much gratified to find quite a number of faithful Christians, and all seem to have the great work of the Master at heart; and, by the grace of him in whom, and by whom, we move and have our being, we are going to gather ourselves together to do battle against our common enemy, and, with Jesus as our Captain, 'victory' is ours. We need to be fortified on every side, having on the whole armor of God, for we find, too, that Satan has made himself strong, and walled in his 'city' with great stones of self-security and thoughtlessness, and garnished them over with several coats of profanity, drunkenness—in fact, every vice that could be mentioned; but, by the help of our King and Master, we will surround them and attack his stronghold, though the walls be of such prodigious size that we can't see over them. We will blow the gospel trumpet until they quake and fall; then will we take possession in the name of our God, and build again the walls of Zion. God grant to give us a speedy victory, 'and set the captive free.' Brethren, when your eyes perchance to fall upon these lines, let your heart go out in a moment's prayer for this people and their pastor, that God may bless them."

Rev. E. G. Kilgore, Alvord, Texas, Feb. 4: "Three weeks ago I left my home, at Memphis, Tenn., to fill an engagement with Bro. Ben H. Bounds, at Chico, in this State. After rather an unpleasant trip, I reached Chico on time, and began the work at once. At first we had an up-hill pull of it, on account of cold weather; but, continuing faithfully until the clouds rolled away and the weather moderated, the people began to come, and the congregations began to increase until we were compelled to move to the largest room in the place, and then were so crowded that we found it difficult to work. In the meantime, however, the spiritual tide rose higher and higher, until shouts of praise went up from every part of the great congregation, and many were converted to God. There were quite a number of valuable additions to the church. Bro. Bounds is a new man in this charge, but he has captured the good-will of the people, and is prepared to do a great work here. From Chico I came to this place, where we are now engaged in the first week of a meeting which promises to be very successful. In fact, we already have a rejoicing church, and a number of penitents, with some conversions. The Lord is with us in great blessings. Praise his name! Bro. Ayers (our pastor here) and his people are expecting great results. I go from here back to Arkansas to assist Bro. Brown at Rector, and thence to Poplar Bluff and other points in Missouri. Pray for me in the work. May the Lord bless the ADVOCATE!"

Rev. L. J. Jones, Pleasant Grove circuit, Feb. 6: "On the fourth day of February, 1893, Welman Church sent to this parsonage a wagon containing one barrel of flour, and sugar, coffee, rice, meat, can fruit, salt, dress goods, and several other packages. One brother sent us a piece of money. Mr. Editor, some call this a pounding. I will let them name it while my family and I do the eating and wearing. I know you are burdened with such pieces; but, as this church was only organized just before our last Annual Conference, I think you ought to publish it. We started with thirty members. We are looking for still better times. Bro. Webb, superintendent of our Sabbath-school at Welman, and others of Welman, visited the parsonage on the fourth day of February, and some of the leading members of Pleasant Grove Church. Bro. Webb stated in the meeting that they had a fine Sabbath-school, and on Wednesday night, of the past week, they had a house full out at their weekly prayer meeting. Bro. Frank Beason had much to say as to the success of Pleasant Grove Church. He remarked that they appreciated what God had done for them, and they loved their preacher and family, and, from the way some of the members of Pleasant Grove Church brought in their baskets such gifts as hams, cakes, sugar, rice, coffee, butter, meat, some handing in pieces of money as a token of their appreciation, we could but feel that God was with us. We have other churches on the work that are good to us. By the assistance of Dr. Cowart and his good wife and others, we are getting the parsonage and grounds in good shape."

Rev. W. W. Hurst, Bowerton circuit, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, Feb. 3: "On Dec. 29, last, we bade farewell to our friends at Percy's Creek station, Woodville district, and wended our way to this charge, feeling keenly the separation from old and tried friends; but I have found in this new field Christian men and women who are loyal to our Methodism, and who know how to devise liberal things for the support of their pastor and family. We arrived at this parsonage on the second day of January, and found my predecessor still holding the fort—not waiting for reinforcements, but plans all arranged for a retreat on the following day. A few days after our arrival the ladies of Barlow and vicinity gave us tokens of appreciation in the way of substantials not to be forgotten soon by this scribe and loved ones. I have visited the three appointments composing this charge, and find my people intelligent, liberal and generous, and more consecrated to God and his church than the average circuit of to-day. I am now devising plans for an advance movement on all the lines of church work, and the brethren have pledged me their support and co-operation in this greatly needed work. My time, since I came among this good people, has been almost solely occupied in visiting from house to house, in order to know my people and to become acquainted with their wants. Our Sunday-school at this place is a very interesting one, and one of the few where a large number of grown people attend, and take an active part in the lesson recitations. We have two Senior Quarterly classes, and the members composing these classes range in age from fifteen to seventy. It is very encouraging to see so many grown people in our Sunday-school, as it strongly indicates the type of piety which permeates the heart of our community. Mr. Editor, will you permit me, in this connection, to say something in reference to our Rehoboth High School? Prof. L. M. Cox, a graduate of the Southern University of Alabama, presides over the interests of this school, and is, doubtless, the right man in the right place. I know of no school of its character more thoroughly adapted for preparing young men and women for college. Being decidedly Christian, boys and girls are instructed in morals as well as science and literature. In addition to this, the school being remote from railroad towns, the boys are not in daily contact with the vices so common on these thoroughfares. Miss Anna Kendrick holds the reins over the female department, and is doing excellent work for the future womanhood of this country. We are toiling and praying for a year of revival power. Aid us in your prayers. Success to you, Doctor, and our good ADVOCATE."

THE JOY OF INCOMPLETENESS.

If all our life were one broad glare
  Of sunlight, clear, unclouded;
If all our path were smooth and fair,
  By no soft gloom enshrouded;
If all life's flowers were fully blown
  Without the sweet unfolding,
And happiness were rudely thrown
  On hands too weak for holding—
Should we not miss the twilight hours,
  The gentle hare and sadness
Should we not long for storms and showers
  To break the constant gladness

If none were sick and none were sad,
  What service could we render
I think if we were always glad,
  We scarcely could be tender.
Did our beloved never need
  Our patient ministration,
Earth would grow cold and miss, indeed,
  Its sweeter consolation.
If sorrow never claimed our heart,
  And every wish were granted,
Patience would die, and hope depart—
  Life would be disenchanted.

And yet in heaven is no more night,
  In heaven is no more sorrow:
Such unimagined new delight
  Fresh grace from pain will borrow.
As the poor seed that underground
  Seeks its true life above it,
Not knowing what will there be found
  When sunbeams kiss and love it,
So we in darkness upward grow,
  And look and long for heaven,
But can not picture it below
  Till more of light be given.

The Bow of Promise.

"I do set my bow in the cloud."—Gen. ix, 13.

The world never looks so beautiful as it does when the Summer shower is passing away, and the bow is set in the retiring cloud before the thunder ceases to be heard or the lightning to flash along the darkened sky. The most precious of all earthly blessings are those which are given in contrast with trouble and sorrow. We all need trial and conflict and darkness to make us look for light and long for peace. We are never so thankful for an hour of sleep as when it comes after a night of wakefulness and pain. It is hunger that gives healthful appetite for food. It is toil that prepares for rest. It is conflict that prepares the longing soul for peace. If we had no shadows, we could have no sun. Thank God for shadows as well as sunshine. When the cloud of trouble casts its gloom upon your path, look up and you will see the bow of promise bending over you. The great destiny of time and eternity turns upon obedience to the divine command, Look up. "Set your affections on things above."

A little boy playing in the streets came to the foot of a long ladder and looked up. He heard the sound of hammers and the voices of the workmen far up on the roof above him, and his childish curiosity impelled him to climb. He set his little foot on the lower round and his hand on the next, and then he pulled himself up slowly, hand over hand, round after round, until he was so high that a fall would be instant death; and yet he had not reached the top. Finally he grew tired and wished he had not begun to climb. He looked down to see how far he had come, and the great height made him giddy. He began to tremble and was fast losing his strength. Just then a man passing along the street at the foot of the ladder looked up and saw him terrified and trembling, and cried out: "My God! that boy is going to fall." The man meant no harm, but it was the worst thing he could say. His words and the frightened tone in which he spoke made the poor child much nearer falling than he was before. He grew more and more giddy; he thought the ladder swayed to and fro like trees bent by the storm. He thought the house and the whole street were rocking to and fro like ships on the sea. But all at once he heard another voice, loud, cheery and full of courage, from the roof of the house above him: "Boy, look up!" He did look up. Anybody would have done so, hearing such a voice as that? "All right now, come on." The boy was no longer giddy. He began to climb and soon reached the hand of a smiling friend.

There is many a weary climber standing on the step-ladder of life, high enough to make it fatal to fall, yet with much more climbing to do before he will reach a place of rest. He is so discouraged and disheartened, and he hears somebody say, "He will never make anything; he will never succeed; he will certainly fail." And yet he only needs to hear the kindly cheering voice which comes from above, "Look up." There is a strong helper bending down to take him by the hand. This is the word which kind Heaven sends down to the tempted and tried. Whether child or man—look up. Heaven is above; the pit is beneath. It is safe to climb. It is destruction to fail.

Oh (we), preachers that have received no purse nor pounding since Conference—faint-hearted climbers on the step-ladder of life—all above you is calm and steady when the earth reels beneath your feet. Look up, and keep climbing, and you will soon see a divine hand reaching over the battlements of heaven to help you to "call in the laborers and pay them their hire." God sets his bow high enough for all to see, and yet he brings it down to earth for all to touch and embrace. "Look up."

Loaded with Small Shot.

I met an intelligent lady from another charge, a few days ago, and, in answer to a direct question as to how her pastor was getting along with his work, she said: "He loaded his gun for last Sabbath with small shot; consequently, he did not kill anybody, but he slightly wounded quite a number of us." I have thought much of that statement, and the more I think the deeper the impression it makes. Some people seem to think they have not been gunning if there is not a corpse or two left round the altar. They must kill somebody, or else it is perfectly plain, from a scriptural standpoint, they are not doing their duty. But if somebody else goes a-gunning, loaded with large shot, and they are killed, they want somebody hung for it. Well, if anybody is killed, except in necessary self-defense, somebody ought to be hung; and, ecclesiastically, this is the usual result of killing people.

Some men do not seem to care whether they kill in self-defense or in cold blood. They go with their guns loaded with large shot all the time, and only shoot to kill. If they visit and preach for a brother, they must kill somebody; and as soon as they go to a new charge, they look up all the sick and afflicted of the congregation, and go to killing, and, when they have finished the job, they feel like killing all the pastors who preceded them for not having killed these people long ago. They call this a faithful administration of the discipline of the church.

Our Lord tells us, in Luke xiii, 6, 7, of a man who ordered the dresser of his vineyard to go a-gunning for a fig tree that was fruitless, and had been for three years. But the dresser thought he might do something more than had been done to make it bear, and asked for another year, which was granted. I do not know whether there was any fruit at the end of the fourth year, or not; but I do know that both the owner and the dresser thought it best not to cut the tree down until every expedient had been tried to make it a fruit-bearing tree. But some gunners after trees cut them down just to see them fall; and they will cut them down in a flower garden with as little regard to consequences as if they were growing in the wild forest.

Then, in Matt. xiii, 24-30, he gives an account of a lot of good servants who wanted to go a-gunning for some tares that were growing and bearing fruit among the wheat—the work of a mean midnight enemy. There was no doubt as to the character of these tares, for they were bearing fruit. Neither was there any difficulty in distinguishing the tares from the wheat, and these servants wanted to dispose of them on the spot; but the man said: "Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them." The servants saw but one thing, and had but one thought. They saw those wicked tares, and wanted to destroy them; but the master saw another thing, and had another thought. He saw the good wheat, and wanted to preserve it.

As a matter of fact, it is sometimes necessary to expel people from the church; and yet it is my opinion that such a necessity does not often arise. In a ministry of more than twenty years I have been forced to expel three persons from the church, and in these cases my action was so manifestly just that the parties confessed their error and came back to the church. I had rather preach a man's funeral than to turn him away from the church.

Yes, I have had dancing, drinking, swearing, theater and circus-going members to deal with; but I have found the gospel of the blessed Son of God in the church to be something more than a mere organization. I have found it to be a most wonderful organism, with a defensive power that is almost irresistible when brought in contact with the quickened conscience of man. In some the progression is sometimes tryingly slow; yet the coveted end will come in a large number of the worst cases if the pastor perseveres in earnest faith and prayer, and a loving presentation of the gospel.

A Bequest Not Lost.

Mr. Editor: Having recently published in your paper an article headed, "A Lost Bequest," which was copied with appreciation and comment in, at least, one other journal, I now offer a few suggestions as to a plan whereby bequests may not be lost. In most States of this Union the attempt to give away one's property after death is attended with more or less uncertainty as to results. In some States, as in Mississippi, the Constitution makes all donations to churches and public charities which are not executed before the death of the donor, null and void. In all States heirs-at-law have many advantages in contending for inheritances.

Mr. Tilden, of New York, most signally failed to secure his property to the charitable uses for which he designed it.

The only safe plan of bestowing charities is to give while you live. But the great objection to this is that most persons either need or wish to keep their property till they die. Yet, in spite of the saying that you can not eat your cake and have it, too, there is a plan whereby one may give away property and have it still, and, if need be, enjoy its fruits till the end of life.

There lives in the city of N— a lady who years ago, on carrying out the pious design of a deceased sister, deeded a valuable piece of property to the Methodist Church on condition that she should be paid a fixed annuity for life. The church has been greatly benefited by the use of the property, while she has received, perhaps, a greater income than she would done had she kept the property. In very many instances the trustees of charitable institutions would manage property more to the advantage of the owners than the owners themselves can do, and still have considerable revenues left for charity.

Our Church Extension Board are now agreeing to administer funds entrusted to them and pay annuities thereon when desired to do so. Thousands have been and will be entrusted to them which will not only aid in church extension during the lives of the donors, but will go on, after their deaths, building churches for future generations. In this way, many who must retain some income from their property during life may place it where it may be secured to such charities as they may design more largely to benefit after their deaths. Such an assignment of property during life would save a world of inconvenience, loss and litigation to the survivors who are interested in the property of the dying. Besides, it ought to be a great satisfaction to those who hope to have their good works live after them, to see those works begun and advancing while they themselves are still alive.

Christ's Witnesses.

The thought often presents itself to my mind that professed Christians of the present day are too reticent in the matter of telling to the world what sweet spiritual peace is to be found in believing. It is not enough for church members to live up to the ordinary requirements of discipline, and trust solely in their good behavior as a means of winning souls to Christ. They should tell to the world, in word as well as action, what joy and consolation they have found in accepting Christ as their Savior, and urge the unconverted about them to forsake their evil ways and join them in battling for the Master. It seems to be a prevalent idea among the laity that the preacher is to attend to this; that he is the sole medium in this great work of saving human souls. They seem to think that if they are in their pews on Sunday, and come up to the other requirements of the church, in a measure, there is nothing else for them to do. This is good as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough.

Let me advise those worthy brothers and sisters who are relying solely on the preacher to increase the membership of their churches, to wake up to a more active sense of their duties as church members. Get your Bibles and turn to St. John i, 41, 45: "He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the Messias; which is, being interpreted, the Christ. . . . Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found him of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph."

Now, brothers and sisters, if we have truly found Jesus, we should be as anxious to tell it to others as were Andrew and Philip of old.

A Criticism.

Mr. Editor: Your editorial on "Colportage Work" is timely and has the right ring. We hope you will follow up with some more on the same line. But please make it known that we have in our obscure Conference also a little colporter who is doing a little work with headquarters in the little town of Kosciusko, which is just a little way from the geographical center of the no-little State of Mississippi. Now, we would appreciate a little recognition along with other co-workers, inasmuch as we had a little to do with the initiation of this branch of our church work.

North Miss. Conference.

[An editor is a most unfortunate being! His lapses are "just perfectly awful." Even his commendations "cut gwine and comin'." He is expected to think of everybody and everything every time he takes up his pencil, and generally does it. But we missed it when we wrote the little article on "Colportage Work." How we came to forget Bro. Bachman and his work in North Mississippi Conference is one of the mysteries befogging the editorial mind just now. At any rate, if not too late, we say we have nothing but commendation for Bro. Bachman, and trust every preacher in his territory will forthwith send him a large order for work.]

Church Dedication at New Iberia.

Last Sunday, fifth instant, was a high day, a Galloway day, among the Iberians. The occasion was the dedication of the new Methodist Church there. Am not architect enough to describe this lovely little Christian temple, so here will only point you to it. It is said to be a beautiful blending of two orders into one harmonious whole. Was there ever a model, or did it drop out of the gifted preacher Parker's brain? Some one else will have to answer. It is an imposing substantial brick structure, and an ornament to the city. But it is its interior that gives its unique appearance and interest. The stage effect strikes in at once on entry. With the grand pipe organ concealed behind the usual stage curtains, the illusion would be complete from the raised seats. A little judicious fresco on the high vaulted dome would be in keeping with the two east and west memorial windows. But let us come back to the day. At eleven A. M. it was estimated that six hundred people were inside of a five hundred seat church. No report of the sermon is here intended. They tried that on Somerfield, and you know how it was. If Bishop Galloway was not at his best, no one knew it. His gathered fame on both sides of the sea was all brought home to us. His inspiration came from Psalms xxvi, 8, and all was forgotten by his hearers in his grand conception of his theme. The effect of churches on individual character, on communities and on nations ought to be securely telephoned up for coming generations. Now and then came the most tender, touching reminiscences growing out of his subject. From our lofty heights in following him he showed his skill on the heart-cords when in subdued cadence he brought it home to everyone that these inestimable church blessings cost money. And on this grand triumph, coming up through great tribulations, there still remained a debt of eighteen hundred dollars which stood in the way of its dedication. What he said and how he put it on those six hundred hearts was soon seen in the result. In fifteen minutes, said the watch, after the tellers started in, twenty-two hundred dollars were reported by the recording clerk, while at a distance his desk looked like a small national bank.

Then came the solemn, impressive dedication service. And then went up, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," in which the grand organ seemed itself inspired, as it almost thundered its deep vibrations and led the voice of song.

And this was New Iberia. This the church that was purified by fire! And this the son of the heavenly King who has been mainly the instrument of building this second beautiful little temple of worship.

The Gambling Evil.

Very few people outside of sporting fraternity realize what is involved in this matter of Winter racing, such as is now going on at Guttenberg and Gloucester. It means that all though these Winter days, with the thermometer often down at zero, now through snow and icy winds, now through mud and slush, the wretched brutes who figure as racers at these dens, and the equally wretched brutes who urge them on, are conducting what is called in some quarters the "royal sport" of horse-racing. On one of the severe days of last week the Guttenberg editor of Mail and Express, in his report of the proceedings at the track, said that the "jockeys suffered severely," and only one man, the "judge," was out to see the "finish." Can anyone imagine anything more ghastly than this in the name of "sport." In the name of God and humanity this thing ought to be stopped! If there is any strength in the Christian sentiment of these communities, if there is any power and effectiveness in the church of Christ as it exists here in these cities, surely it ought to be exercised in bringing to an end this accursed business!

A long and interesting article appeared in the Tribune of Jan. 16 on "The Pool-room Nuisance." The writer speaks of a "practical betting man" who advocates the introduction on race tracks of a new gambling device known as the "mutual register." This machine is worked by electricity, and by means of it the gambling business may be carried on with great facility and success. The betting man grows quite enthusiastic over the device. "By using a sufficient number of machines," he says, "it would be an easy matter to bet $1,000,000 on a race, if time were given to get it on. Machines could be arranged to suit the convenience of all classes of betters. There could be $1 machines for the small fry and $500 machines for such men as M. F. Dwyer, Pierre Lorillard and A. F. Walcott, and others could be graduated from $5 to $25." The Tribune writer, however, does not approve of the new departure, and he concludes his article as follows: "The writer can take you to a score of pool-rooms in this city and show you a hundred men who belong to the category of pool-room 'fiends.' The city is full of them. They abound. They begin as boys who bet their ten-cent pieces in combination with the ten-cent pieces of their comrades, and they go on till the passion becomes too strong to resist. No. It would not be in the line of the writer to approve such a plan as that advocated by the practical betting man. The main thing now is to do away with the betting temptation in the city, and to confine the evil to the race-track. Betting is bad enough anywhere, but if it is to go on, let it be confined. If it were not for the pool-rooms, Guttenburg could not keep its gates open. Nobody is going over there in such weather as has prevailed these ten days. But so long as there is betting in the city, and so long as the pool-rooms pay the track for the returns, just so long will the cesspool of racing be a profitable venture. Lord Beaconsfield was right: the turf is the greatest engine of national demoralization."

The Buffalo Express, which is a terror to evil-doers in that city, and has done most effective work in the crusade against gambling, in noticing the meeting held at Chickering Hall to protest against gambling on the races, makes this pertinent comment: "This is all very well. The Ives Act should be repealed and newspapers should not print tips. But the meeting did not strike at the mainstay of the evil, that giant monopoly, the Western Union Telegraph Company. As the Express recently showed, the Western Union charges each turf exchange $20 a day for each race track. There are six pool-rooms in Buffalo and four tracks are played here. Therefore, the Western Union derives a revenue of $480 a day from the Buffalo pool-rooms. There are 500 turf exchanges in the United States. This money is paid for use of wires and the reports of races which the Western Union procures by its own agents. There could be no pool-rooms if the Western Union Telegraph Company did not furnish them with the news of the races. It is a question whether the company does not exceed the terms of its charter when it undertakes to collect news. The doctrine of Ultra Vires could probably be invoked to stop the Western Union Telegraph Company from acting as a race course touter and reporter. At any rate, the Legislature could make a law that would cover the case completely. The National Anti-Gambling League, when it is formed, should bring its heaviest guns to bear on the telegraph monopoly which enables pool-rooms to exist."—Christian at Work.

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

Rev. James Porter and family have our sympathy in their much affliction.

The district parsonage at Durant is being improved by the building of additional rooms.

Rev. T. W. Lewis and wife and Rev. J. D. Newsom are on the sick list, all of whom, we hope, will soon be restored to health.

Oxford station paid in full the first quarterly installment of salary for presiding elder and pastor at the first quarterly meeting.

Rev. T. B. Malone was in Nashville, last week, looking after our Conference Minutes, which will be out ere these notes are read by the public.

Presiding elders and pastors, so far as this scribe knows, are in place and at work with cheerful spirits and sanguine expectations of a prosperous year. Financial support is not so good as we have known, but all seem possessed of the spirit of faith and hope.

Grenada Collegiate Institute is doing well. New pupils are coming in, and good work is being done by President Newell and his excellent faculty of teachers. Everything about the school has the air of Christian education. It deserves, and should have, a large patronage.

The colporter is doing both office and field service with gratifying success, considering bad weather and "hard times." Subscribers to the church papers are mostly renewing without much murmuring, and new ones are frequently taken. Good books are in constant demand. Nearly every day's mail brings orders for some.

Thursday—Wicked Devices Frustrated. (Psa. xxxiii, 10-22.)

Friday—Wise and Foolish Builders. (Matt. vii, 24-29.)

Saturday—Help Cometh from God. (Psa. xliv, 1-8.)

Sunday—Watch and Pray. (Eph. vi, 10-18.)

Introductory.

Time.—B. C. 444. A. M. 3560.

Places.—Jerusalem and vicinity.

Persons.—1. Nehemiah. 2. His enemies, the leaders of the conspiracy against him: Sanballat, the Horonite, a Moabite, who held some civil or military command in Samaria; Tobiah, the Ammonite, supposed to have been a slave in the Persian court, and through the favor of the king, to have been made governor of his people. Both he and Sanballat had become connected by marriage with influential Jewish families in Jerusalem, and were, on that account, more formidable adversaries of Nehemiah. Geshuu, the Arabian, probably the chieftain of some nomadic and predatory tribe, who would naturally oppose the re-establishment of the Jewish power.

EXPLANATORY.

I.—PRAYING AND WATCHING.

Ver. 9. "Nevertheless." Notwithstanding the conspiracy mentioned in verse 8. "We made our prayer unto our God and set a watch." They prayed as if entirely dependent upon God, and watched as if entirely dependent upon themselves. "The strongest confidence in the protection and favor of God does not preclude the use of any of the means of self-preservation and defense which his providence has put in our power." (Clark.)

Ver. 10. "Judah said." Through the representatives of the tribe. "The strength . . . is decayed." Fears within. By their excessive labor, and possibly by the weakening of their working force in the assignment of some of the workmen to guard duty, their strength was impaired. "Much rubbish." The accumulated rubbish of one hundred and forty years had to be cleared away before they could begin to build the wall.

Ver. 11. "Our adversaries said." Foes without. Their enemies planned to surprise them in the midst of their work.

Ver. 12. "The Jews which dwelt by them." The Jews who dwelt in the adjacent villages and knew of the conspiracy. "Ten times." Many times; time and again. The latter part of this verse is somewhat obscure; but the meaning seems to be that they warned Nehemiah of the danger, and urged the members of their families, who had gone to assist in the work on the walls, to leave the imperiled city and return to their homes.

II.—WATCHING AND WORKING.

Ver. 13. He stationed the guards at the low and exposed places, where there was especial liability to attack, and set them behind the walls, which served as a protection to them. They were distributed along the line in family groups, so that each man would be inspired to greater courage by the presence of these who were dear to him.

Ver. 14. "And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles." He personally examined the defenses, and cheered and encouraged the people with the assurance of the favor and help of "the great and terrible" God, appealing to them, in the name of their most sacred interests, to be fearless and valiant.

Ver. 15. "God brought their counsels to nought." Through the warnings of their friends, and their own watchfulness and courage, they were able to thwart the designs of their enemies; but to God's providential care their escape was properly attributed. "We returned all of us to the wall." For a while they had stood, armed and watching, now they had returned to the work.

Ver. 16. "From that time forth." In view of the dangers that threatened them, "one-half" of the workmen now stood guard, holding their own weapons and the weapons of "the other half," who continued the work of building up the walls. "Habergeons." Coats of mail. "The rulers were behind." Where they could best superintend the labor and, in case of an attack, direct the defense.

Vers. 17, 18. The meaning, probably, is that those who carried the materials to the builders literally held their weapons in one hand while they held their burdens with the other; but that the builders who needed both hands for their work, had their swords girded by their sides. The verses contain a graphic description of their watchfulness and determination.

III.—WORKING AND ORGANIZING.

Vers. 19, 20. "The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall." The inhabitants of the city were but few and the work extensive; they were scattered in family groups and were thus "far from (one) another," and it was necessary that they should have some preconcerted signal to call them together in case of an attack.

Ver. 21. "One-half" standing guard and holding the weapons while "the other half" worked, and, so alternating, they labored from early morning until "the stars appeared."

Practical Suggestions.

(1) Nehemiah was pre-eminently a man of prayer, and, consequently, a man of power. The accidental similarity between the words "prayer" and "power" is not more marked than their real connection as cause and effect.

(2) It is necessary to both watch and pray. (Ver. 9). (See also Mark xiv, 38.) Two travelers camped one evening at an oasis in a desert. One of them said: "I shall loose my camel and trust in God." "Nay," said the other; "I will tie my camel and trust in God."

(3) God's workers must not be hindered by the misgivings of the timid or discouraged. (Ver. 10.)

(4) We must clear away "much rubbish" before we can work for God. (Ver. 10.)

(5) Beware of secret foes. (Ver. 11.)

(6) Guard well the weak places. (Ver. 13.) (See also Heb. xii, 1.)

(7) With God's favor and help we must fear nothing. (Ver. 14.)

(8) Christian workers must sometimes be warriors. (Ver. 18.) (See also Eph. vi, 12.) The sword and trowel must both be used.

(9) A division of labor is needed. All men can not do the same thing. Some can bear burdens, some stand guard, some build.

Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

In Tulane Hall, Feb. 2, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children held its first anniversary, and we give our readers the address of its president, Rev. A. E. Clay, on that occasion:

There is a Grecian fable about a goddess who lived on the Island of Cypress, to the effect that wherever she walked straightway in her pathway sprang herbs and flowers, and the groves became musical with bird-song. With not the faintest spirit of egotism do I to-night rejoice that the progress of the S. P. C. C. through the year has left flowers and herbs and bird songs in the hearts and lives of many hundreds of little lives.

I believe that a greater interest has been awakened in behalf of the children of this State this year than in all the years of its history.

It is easy on an anniversary to drop into a reminiscent mood. I will not resist the mood.

One year ago—how short a space of time—and I stood almost alone. Here and there there was one who had faith in my intentions, and thought there would be no harm in allowing me to try. My brethren in the ministry, with one or two notable exceptions, stood aloof from me.

The secular papers thought I was a crank, and they did not wish to turn the handle. Some thought the society was to be a kind of appendix to the Methodist Church. Some, supposed to know, said there was no need for any such society. I was even waited upon by a committee of prominent gentlemen and told that a minister ought not to be at the head of such an association. The Christian papers of this city studiously refrained from saying anything about us and continues so to do. But I thank God the eagle eye of the secular press has long since seen the disinterestedness and practicability of our work, and to-day any of them, in our interest, will go beyond the bounds of ordinary courtesy.

For myself, let me say here what I have not yet said to any living creature. You who know me will allow me to say that this work has been the child of my brain and heart. Several times its burdens and duties, besides the care of my church and pastorate work, brought me very near to the waifless world. At one time last year, after several weeks' illness, I stood at the gate of the Celestial City. The choice was given to me then between life and death. Above me, all radiant in glory there stood my mother, a baby brother and two sisters and a great company of shining ones, and with sweet voices and beckoning hands they called me; but beneath me there were pleading faces and outstretched hands. I could hear the wailing of hunger-pinched children and the sighing of homeless ones, and I said: "Lord, I would rather continue this work of child redemption, much as I would like to rush into those dear arms which so often enfolded me in infancy." So I came back to work. It has been our aim, as far as possible, to take the father's and mother's place toward the children we have come in contact with. Some of the most affecting scenes we are called on to witness are in the homes recently desolated by death.

In one home we found four little ones. The mother had but just died in the Charity Hospital. We had to wake up the little wailings and break the news to them. Before two hours had passed we had housed the three girls and gotten the boy a private home.

In another home, after a protracted illness, the father died, leaving six small children, four of them about ready to die also. We were able to supply homes to two of these and minister to the necessities of the other sick ones, and soon saw all well and happy.

In another home, where there are four little ones and a mother, slowly wasting away with disease, we have been able to sustain them for months, and have good homes provided for the little ones when the mother shall have passed away.

Into quite a number of homes we have been able to enter, and, by our assurances to the dying ones that we would be father and mother to the living little ones, have taken the sting out of death. I think also of the transformations in life-surroundings and character we are causing nearly every day. I have seen some of these little ones, when some kind woman had unearthed the long hidden countenance, and was rewarded with seeing the lips pucker into ripe cherries, stoop to kiss them and find out the child did not know how to kiss.

Here is a pitiful little cripple. Her wan and ulcered face a prayer I could not resist. Out of her vile home we took her to cleanly surroundings and to medical treatment, and to-day the laughing eyes and rosy spots growing on her cheeks, with the satisfaction of knowing that her future is provided for, is compensation indeed.

We have now a sweet-faced, though sorrow-marked, little orphan sufferer of about seventeen years of age in the Charity Hospital. Three weeks ago she came into our hands from the northern part of the State, having suffered with a bruised foot for three years. She was the completest picture of abject woe I ever saw. It was found necessary to amputate the foot. She is now doing well. She can neither read nor write. What a future is now open to her if God spares her to us! A lady has already made her a member of the S. P. C. C. and will provide a mechanical foot for her. One of our principal educators in this city has promised her a business education, and I think I shall have no trouble to raise the money for her board for a year or two. Then I think the society will be able to say of this dear suffering child, in body, mind and soul, she has been transformed.

But I must not dwell on these scenes of our happiest and holiest work.

I personally have felt this year that our work in the direction of rescuing and healing these broken and bruised children was continuing the work our blessed Savior commenced in Judea: In the field where drunkenness holds sway we have met cruelties most appalling. The papers have exposed a dozen of these cases, where we rescued children from inhuman parents.

We have found them beaten, ruffed, cursed, tied with ropes, beaten with pieces of scantling, locked up without food, driven from home and shot at: babes fed on beer and whisky, children left to die alone, forced to beg or steal, and scores of other indignities, the recital of which would be too harrowing to your feeling.

Over 300 of the children we have been called to protect and help have been drunkards' children.

We are set for the defense of the homes of this State. Our work clusters about and is in the interest of the home. We have to meet and fight the enemies of the home. The modern temptations and the modern devil are against the home chiefly. Knowing the home to be the bulwark of the State, what wonder man's enemy and God's should bid for its overthrow. The serpent which met Eve now meets her grandchildren and encoils himself about the very cradles. All the batteries of evil, massive, manifold, united, are trained upon and pouring their deadly fires into the domestic fortress. We can not raise men who will be patriots or women who will be virtuous and brave without homes. Better let all other institutions crumble into dust and extinction than that the rooftree and the hearthstone of home be razed.

Now, while I claim that drunkenness is by far the greatest enemy to home, I have found in this city a band of home despoilers, chiefly the young men. They are assassins of honor and lyers-in-wait on virtue. By continued and hushed-up offenses they have grown bold and defiant. In their ferocity they resemble a pack of hungry wolves. No one has had the hardihood, not even fathers and mothers, to expose them. We have now got on their track with the dogs of the law, and if there is any justice on this side of heaven, then they shall go no longer unwhipped.

In the last three months we have had to look for more than twenty young girls decoyed from home, most of them, of comfort and peace, by some member of this satanic band. We have also, in the same time, taken from off the altars of the brazen and deceitful priestesses of the temples of the evil over thirty young girls under sixteen years of age. These altars are fed with victims, many of them, stolen from our city homes.

There was an old cottager in an old English manufacturing village, whose daughter, the only creature spared to him out of a large family, worked in the factory. Every night for years Alice had opened the cottage door to find her tea prepared by her father, and the kettle singing and puffing on the hob. To get to and from the factory Alice had to cross a ravine on a foot-log. One night of storm and rain and almost impenetrable darkness, the ravine turbulent and swollen, Alice in attempting to make the perilous journey stumbled, shrieked and fell headlong into the mad surge. Scores of her fellow-factory girls saw the fall and hurried down the stream. After many efforts she was dragged ashore bruised and mangled and lifeless. Tenderly and sadly they carried the limp creature to the waiting father. He was seated beside the fire as they entered, with the cat purring on his knee. The little round table was spread, and on the hearth the teapot was steaming away. Without turning, the partly deaf old man said: "Why, Alice, child, you're late to-night." Blanched and tearful the bearers advanced and laid their burden at his feet. "Ah! me." But in the springtime the grave of Alice was purple with violets, and roses swung their censers in the air, and the larks sang their morning song there, and old Richard's prayer ascended with the odor and music. "Ah! me," he would say; "but Alice was a bonnie lassie, and I shall soon be with her."

Sad, sad as is that picture, a pure light from heaven falls on the face of the dead, and hope gilds the future, and all is well.

But, I assure you, that in a score of cases this year I have heard the wild shriek and seen many a mother's face turn livid, and have listened to exclamations of despair over the loss of loved young daughters gone down into a wilder flood, and as to both worlds lost. No flower, no song of bird, no light, no hope over these dead, but unhurled children. Do you then wonder that our minds are made up to protect and defend the home, and that I speak plainly to you about these things?

I tell you that, as sure as Jehovah sits on the throne, the Louisiana Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children will thrust its spear through the venomous head of this deadliest of reptiles coiling to spring into the homes of this city.

Lastly, I wish to state that we are being supported entirely by membership fees, and need a very much larger constituency than we have to do successfully the work before us.

One phase of the work I call the attention of the city authorities to, that is: placing in homes the orphan and dependent ones. Every child we send to a home in the country saves this city quite a sum of money for a number of years. No child can be well supported on less than one hundred dollars a year; and we can place tomorrow, if we had them, ninety children in private homes—about fifty have already been placed in private homes—so that we may say that the city is relieved of about $5,000 expenditure this year, and probably the coming year we shall double the number of homes given.

As to our plans and purposes, I wish to say I am encouraged in the Lord our God and a few responsive and loyal helpers to go on.

We are growing daily. We shall soon be a mighty host. We want prudence to characterize all our actions. We must so conduct our work in every department of it as to be worthy of the confidence and co-operation of all classes. The future opens auspiciously. I rejoice that loving hands are sharing our labors in the interest of housing the waifs.

If this audience could have seen the pleading faces of ten children at one time yesterday, homeless, fatherless, almost friendless, I am sure you would have said we must have a shelter at once for the little ones.

To one and all of you I extend heartiest thanks, and ask a continuance of your prayers and means and energies.

I desire to commend most heartily our agent in St. Mary parish for the good work he has done for the society. The Hon. W. T. Brown is one of the busiest men in the parish. Besides his own business, he is a member of the police jury of the parish, and is in every good work in the interest of humanity. He has placed St. Mary ahead of all the other parishes in membership and in children rescued and found homes. He has taken three orphans from the society and has become a father to them. At his own expense he has made long journeys, and rescued several children from brutal parents. Only this week he is working in the interest of four children.

We have given homes to three little ones rescued by the Monroe branch, and to one rescued by the Lake Charles branch. Complete reports of all the work done by these different branches are not in to-night, but they will be published in the annual report.

What Bro. Clay says about the religious papers shows that he don't read them all very closely. We have noticed his work several times in our columns. Of course, we are not absorbed by it as he is. We are absorbed by our own work.—EDITOR.

"Conventionality."

Have you never had a clerical friend, a boon companion, jolly good fellow, who after dinner on a Saturday night in the library or smoking-room, was the centre of conversation, the merriest man, the best raconteur of you all? See how, over the latest joke or story, his eye lights up, his face beams, voice, hands, body, features, all seem unconsciously to lend their aid to the interpretations. Delsarte could at this moment teach him nothing. The climax reached, the merry shouts of his companions attest the power of his effort; or it may be that in a tender and reflective mood he unfolds some touching tale of sad experience among his flock, to the picturesque and pathetic strength of which the sympathetic murmurs and moistened lids of his hearers bear ample testimony. "But, oh, what a difference in the morning." With measured tread and solemn face he mounts the pulpit, drones out a hymn, which the author meant for a glad pæan of joy, as if it were a funeral dirge, then with hard, dry voice and stiff manner delivers his sermon for the day, the last word of which is greeted with a deep, if concealed, satisfaction. Why should this be so? It can not be that the preacher is indifferent, that he does not believe the great message that he is so badly giving. Where is the animation, the enthusiasm, the desire to please of a few hours before? All sacrificed to a stupid conventionality which greater, perhaps more devout, men nobly and properly put aside.—Godey's Magazine.

One Day at a Time.

"One day to a time! Seemin' to me that our heavenly Father have given us our life in days, because he sees that we can't manage no more than that to once. Lots o' people might get on very well, if they'd be content to take life like 'tis given; but they go wenderin' whatever they shall do next week, or whatever will happen to them next year; an' so they get frightened, an' think that 'tis no good their tryin'—not a bit. I can mind once when I was a little boy, helpin' mother to store away the apples. I put my arms round ever so many o' them, an' tried to bring them all. I managed for a step or two. Then out fell one, an' another, an' two or three more, till they was all rollin' over the floor. Mother laughed. 'Now, Dan'el,' says she, 'I'm goin' to teach you a lesson.' So she put my little hands quite tight round one. 'There,' said she, 'bring that an' then fetch another.' I've often thought about it when I've seen folks who might be doin' ever so much good, if they didn't try to do too much all at once. Don't go tryin' to put your arms round a year; an' don't go troublin' about next week. Wake up in the mornin', an' think like this: 'Here's another day come. Whatever I do, an' whatever I don't do, Lord, help me to do this—help me to live it to thee.'"—Daniel Quorm.

Mrs. Mary E. O'Fallon of Piqua, O., says the Physicians are Astonished, and look at her like one

Raised from the Dead

Long and Terrible Illness from Blood Poisoning

Completely Cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Mrs. Mary O'Fallon, a very intelligent lady of Piqua Ohio, was poisoned while assisting physicians at an autopsy 5 years ago, and soon terrible ulcers broke out on her head, arms, tongue and throat. Her hair all came out. She weighed but 78 lbs., and saw no prospect of help. At last she began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and at once improved; could soon get out of bed and walk. She says: "I became perfectly cured by and am now a well woman. I weigh 128 lbs., eat well and do the work for a large family. My case seems a wonderful recovery, and physicians look at me in astonishment, as almost like one raised from the dead." Be sure to get Hood's.

HOOD'S PILLS should be in every family medicine chest. Once used, always preferred.

Easy to Take

And prompt to cure, Ayer's Pills act on the intestines, not by stimulating, but by strengthening them. They promote the natural peristaltic motion of the bowels, without which there can be no regular, healthy operations. For the cure of constipation, biliousness, jaundice, vertigo, sick headache, indigestion, sour stomach, and drowsiness, are unsurpassed. They are equally beneficial in rheumatism, neuralgia, colds, chills, and fevers. Being purely vegetable, delicately sugar-coated, and quickly dissolved, they are admirably adapted for household use, as well as for travelers by land or sea. Ayer's Pills are in greater demand, the world over, than any other pill, and are recommended by the most eminent physicians.

Ayer's Pills

BRIEFS.

When the preacher preaches in such a way that, when the sermon is over, the people say, "Wasn't that a fine sermon?" he is beating the air. When he preaches and they say, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" he is doing real preaching.

The Epworth League work among the Methodist Churches, North, is progressing rapidly. At a recent meeting of the general officers in Chicago, the secretary's report showed 9,800 Epworth League chapters, with a membership of 650,000. In addition to this, there are 1,250 junior leagues.

That appears to be a good point made in Bro. Armstrong's article on "Temperance Missions" about holding temperance meetings in churches. Evidently there is much truth in the statement that the people you need most to reach do not go to the churches. We direct the attention of temperance workers to this phase of the subject.

There is many a man who is weak, feeble and helpless, whose great need is to know God. If he had this knowledge, his arm would have new strength, and his heart would feel new courage. If he had this knowledge, no fears could dismay him, no doubts disturb him. What wonders have been wrought by men who knew their God; what exploits have been performed, what victories have been achieved, what triumphs over sin and evil, over darkness and despair.—Western Carolina Advocate.

Early in the reign of Queen Victoria, some change in the Sunday laws of England was proposed, and the Parliament raised a commission to enquire as to the expediency of such changes. This commission took the testimony of medical men as to the utility of Sunday rest in repairing the waste of physical energy. The impression produced by this testimony was profound. All concurred in the opinion, fortified by experiment and experience, that the respite from toil one day in every seven, was essential to man and boast as a condition of the highest development. Other enquiries as to economics and the interests of manufacturers, operatives and of the people in general, led to the same conclusions. And for sixty years the laws, unchanged, have continued to bless a great people.—Bishop Coxe.

A call has been made by Gov. Fishback, of Arkansas, for a Southern Governor's Convention to meet in Richmond, Va., some time during the month of April. The object of the meeting is said to be a conference between the governors of all the Southern States on the subject of immigration and the development of agricultural and industrial resources of the South. The resources of our Southland have hardly been touched. That there are uncounted riches for the coming generation no one doubts, and the question presses on all sides, How to get at it? There is room for millions of people, and the better class of immigrants are welcome everywhere. If any plan can be devised by which a good class of people shall be turned toward our unoccupied lands, we shall see a development that will start progress which will be unequalled in any part of the world. We hope the convention will be a success.

Wanted—Men and Women.

There appear occasionally in the "want column" of the secular newspaper advertisements with headings like the above. These advertisers are very particular to describe the sort of men and women they desire to employ, and the kind of work they are expected to do, and are always careful to state that ample remuneration will be given for services rendered. And they generally have quite a number of applications, for there is scarcely ever a time when every man and every woman have employment. There are always some people "standing idle in the market-place."

We have been looking at the church and her work, and have come to the conclusion that the largeness of the work far exceeds the strength of those employed in carrying forward that work. There is great need of recruits in the ranks of the ministry. There are numberless places in our territory where the proclamation of the gospel is never made, and thousands of people in a day's journey of us who have never heard the "glad tidings of great joy, which are for all the people." This serious misfortune is not the fault of the present generation of preachers. They are doing all they can possibly do to supply this lack, but they can not subdivide themselves and go off in different directions to proclaim the truth to perishing men. The people seem to multiply faster than the preachers, and their spiritual necessities increase in a larger ratio than the cumulative power of all the wisdom and energy of the men sent by the church to supply them. Anyone who looks around him just for a little will easily see that we have not overstated the case. Just as it was in the days of the Master, so it is now. "The fields are white unto the harvest." The only difference between his time and the present is, that the fields are much larger and the harvest much whiter. We are warranted, then, in advertising for "more laborers" to harvest these broad and white fields.

Not only in the ministry are more laborers needed, but every branch of church work lags on account of the fewness of those who are engaged in it. It is simply appalling to stand on the outside and count the number of the persons who are really engaged in doing work to help forward the great cause of truth and righteousness. In every department, "the laborers are few," while the demands of the work are constantly growing. No matter where we look we see opportunities for work, and no one to seize the opportunities. From every side we hear the cry of human souls for help, and no helper is nigh. All around us are "children crying for the light," and not only children, but grown people, too, and no one to lead them out of the darkness. Mission work and rescue work in our cities, Sunday-school work everywhere, temperance work in every place, social reform work throughout the land, and every other work that can be done to elevate and save the people—all these today are in sorest need of a large re-enforcement of workers. Hence our warrant to advertise for men and women to enter these open doors and bring the light and hope and help and power of the gospel to the benighted and hopeless and helpless.

What sort of workers do we want? Ah! how important it is that the right kind of workers be engaged. All true progress depends upon the quality of the work done, and that depends upon the character of the worker. The work needed to be done to-day can not be done by anybody and everybody. Mistakes enough of that kind have been made by the church. She has too often sent forth workers with no qualification whatever except the fact that she authorized them to go. Church authorization is good and necessary, but it is not enough. If other qualifications are lacking, the work is sure to suffer. Too much of the time and energy of the church is expended in correcting the errors and over-ruling the mistakes of her workers.

We need, then, wise workers. It requires the deepest and broadest wisdom to teach the world God's thoughts. It takes men and women of light to bring gleams of heaven into the night of this world. It takes men and women full of the wisdom they learned at the Master's feet to bring the sons and daughters of ignorance to those feet. The successful worker is full of tact as well as love—fruitful in lawful expedients as well as transparent in character. The main object of Christian work is to win souls, and "he that winneth souls is wise."

We need true workers! They must be men and women loyal to their King in every circumstance, and true to their work under any adverse conditions. They must wear no servile yoke of fear—entertain no hope of sordid greed—cherish no sentiment of vanity or pride. They must see to it that every thought and sentiment, every purpose and desire, has the ring of solid gold.

We need strong workers! The world is prostrate under its burden of sin and woe, and only the strong can lift it up toward God. The foes of truth are sons of Anak, and only the giants of God can successfully wield the sword of the Spirit against them. Only strong arms can uphold God's standard and wave it in triumph over fields won from the retreating hosts of evil. It takes men and women strung with nerves of steel to withstand the wear and tear of rescuing the perishing millions of earth. We want men and women who can toil and toil, day in and day out, and find their rest and refreshment in their very toils. We want men and women strong enough to weep over the miseries of their fellows and to lift them "out of the depths."

We need brave workers! They must be men and women with deepest convictions of human need and of divine pity, and "possessed by the courage of those convictions." They must be brave enough to consider that a crown of thorns is a crown of glory; brave enough to lose self that truth may be the gainer; brave enough to go to every task with equal gladness, ever singing because they are in the employ of the love of the Infinite Father; brave enough to dare to do right even when it seems a vain thing; brave enough to "know no man after the flesh," but to consider all men as needing His wondrous grace, and themselves as the blessed channels through which it shall be communicated to them.

These be the men and women wanted to-day by the church to do her grand work. These be the qualities, the exercise of which the world stands in sore need to-day.

"The helpful power, the genial grace, the skill
Of hand and tongue and brain, the self-poised will,
The heart so broad it knows no far nor near,
Strong as the oak, yet gentle as a tear."

The wages paid these workers will be drawn from the exchequer of heaven, and will dower them with riches which eternity itself can never exhaust. "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars in the firmanent forever."

The church everywhere needs now to pray for this kind of laborers.

"Lord of the harvest, hear
Thy needy servants cry;
Answer our faith's effectual prayer,
And all our wants supply."

Making Talents.

The idea that generally obtains is, that a talent is something possessed, which qualifies its possessor to accomplish some certain purpose. And lazy people take advantage of this idea, when they don't want to work on certain lines, by disclaiming the possession of the talent requisite to do that work. Their excuse is framed in this way: "I have no talent for such work;" and, having said those few and easy words, they imagine themselves absolved from all obligation on that score. If these people would excuse themselves by that admission only once, it would not be so bad; but one excuse, so reasonable and easy, is followed by others, until the catalogue grows so voluminous that you wonder at the humility of the man who, by his own mouth, confesses that he is fitted for nothing on God's green earth. And yet, strange to say, these same people would raise very serious objection if anybody else should make the same excuse for them. There is a vast difference between, "I have no talent for such work," and, "You have no talent for such work." To keep on the good side of such persons, you must bring no such "railing accusation" against them, but let them "excuse themselves" and confess their utter unfitness.

But the question comes up: Is there any real ground for such an excuse? Is there any truth in it? We hardly think it will stand the search-light of Scripture. The idea that God should make a sane man or woman who has a talent for nothing impeaches the divine wisdom. We do not think that the good God ever made a useless thing. Moreover this oft-repeated excuse is a direct reflection on the goodness of God. It is simply saying that his work is a failure. God never fails in his work. It is man who fails to see the purpose of God, and then charges God foolishly with deficiencies which the man himself creates by his lack of co-operation with the divine plan.

Every man is here for an end, and God has endowed him with the capacity to receive the help necessary to enable him to accomplish that end. That capacity is not only his talent, but is a sufficient foundation upon which he can begin a work which will grow as he works. The parable of the talents teaches that talents may be acquired by the proper use of what has already been bestowed. If a man wants to do and will begin, his power to do will soon double. Diligence is the only condition required to enable anyone to meet his obligations to God and his fellow-men. With this in exercise, not only does his facility increase and his power grow, but the sphere of his influence expands. Then, as there is so much to do in this world, the obligation is upon everyone to make talents that he may largely help in the work of doing good.

Away, then, with the flimsy excuse: "I have no talents." It is untrue, and a true man or woman ought to be ashamed to offer it.

Right Away—Now.

Many of our ministers are in new fields and, we presume, are "settled down" by this time. Though they have come into new conditions and have new surroundings, they have also new opportunities and privileges, and right now is the time to enter heartily upon their great work. Though they are comparative strangers to their congregations, and though their people may be watching their movements with a good deal of curiosity, yet the present time affords the best opportunity for a vigorous push that they will have if they should stay even the full four years' term. In a new place and among a strange people we are sometimes too timid and let time pass without using it to the best advantage. Let the preachers remember that the people themselves are in their condition—that is, they have a new preacher. The whole status is changed, and now is the time for a new departure with both preacher and people. On this point we give our preachers a paragraph from a Methodist paper across the water:

How rarely is the fullest advantage taken of one powerful feature in the Methodist itinerancy? A good minister of Jesus Christ will be at his best during the last month, almost on the last day, of his ministry in a circuit. And yet there is a sense in which he never has more influence, of a certain quality, than during the first three months of his appointment. He has turned over a new leaf, has begun afresh, is painfully conscious of the mistakes and weaknesses of the past, and is anxious to do better in the future. The people in the circuit are everywhere in a condition of expectancy. They, too, have made a new beginning, and are quite ready to be shaken out of the old ruts and to set out on a new departure. Then, if ever, is the time when, with best effect, the minister may hold special services. But unfortunately a minister is often shy and reticent. He does not like to impose himself upon the people, or to take too much upon himself, and the people have a persuasion, which is as stupid as it is deep-rooted, that no revival is to be expected unless a "stranger" is brought in, as though God had not already sent them a stranger. For these or similar reasons, the most golden opportunity in the three years is allowed to pass unimproved.

We hope that our preachers will ponder this extract, and be moved thereby to put forth every energy and use all their tact and wisdom to forward the good work right away! Don't wait for the evangelist to come. You are the appointed evangelist for your work, and your people are expecting you to do the work. Begin then, right away—now!

Rev. George Newton.

MR. EDITOR: In a recent issue of your paper I noticed an article or rather communication reflecting upon the character of Rev. Geo. Newton (evangelist), of Kentucky.

I write you hastily and briefly this morning to say that the brother is well known in this part of the country, and known to be a true man and consecrated servant of God. Three ministers with whom I talked yesterday on the subject say they are well acquainted with him, and that his is a pure and useful life. I can, if necessary, secure you hundreds of names of good citizens in Kentucky who will testify to the character and good standing of the brother.

The public has noticed both in Louisiana and Missouri that I never defend myself from attacks made upon me by the press, and from other quarters; but while this is so, I take a sweet pleasure in defending others, and especially such a true and useful servant of God as is the Rev. George Newton.

Respectfully,

B. CARRADINE.

Millsaps College—Campus, Library, etc

The sessional work of our college moves on most satisfactorily. With the second half term we have had several new students, and everything betokens a year of great prosperity. Again, I can not refrain from assuring patrons and friends that we have a well-trained and most efficient faculty. They are ambitious to succeed in their profession and enthusiastic in efforts to build up the college.

Mr. Douglass, the landscape gardener of Vanderbilt University, is now here busily engaged in laying off our grounds and planting trees. In a few years we hope to have a campus equal in attractiveness to the "classic shade" of the Old World.

Our library has assumed form. The large and valuable collection of books has been arranged and catalogued. We have several pictures for the walls, and everything is ready but a carpet for the floor. That I wish some one would furnish at once. We have one unique collection—some shelves devoted to Mississippi authors. Already we are favored with about forty volumes, and desire to get a copy of every book written by a Mississippian—or one resident in the State at the time the volume was published. That list we wish to enlarge. Some now in the library are very rare. Will not our friends help in this matter? Any contribution to the library will be highly appreciated.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

NOTES.

"Great minds have wills, feeble ones have wishes!"

Washington City is said to be filling up with hungry office seekers. The scramble for office, when one administration closes and a new one begins, is something to set a philosophor to thinking about human nature.

There seem to be two classes of Christians in this world. One class lives as if religion was a matter of selfish enjoyment; the other class lives as if religion was a matter of helpful activity! To which of these classes do you belong?

It is said that an illustrated monthly magazine must reach a circulation of one hundred thousand copies before it pays for itself. After that point is reached it begins to make money. Is it any wonder that so many newspapers live at a "poor dying rate?" Isn't it a wonder that they live at all?

It is said that the directors of the World's Fair have decided that it is not necessary to open the Fair by praying for God's blessing. A great many people in this country think they can get along as well without praying as with it. In the end they will find a mistake which can not be remedied!

If the secular newspapers would exercise as much tact and put forth as much energy in hunting out and publishing the good things that are done in this world, as they display in spreading abroad a knowledge of the evil done, what a delightful change would be effected! "The days of heaven" would almost peep over the horizon of life.

The Christian's relation and conduct towards "them that are without" requires a great deal of heavenly wisdom. How best to win, and not repel—how to distinguish practically between needless offense, and necessary offense—necessary, that is, to awaken their conscience—how to be loyal and true to Christ our Master, and yet meek and loving toward them—are questions that call for a great deal of that wisdom which is from above, which is "first pure, then peaceable," etc. Lord, make us a help and blessing to all, a hinderance to none.—Southern Churchman.

The idea of religion without a church—"I saw no temple therein"—is anomalous enough, but the association of the blessed life with a city—the one place in the world from which heaven seems most far away—is something wholly new in religious thought. No other religion which has a heaven ever had a heaven like this. The Greek, if he looked forward at all, awaited the Elysian Fields; the Eastern sought Nirvana. All other heavens have been gardens, dreamlands—passivities more or less aimless. Even to the majority among ourselves heaven is a siesta and not a city. It remained for John to go straight to the other extreme and select the citadel of the world's fever, the ganglion of its unrest, the heart and focus of its most strenuous toil, as the framework for his ideal of the blessed life. The heaven of Christianity is different from all other heavens because the religion of Christianity is different from all other religions. Christianity is the religion of cities. It moves among real things. Its sphere is the street, the market-place, the working life of the world.—Prof. Drummond.

A member of the Minnesota Legislature has introduced a bill to make the manufacture and sale of hoop-skirts a misdemeanor! It is a shame to try to belittle the women in that way! A man don't know how far-reaching such things are. That poor ignorant law maker of Minnesota don't know that he may be striking a deadly blow at the expanding wings of some literary genius. If such a law had been on the statute book in the time of the great literary lights of the eighteenth century, one of Oliver Goldsmith's most celebrated lyrics would have been spoiled. With such a prohibition he could never have written of Madam Blaise:

At church in silks and satins new,
With hoop of monstrous size
She never slumbered in her pew,
But when she shut her eyes.

The Minnesota legislator ought to hide his head and weep for his temerity.

It is said that the quarantine prohibitions of last Summer against the landing of immigrants has reduced the total influx for 1892 by not less than 200,000 souls.

Bishop Galloway will have in the April Review a character sketch of Dr. Richard Abbey, of the Mississippi Conference. We are sure it will be an interesting paper.

A young preacher writes that on a recent Sunday he walked fifteen miles and preached to two congregations and felt no special harm! Are "the days of the fathers" coming back?

A man in Salem, Mass., has been cashier of a bank in that town sixty-seven years. In consequence of his long and faithful service, the directors have made him cashier emeritus.

The Lauderdale County Farmer's Alliance, by resolution, "recommend that all farmers, and especially those belonging to the Alliance, reduce the acreage in cotton this year 30 per cent."

Bro. Smith, of the East Texas Conference, passed through our city last Saturday en route to visit old friends in Mississippi. He served one year in the Mississippi Conference before he went to Texas.

Water Valley, Miss., is to have a canning factory. The machinery has been ordered, and several hundred acres in the vicinity will be planted in vegetables to supply the factory when in operation.

A brother, speaking to us of his preacher, said he was a good sort of preacher to have. "He could get along with money or without it. It didn't seem to make much difference." Clever preacher, that!

Dr. R. S. Storrs, who is one of the most eloquent and successful preachers in this country, gives this advice to preachers about making sermons: "Get yourself full of your subject, and then fire it off red-hot."

The inauguration of Mr. Cleveland, it is said, will exceed in civic display and in military pomp all other inaugurations. Great preparations are being made to start the new administration on the road to political glory.

A good sister away up in Tennessee writes: "The ADVOCATE is growing better all the time. It should be in the home of every Methodist." It ought to be in every Methodist family in Mississippi and Louisiana, we are sure.

The present strength of the Salvation Army in the United States is given as 461 corps, 68 outposts, 1,456 officers, 6 slum-posts, 3 rescue homes and one food and shelter depot. The Army's paper, the War Cry, has a circulation of 70,000.

A man in Copiah county, Miss., was convicted in three cases of selling liquor contrary to law; took his cases to the Supreme Court and has had them affirmed. The penalties aggregate $1,500 and eighteen months in the county jail.

Brother, sister, put in a half-day's earnest work during this month as an advocate for this ADVOCATE, won't you? It will do us good, do you good, and do the people good among whom you work. As a Christian, can you safely neglect to do good when such an opportunity is offered?

The Clapton Primitive Methodist Mission, in the east end of London, provides about 600 poor children a hot, nourishing breakfast free every day.

The spirit of Christ must be somewhere about that mission. He cooked a breakfast for the hungry ones himself.

The grand jury of Lauderdale county, Miss., won encomiums from press and people for its recent work. Our special friend, L. P. Brown, was foreman, and his co-workers passed a special commendatory resolution of his presidency, and the Daily News, of Meridian, speaks in complimentary terms of his report.

Dr. W. H. N. Magruder, of Baton Rouge, gave us an appreciated call last week. The Doctor has educated more boys than any man we know, and they all hold him in high estcem. Though past his threescore and ten, he looks young enough to educate another generation. He is now the successful superintendent of the Asylum for the Blind, a State institution located at Baton Rouge.

Catarrhal Deafness Cured.

AN OLD CASE SUCCESSFULLY TREATED.

The symptoms are: Roaring, cracking, buzzing in ears, with gradually increasing difficulty in hearing. If not cured, the hearing will be entirely destroyed. When the case has not already gone too far before the treatment is begun, Pe-ru-na will cure every case. It is only after the catarrh has destroyed portions of the middle ear that Pe-ru-na fails to cure.

Mr. Frederick Bierman, of McComb City, Miss., had chronic catarrh very badly for many years. The disease finally passed up the eustachian tube into the middle ear, and had almost destroyed his hearing. He has been taking Pe-ru-na but a short time, and his catarrh is very much better, and he hears again as well as anyone.

Notice.

The Orphan's Home Committee will meet in the pastor's study at Jackson, Miss., Wednesday, Feb. 22, at ten o'clock A. M.

This committee was created at the late session of the Mississippi Conference. Its duty is to consider the advisability of, and devise ways and means for establishing an asylum for our orphans.

It may be that there are those in our connection who have given this subject some thought and consideration. The committee will be glad to have all the help that can be given, and will appreciate and carefully consider any suggestions that may be offered.

From the Joint Board of Finance.

The attention of the ministers of the Mississippi Conference is called to the following, which was adopted at the session of the Conference held at Natchez:

We recommend the observance of "Veteran's Day," and appoint by the adoption of this report the first Sunday in March, and the Sundays following on circuits, to be observed as "Veteran's Day," and do hereby request that our preachers, on this day, or days, do take up their collection for Conference claimants, separate and apart from all other collections, and that they forward the amounts so collected to the Treasurer of the Joint Board.

The Board has been instructed to follow last year's plans. Quarterly payments will be made to our claimants. It was an improvement upon our old methods. We must take no backward step. Those to whom we have promised the money need it. They expect to receive it. We expect to pay it. And we remind you of the date, because you may possibly overlook it.

Another portion of the report is of special interest to those ministers who have claimants living within their charges: "We recommend the continuance of the quarterly reports, as prepared and used last year. No claimant is to be paid only upon receipt of his or her report."

New Orleans District Sunday-School Union.

There will be a meeting of the New Orleans District Sunday-school Union on Tuesday, Feb. 21, at 7:30 P. M., in the basement of the Carondelet Street Church. All superintendents and officers of our schools, together with the teachers, are considered members of the union. A full attendance is desired, as business of importance will be transacted.

Laird & Dominick.

We desire to call special attention to the advertisement of Rev. W. D. Dominick, the colporter appointed by the Mississippi Annual Conference to supply the people with religious books and periodicals. This is one of the most important institutions of our church. It should meet with the earnest support of each member of the church. Bro. Dominick has associated with him Bro. Laird, a layman many years, a Sunday-school superintendent, and wide awake as to the needs in this class of books, etc.

This firm, with its headquarters in Jackson, Miss., are ready to meet all demands in their line promptly and as cheap as can be bought anywhere. Their stock is ample and well selected. Let these brethren have your orders and influence.

HOME CIRCLE.

AT SET OF SUN.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

If we sit down at set of sun
And count the things that we have done,
And counting find
One self-denying act, one word
That eased the heart of him who heard,
One glance most kind
That fell like sunshine where it went,
Then we may count the day well spent.

But if through all the live-long day
We've eased no heart by yea or nay;
If through it all
We've done no thing that we can trace
That brought the sunshine to a face;
No act, most small,
That helped a soul and nothing cost,
Then count that day as worse than lost.

Dr. Arnold's Daily Prayer.

Dr. Arnold's daily prayer was as follows: "O, Lord, I have a busy world aronnd me; eye, ear and thought will be needed for all my work to be done in this busy world. Now, ere I enter on it I would commit eye, ear and thought to thee. Do thon bless them, and keep their work thine, that as through thy natural laws my heart beats and my blood flows without any thought of mine, so my spiritual life may hold on its course at these times, when my mind can not conspicuously turn to thee to commit each particular thought to thy service. Hear my prayer, for my dear Redeemer's sake. Amen."

A prayer like this, so evidently according to his will, we may be very confident God hears; and "if he hears us, we know that we have the petition that we desire of him." So, then, into the busiest life we may go, sure that we will honor him in the midst of its bustle and distraction, if only such a prayer as this rises to him out of a sincere heart. One need not be a recluse to be a consistent Christian.

The Savior prayed for his disciples, not that they should be taken out of the world, but that they might be kept from the evil. Eye, ear and thought are necessarily put to diligent service if a man or woman would be successful in business. Prayer and faith, without works, do not bring to pass any great results in the financial world, where works are of all possible. We are told to be "not slothful in business, serving the Lord," and "he becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand; but the hand of the diligent maketh rich." Nothing is farther from the kingdom of God and his righteousness "than the familicism which talks of trusting the Lord for daily bread, or any other good thing, without putting forth proper effort upon our own part as co-workers with him. And it is just as far from his kingdom and his righteousness to become absorbed in secular affairs in such a way as to exclude his principles from our actions and his Spirit from our hearts. It is perfectly practicable to take for our rule of daily living these words of St. Paul: "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus;" or these: "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Of course, it is practicable. We are sent into this world with one end in view, "to glorify God and enjoy him forever." But we are material beings as well as spiritual, and while we live in the flesh we have necessarily to deal with material and fleshly things. There must be, therefore, some way to make our secular life not only no hindrance to the higher and spiritual, but to make it really become a part of the spiritual—that is, we may serve God in "one body and in one spirit, which are his." This beautiful and comprehensive prayer tells us how it can be done. If eye, ear and thought are fully committed to God, his blessing asked upon them so that their work may be kept his own; that as by natural law the heart beats and the blood flows without any thought of ours, so the spiritual life may hold on its course even when the busy mind can not commit each particular thought to his service, he will surely answer the prayer and keep that which we thus commit to him, and we will know, even amid the world's tumult and toil, the blessedness of the life hid with Christ in God.—New York Advocate.

"A Bond."

A devoted family of the Society of Friends was deeply afflicted. They had lost their property, and were left almost penniless. The wife was sad indeed, and almost ready to despair; but the dear old man was cheerful. The wife was almost ready to "curse God, and die." She was astonished at the coolness with which her husband met his lot; so she asked him one day:

"Husband, how is it that you bear this trouble so well? It almost crushes me to the earth."

"Why, wife, we are not quite so bad as you imagine. We have one bond left which we can live upon."

"Why, husband, what bond do you mean? I thought all was lost."

"Oh, no! Here is one bond, and I will read it to you. It is in the old family Bible, and reads as follows: 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.'"

His wife inquired, "Do you call that a bond?"

"Yes," he replied; "it is the Word of God, and can not fail."

Dear reader, the common trials of life will come upon you, and you will have sorrow upon sorrow, and you will need some strong arm to lean upon, some refuge to fly to, some bond which will do to live upon. Now is the time to secure it; now is the time to live so near to God that all will be well in the deepest sorrow.

But I am writing to some who are in trouble already, and they need help now. Then take the Quaker's bond: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." God's promises are always "on demand," and he will be with you in six troubles, and in the seventh he will not forsake you.—Zion's Watchman.

Nature bids me love myself, and hate all that hurt me; reason bids me love my friends, and hate those that envy me; religion bids me love all and hate none. Nature showeth care, reason wit, religion love. Nature may induce me, reason persuade me, but religion shall rule me. I will hearken to nature in much, to reason in more, to religion in all.—Warwick

Give Attention to Reading.

That was what Paul advised Timothy, and if we might get the ears of the hundreds of young men now in our theological seminaries, that would be our charge to them. What a man is depends largely upon what he reads, and the careless student is as likely to be ruined as the indolent one. The young theologian who devotes all his leisure to Herbert Spencer makes as serious a mistake as he who devotes his attention to the war cry of the Salvation Army; and a man must have absorbed a good library before he can get the best out of a good daily.

The tendency of the day is not to "read everything," as some would say they do, but to read "anything," which is quite another matter. A reader possesses just so much time, and if he squanders it upon trifles he can not expend it upon necessities. The best of fiction no doubt has a homiletic value, but one can not master all of Dickens and Thackeray and George Eliot, and master Gibbon, Stanley and Edersheim too, in the first year.

No man can ever become a force in the thinking world who does not read books. Books form the substratum for the intelligent comprehension of periodical literature. Years ago we were talking with one of the best-informed of the Mormon hierarchy who had not a very high opinion of his so-called prophet, Brigham Young. "I have known Brigham Young intimately as a member of his ecclesiastical household for the past fifteen years," said this man to us, "and I know that in all that time he has not read a half-dozen books." That was measuring by an infallible standard. In the treatment of great educational, religious and social questions most of our talkers and many of our writers are mere empirics; while as a matter of fact the questions which agitate Church and State to-day have a history, to know which is essential to their comprehension.

Then, too, it is only the reader who gives attendance to reading that reads with avidity and profit. Some of the busiest men in the market and the church are the greatest readers. We know people who can take but a single weekly and one monthly, because they "have no time to read even what they do take," while others whose lives are no less filled with industries devour and digest half a dozen of each as rapidly as they appear. The amount of reading which a person can absorb and assimilate depends not in the least upon the time at his disposal, but upon his past habits and present fitness for the task. Some of the busiest pastors we know will read on an average 3,000 to 4,000 pages of standard works a year, and at the same time get the best out of 20 to 30 periodicals as they come out. It is only attention to reading as a habit and a duty that enables a man to know its possibilities and reap its benefits.—Interior.

Heaven.

No one description of heaven, even though it be an inspired description, could satisfy all minds alike, or be to all an equally delightful anticipation. To speak of it as an enclosed city, with streets of gold and gates of pearl, does not meet all the wants of a mind that has been shut up for long years in a busy city, where gold and pearls have failed of giving comfort or cheer. Even though music be made a chief attraction in heaven's joys, many a soul would confess to aching that no sweet sounds could lull. The best description of heaven is only a suggestion, and different natures and different needs call for different suggestions. Robert Hall, who suffered for years with acute bodily pain, said to William Wilberforce, "My chief conception of heaven is rest." "Mine," responded Wilberforce, "is love—love to God, and love to every bright and holy inhabitant of that glorious place." Wilberforce enjoyed life, and realized what love meant; but even his conception of heaven would not suffice for every soul; for there are those whose experiences forbid their appreciation of abstract love; their longings are yet in the lower material realm, and are but negative at the best. A poor German woman lay dying in a garret after a long struggle with poverty and suffering through the intemperance of her husband. As the hope of heaven was held before her, her face lighted up, and she whispered feebly: "No want bread there. No drink there." To her mind, heaven was simply a place where there was no rum, and where none need go hungry. "Don't nobody knock anybody about there? Aren't the children ever whipped in heaven?" asked a little boy in a mission-school; and when he was told that he was justified in his brightest anticipations, he added: "Oh! isn't it nice? I do hope I shall go there." The one thought of heaven for every soul is, "I shall be satisfied." And heaven is begun in every heart, when Jesus Christ is realized as the love and the life of that heart.—Sunday-School Times.

Don't Let the Girls Grow Old Too Soon.

Every girl should be a school-girl until she is as well educated as her brothers ought to be. The higher education of women has come to be a necessity among good people. We shall not finish off our daughters and put them on the matrimonial market at eighteen. They are to be young women well equipped for life. They are to have their minds so stored with useful knowledge, inspiring hopes and lofty purposes, that they will have no time for flirting with young men who make "lovering" a profession. Let us try, in the rearing of our daughters, to hasten the time when young women shall be kindly courteous to all men, but shall trifle with none, and marriage shall be entered into from choice, and not as a matter of course; then when to each there comes one whose heart speaks to her heart, whose purposes are her purposes, and whose habits in life are such as she would have her own sons pattern after, she will enter into a marriage such as no divorce court will ever be called upon to annul, for what God hath joined together no man can put asunder.—Housekeepers' Weekly.

A Bank Account.

It would be a good plan if every child old enough to read and write were taught to keep a bank account, giving his father his little hoard to keep, and opening a regular account with him. The child should have his small bank-book, in which his father might enter all moneys that he receives from him, and which should be balanced from time to time like an ordinary bank-book. When he wants money, he should draw a regular check on his father, and when his book is balanced, he should receive his vouchers in due form. Besides this, he should keep an account book of private expenditures. In this way he would acquire practical knowledge of how to take care of money, and of the value of it, and would learn business-like habits which would stand him in good stead in after life.—Selected.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

HEAVEN.

BY WILLIS BOYD ALLEN.

The lesson hour was nearly past
When I asked of my scholers seven,
"Now tell me, each one, please, in turn,
What sort of a place is heaven."

"Oh, meadows, flowers and lovely trees!"
Cried poor little North Street Kitty;
While Dorothy, fresh from country lanes,
Was sure 'twas "a great big city."

Bessy, it seemed, had never thought
Of the home beyond the river;
She simply took each perfect gift,
And trusted like loving Giver.

Then up spoke Edith, tall and fair—
Her voice was clear and ringing,
And led in the Easter anthem choir—
"In heaven they're always singing!"

To Esther, clad in richest furs,
'Twas a place for "outdoor playing;"
But Bridget drew her thin shawl close,
For "warmth and food" she was praying.

The desk-bell rang. But one child left,
My sober, thoughtful Florry:
"Why, heaven just seems to me a place—
A place—where you're never sorry!"

Nails.

You see, dear children, we are still talking about some of the little things that are so useful in our every day lives. Probably we do not use as many nails ourselves as we do pins and matches, but just think how we are surrounded by them on all sides, only they are one of the useful little things that must always be out of sight. After a house is built the painter goes around and covers all the little holes where the nail heads show before he begins to paint. If we put down a carpet we must drive the tacks in where they show least. Nevertheless we could not get along very well without tacks and nails. One night a few weeks ago our barn burned down, and as soon as the ashes were cool enough for me to walk around in, I was perfectly astonished at the number of nails lying around, hundreds of them. Every vestige of the place was wiped away by the terrible flames, but the little nails lay scattered thick upon the ground seemingly as good as ever. Years ago nails, like pins, were all made by hand. In England, particularly in the neighborhood of Birmingham, it was no unusual thing to see little smithies scattered thickly over the country, for some 50,000 men, women and children earned their living at making nails, the fathers and mothers hammering out the red hot iron into nails and the children blowing the great bellows to heat the forge. Nowadays our wonderful American machinery has done away with all that kind of thing, though there are still some nail makers scattered through England. There are nails which can not be made as well by machinery as by hand. In fact all hand-made nails are really better than those made by machinery, especially horseshoe nails. The machine nails are cut from a sheet of cold metal, while those made by hand have more firmness and elasticity, for although the sheets of metal have been welded and compressed by great strain power, yet nothing seems to produce as good an effect upon the iron as the rapid heavy blows upon the red hot metal. But the machine nails are cheaper and "do very well," so the old smithies and forges are growing fewer every day. I have not told you yet how nails are made, and it is so very simple an affair that I think the smallest of you can understand it. Have you ever visited the kitchen and seen cookies or biscuit cut out with a cutter? the sharp edges cutting cleanly through the dough in just the right shape. Well, the big nail cutter comes down on the sheet of metal and cuts it into little strips just the size of a nail, then they drop straight into "grips" with the end sticking out a little. Now a big heading-die comes down and forms it into a head, it is then shoved along to make room for another, feeding itself at the rate of about 1,000 spasmodes (small nails used by shoemakers) per minute, or the larger and better headed nails at the rate of about 70 to 100 a minute. Do you wonder, children, that nails are comparatively cheap nowadays? I must not take up any more time to-day, but next week we will talk about something that found its way into Europe as long ago as the sixteenth century. Unlike some of our friends, it is with us as often in fair as rainy weather, and costs anywhere from 25 cents to $25, and is of every variety under the sun. Can you guess, children, what our next talk will be about?—Aunt Catharine, in Christian at Work.

A Child's Heart.

A curious looking old woman having a bundle in her hand, and walking with a painful effort, sat down on a curbstone to rest. A group of three little ones, the oldest about nine, stopped in front of the old woman, saying never a word, but watching her face. She smiled. Suddenly the smile faded, and a corner of the old calico apron went up to wipe away a tear. Then the oldest asked: "Are you sorry because you haven't got any children?"

"I—I had children once, but they are all dead," whispered the woman, a sob in her throat.

"I'm sorry," said the little girl, as her chin quivered. "I'd give you one of my little brothers, but I haven't got but two, and I don't believe I'd like to spare one."

"God bless you, child—bless you forever," sobbed the old woman, and for a minute her face was buried in her apron.

"But I'll tell you what I'll do," seriously continued the child. "You may kiss us all once, and if little Ben isn't afraid, you may kiss him four times, for he is just as sweet as candy."

Pedestrians who saw three well-dressed children put their arms around that strange old woman's neck and kiss her were greatly puzzled. They didn't know the hearts of children. —Hunsy.

This life is a state of probation and exercise like to that (which prefigured and represented it) of God's people in the wilderness, wherein God leedeth us through many difficulties and hazards, in many wants and hardships, to humble and prove us, in order to the fitting us for another more happy state.—Barrow.

Measuring Time.

The oldest invention for measuring time which history records was the water-clock or clepsydra. Among the ancient Egyptians various modifications of the water-clock were in use. One contrivance was extremely simple, consisting of a glass cylinder graduated into twelve equal parts and having at the bottom an opening through which the water escaped in twelve hours.

The gnomon or sun-dial was invented in Egypt 556 B. C., and the hour-glass also owes its origin to the same country. In Rome the day was divided into hours 256 B. C., at which epoch a sun-dial was erected in the temple of Quirinus, and public criers called the hours through the various streets. The clepsydra was introduced from Egypt about 158 B. C., and toothed wheels were added some eighteen years later.

In the thirteenth century a Saracen mechanic constructed a clock so superior to any before produced that it became famous throughout Europe. About 1326 an abbot of St. Albans, in England, invented a noteworthy clock, and some forty years later a clock that struck the hours was set up in Westminster Abbey.

In 1647 a distinguished mathematician of Holland, named Huyghens, astonished the world by producing a clock with a pendulum, a conception which speedily revolutionized the whole theory of clock construction. In the seventeenth century pendulum clocks were the rule, not the exception, and, as they were now set on mantels or brackets, the backs were no longer ornamented, as had been the case when they were kept as the principal ornaments for tables.

Tall pendulum clocks then came into use, and at intervals the taste has been revived, as we see in our own era.

Tennyson In Youth.

Alfred Tennyson began his habit of poetic expression as a very young child. When he was five years old he exclaimed one day, as a breeze swept through the rectory garden:

"I hear a voice that's speaking in the wind."

His first verses were written on a slate which his brother Charles had put into his hand when the elders were all going to church, and the child was to be left alone.

Charles gave him the flowers of the garden for a subject, and when he came back little Alfred gave him the slate covered with carefully written lines of blank verse.

"Yes, you can write," said Charles, as he glanced over the verse; and one can fancy the little poet's delight at such commendation.

There is another story to the effect that his grandfather, some time later, asked him to write an elegy on his grandmother, who had recently died, and he put ten shillings into his hand on the completion of the "job," saying:

"There, that is the first money you have ever earned by your poetry, and, take my word for it, it will be the last!"

There is a tradition that Tennyson's first poems were published at the instigation of his father's coachman.

Alfred, when a youth, was seized by a longing to visit some of the old Lincolnshire churches, but "the eternal want of pence" made the tour impossible. By some means this old servant got wind of the lad's disappointment, and burst out, after some reflection:

"Why, Master Alfred, you are always writing poetry! Why don't you sell it?"

The young poet was pleased and excited by the idea; he consulted Charles, and soon after appeared the "Poems by Two Brothers," for which they obtained twenty pounds.—Christian Intelligencer.

Young Workers and Fighters.

Rev. J. P. Gledstone, in a paper in The Quiver on this subject, says:

The fact which I should like this paper to impress on the mind of any young man or woman is this: that when God has a great work to be done which will last through a generation, he mostly chooses young men and women to do it. When he opens a long and decisive battle with any evil, he calls young men and women to his standard to fight for him. There is a verse in the seventy-first Psalm—the seventeenth—written by an old man whose work is nearly past and over, which is suggestive of this divine method: "O God, thou hast taught me from my youth, and hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works." He even goes on to show that the fire of his early zeal is not extinct, for though he is "old and grey-headed," he entreats God to remain with him and enable him to bear a testimony to the generation that is springing up around him.

Young men should dream dreams of beneficent labors to be undertaken, and old men should have a testimony to bear to God's faithfulness all their life long. David, when he had served his own generation, according to the will of God, fell on sleep. You can not serve the generations that are gone; you ought to serve your own generation; and you will serve the generations to come by doing your utmost for the men and women, the boys and girls of your own times. He bequeathes the most to the future who achieves the most in the present. . . . Ought not the prayer of each young person to be: "O God, show me what battle thou wouldst have me fight, what work thou wouldst have me do?"

SAVE ALL THE BITS.—I remember a busy man who had very little time for reading or study, but whose mind was a perfect storehouse of information on almost every subject. "How does it happen that you know so much more than the rest of us?" I asked him one day.

"Oh," said he, "I never had time to lay in a regular stock of learning, so I save all the bits that come in my way, and they count up a good deal in the course of a year."

Save up the bits, boys and girls; don't let anything worth knowing escape your eyes and ears. The little floating seeds of thought that go sailing past you, like thistle-down, may prove as valuable as the green fields that are more carefully sown.

Two little children recently went to church alone in Westfield. They became tired during the long sermon, and the older one, supposing that school rules held good in church, led his sister up in front of the preacher, and said, "Please, sir, may we go home?" He said, "Yes," and they soberly walked out.

ARSH—Died, at Lake Charles, La., Dec. 26, 2, OTIS M. MARSH, aged seventy-one years. . Marsh was born at Hartland, Vt. Most of boyhood days were passed at Woodstock, As a civil engineer he was employed in rly all the States in the Union. In the nfederate Army he was captain of Company n Speight's Battalion of Texas Infantry, d participated in the memorable engageot and Confederate victory at Sabine Pass. on after the war he moved from Texas, with family, to the southeastern portion of St. ndry, now Acadia parish, La., and from ere to Lake Charles, La., in 1876, where he ided until his death.

He was soundly converted at the early age of n years, and from that time until his death ained his church membership, first in the rthern Methodist Church, and then in the E. Church, South. Without being offensely sectarian, Bro. Marsh was always a proounced Methodist, and filled, in the M. E. urch, South, with ability and exceptional efulness, all its official positions below that pastor. He was especially devoted to Sunday-school work, and was superintendent of e Lake Charles M. E. Church, South, Sundayhool, on Broad Street, from its organization, early seventeen years ago, until last Fall, hen his failing health compelled him to decline a re-election.

lo s quiet, unobtrusive way, and by the rce of example, Bro. Marsh wielded a powerl influence for good, and died in possession many letters, written to him by young men om various States, thanking him for leading em in the way of life eternal. In camp life, en off duty, he was constantly enlisting soiers of the cross, and under his leadership rayer meetings and religious song services ere regular features of his army life. During e last years of his life here diseases of the roat and lungs caused him loss of voice and reat suffering, and during the same period eath robbed his family circle of some of its holcest jewels; but he never murmured, and was evident that these afflictions were orking out for him a far more exceeding and ternal weight of glory. When the summons ame, though suddenly, he entered into rest inlessly and peacefully.

His funeral services were attended by a very rge concourse of our citizens, including Calateu Camp of Confederate Veterans and civic ocieties. He leaves a widow and six children, l members of the church. A Christian solier, a devoted husband and father, and an upright citizen, has gone to his reward, and his orks do follow him. A FRIEND.

TURNAGE—LANIZA ELLEN, companion of A. Turnage, daughter of J. R. and N. E. Rulock, born Aug. 10, 1852; died Dec. 31, 1892; arried to A. J. Turnage, Sept. 3, 1868, by ames Michael, J. P. She joined the M. E. hurch, South, September, 1869, at a meeting eld by Rev. H. P. Lewis, at Santee.

There was given unto her eleven children—loe living. Truly it may be said of her, "She ath done what she could." In the church he kept every vow faithfully; no one was oved and admired more in Bethel Church han she. As a mother, she was that in the ruest sense of the word, mindful indeed of the evelopment of the body—the temple, but ore so of the dweller in the temple, teaching er children to pray in public around the lamy altar, providing them with religious literaire. She could easily be detected as being of hrist, for she was patient, gentle, long-sufferng, full of charity. Possessing a remarkable idgment, her husband consulted her in very undertaking. She paid as she prayed, ved as she rejoiced; there was no contradiction in her life. In all her heavinesses she rejoiced in God. After losing two of her sons, he was often heard to say, "I am glad that I e not have to live here always." Dead, a reacher's friend, a lover of the church, a devoted companion, a fond mother, has gone to er reward, to live with God, the holy angels nd with Jodie and Young. M. L. WHITE.

SIMMONS—The Ladies' Aid Society of the ethodist Church, of Magnolia, Miss., adopted he following resolutions regarding the death f Sister MOLLIE H. SIMMONS:

Whereas, God, in his providence, has seen it to call from labor to rest our sister, comade and co-worker, as an Aid Society we ourn her loss, and bow in humble submission the will of him who is too wise to err and oo good to be unkind; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved ister we have met with an irreparable loss. A rue Christian indeed, one whose kind and geial presence was ever welcome, for in character and example she possessed those virtues hich should not only be admired, but imated. Her bright manners made her life mong us like a ray of sunshine. She was a rue and noble woman: God's grandest work.

Resolved, That we tender our deepest, heartelt sympathy to the bereaved husband and amily, not forgetting the little children she eft as a token of love to her dear ones. May ou, dear friends, watch and guide their little eet in the footsteps of Jesus, until they reach hat river across whose water "mama" waits o meet them.

Resolved, That this tribute of love and reect be spread upon the minutes of the Aid ciety, a copy furnished the afflicted husband nd family, and a copy sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Magnolia Gazette for publication. MRS. A. GATLIN, For Committee.

Magnolia, Miss.

GATES—SAM. SWITZER GATES, the subject of this short sketch, was born March 26, 1864, and departed this life April 18, 1892, aged twenty-eight years and twenty-three days. In 1885 he was happily married to Miss Mamie Newsum, who, with three little children, mourn his untimely loss. Having been a Christian from childhood, and brought up by religious parents, it is useless to say his death was triumphant. Though suffering intensely through his entire illness, which was but four days, he would converse upon the subject of his departure as calmly as if he had been preparing for a journey. He was rational almost to the last, and told his heart-broken wife there was not a fear, not a cloud between him and his God; at the same time saying: "I know you will raise our little children right, and I will be waiting for you in heaven. It seems hard for me to leave you, but always act as you think best, and God will take care of you. I have not a fear, for I have always tried to live to be ready for this hour, and if it is God's will to take me it is my will to go."

He will be missed in the community, in the church which he loved and served so faithfully, having been steward for two years; but nowhere will he be missed as in his own home, where he was the light, the guiding star. Though he has gone from our sight, and no voice comes to us from the other side, we know we shall meet again, for we believe God who gave us love that can not die will give us a heaven where there is no death and parting will be no more. Religion with him was not a mere profession, but a living reality. There was nothing ignoble or sordid in the make-up of his character. His manly bearing in all the departments of life constantly developed the fact that fidelity to principle was his motto. While he was not demonstrative, yet at the same time his plans and purposes were as firm and solid as granite rock. It mattered not where you found him—in the social circle, in the quiet precincts of his own happy home, or filling his place in the church of God—he was always the same, devoted to the noblest principles that swell the human heart. He was singularly warm in his home affections. No mother ever had a more dutiful son, no wife a more loyal and loving husband, no children a more indulgent and affectionate father. Now that his visible presence is removed from us, those of us who loved him so well feel as though a part of our own being had been suddenly torn away and carried to heaven.

"We can not say, and will not say
That he is dead—he is just away!"

But the sweet memory of what he was will be a comfort to us. He will be transformed into a spiritual presence, which will be stronger, dearer than any earthly presence can be. Life is dark in this time of bereavement, nothing looks bright; yet we know that his failing asleep in Jesus was only to awaken in a brighter morning, and we will meet him in that life where death will come no more, and the tears we shed will be tears of joy and not of sorrow. M. A. G.

HUTCHISON Mrs. MATILDA (nee Richbourg) HUTCHISON was born March 29, 1841, in Pike county, Ala.; was a daughter of Mrs. and Dr. John S. Richbourg. Sister Hutchison was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Bethel, Ala., in 1858. In 1866 she married D. H. L. Hutchison, who still survives her. Their union was blessed with eight children, all of whom are still alive. She was taken with pneumonia, Dec. 21, and died Dec. 31, 1892. Thus suddenly she passed from the cares of time to her reward in heaven.

It was never my privilege to know Sister Hutchison, but she left a bright record behind to the effect that he to whom she had given her life and service was able to deliver her in the hour of death. May her bereaved husband and children follow her as she followed Christ! L. M. LIPSCOMB.

You would like the lamp-chimneys that do not amuse themselves by popping at inconvenient times, wouldn't you?

A chimney ought not to break any more than a tumbler. A tumbler breaks when it tumbles.

The Latest Thing in Calendars.

In striking contrast to the numerous fanciful Calendars which flood the mails at this season of the year, is the one that is issued by N. W. Ayer & Son, the Keeping-Everlastingly At It, Newspaper Advertising Agents of Philadelphia, and which has been for years a very great favorite.

It is large enough to be easily read across a room and handsome enough to hang on the wall for a year without becoming an eyesore.

This issue has a new heading which is both artistically designed and beautifully printed.

It is so packed as to reach its destination in perfect condition, and it is sent to any address, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents.

The publishers say that the sales of this calendar increase every year, and our own experience is that having become acquainted with it, we would be very loath to go back to the other kind.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

As a good deal is being said at this time about Hawaii and its annexation to the United States, we give our readers the following from the Times-Democrat, showing the interest already held in those islands by citizens of this country:

A glance at the late Hawaiian census shows that in everything but government the islands are already a part of the United States. Of their trade $18,332,631 80, or 91.18 per cent., is with the United States; $1,104,022 12, or 5.49 per cent., with Great Britain; and $668,376 79, or 3.33 per cent., with other countries.

The total value of the Hawaiian sugar plantations is $33,347,690, of which $24,735,610, or 74 17 per cent., are owned by Americans; $6,038,130, or 18 11 per cent., by Englishmen, and $2,757,910, or 7 72 by people of other nationalities.

—Times-Democrat, Feb. 14.

Here is an item of interest to authors and those contemplating authorship—that is, on the line of novels:

It appears that some 1 600 novels were published during the past six years, or 270 novels a year. These 1,600 novels were written by 792 authors who signed their names and 130 who did not. Only 240 of these authors met with success enough to encourage them to write a second time. Of these 240, 50 are men of the front rank, who command great popularity and an income "which even in the profession of law would be called considerable;" 70 are men enjoying popularity enough to make their books "go off" in large numbers, and the remaining 120 are men who have achieved such a measure of success that they are encouraged to persevere. In all, 2 600 persons have failed as writers of fiction during the last eighteen years, and against about 80 who have succeeded well and 120 who have succeeded tolerably.—Times-Democrat.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Dr. Norvin Green, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, died on Feb. 12.

The county insane asylum, four miles from Dover, N. H., was burned on Feb. 9, and forty-four lives were lost. Of the forty-eight inmates only four escaped.

The Evangelical Ministers' Association of Atlanta is out with an address to the press of that city and of the State, calling for cleaner newspapers. It makes strenuous objection to the publication of "sensational items," which, it says, threaten to undermine the Church and the State.

Hugh O'Donnell, the leader of the Homestead strike, is on trial for murder. It is understood that no attempt to prove an alibi will be made, but an entire line of defense is decided upon. A large number of witnesses have been summoned, including every local newspaper correspondent who was at Homestead before and after the riot.

The work of the committees having in charge the ceremonies incident to the inauguration of President-elect Cleveland is progressing satisfactorily. Gen. McMahon and Col. Corbin, who have supervision of the arrangements of the parade, are daily receiving applications from military organizations all over the United States for positions in the line.

The electric street car strike in Wheeling, W. Va., assumed its most serious phase on Feb. 10, when two riots occurred between the strikers and the men in charge of the barns in South Wheeling. The disturbances outdid anything of the sort ever occurring in that city, or even in this portion of the State. Two men were seriously and one probably fatally hurt.

The Agricultural Bureau has issued its regular February report, showing the total per cent. of the cotton crop marketed on Feb. 1. According to the bureau the amount marketed was 87.9 per cent. of the total yield. According to the general interpretation of this percentage at the Cotton Exchange the actual crop indicated is 6,678,000 bales, which is a larger yield than most of the crop authorities have estimated.

During the blizzard in Colorado, last week, a large number of elk, stated at over 1,000, driven by cold and hunger, invaded the cattle ranches near Steamboat Spring, and, driving the cattle away from their cribs, took possession of the fodder that had been provided for them. The ranchmen rounded up a large number of them without much difficulty, as their sufferings made them very tame, and propose to try to domesticate them.

The American makers of beet sugar do not look with equanimity on the prospect of having Hawaii annexed to the United States. Henry T. Oxnard, who is called the beet sugar king of this country, has just returned from the Sandwich Islands, and in a recent interview asserts that the movement for annexation is simply a grab on the part of the Hawaiian sugar planters at the bounty paid by the United States, or the protection that may follow it.

But twelve working days remain of the Fifty-second Congress. Only one of the annual appropriation bills, the Army bill, has become a law, and from this time on until March 4 both Houses of Congress will bend every energy to the completion of the remainder of the important measures. For this reason it is uncertain whether the Senate will be able to carry out the programme of legislation, short as it is, arranged by the Republican caucus.

FOREIGN.

The American Minister has established a protectorate over the Hawaiian Islands. Everything is quiet at Honolulu, and annexation sentiment is increasing.

The Anchor Line steamer Trinacria grounded off the coast of Spain. Her crew, numbering thirty-seven in all, were all lost except seven. Four women on board and some soldiers were lost.

The Russian government has given orders looking to the enforcement of the laws which forbid Jews to belong to the Cossacks, except they embrace the orthodox faith. It is said that there are a large number of Jews in the Cossack colony of the Don, and that they own considerable property.

The Russian War Department has rejected half of the output of new small calibre rifles in 1892. The rifles were made in the government factories and are too defective to be placed with safety in the hands of the army. All the factories will be reorganized before the work on the rifles will be resumed.

Queen Victoria is going to send a number of paintings, "done with her own hands," to the Chicago Fair, some of which will come from the walls of the private dining-room of Windsor Castle. Princess Louise and Princess Beatrice will also send pictures, while Princess Christian will send some specimens of needlework.

As a result of the trial of the Panama Canal frauds, the aged Count De Lesseps and son were sentenced to five years' imprisonment and a fine of 3,000 francs. Marius Fontane and Henry Gottu sentenced to two years' imprisonment and a fine of 3,000 francs, and Gustave Eiffel, two years' imprisonment and 2,000 francs fine.

Dr. Kempster, a special health officer of the United States, has just arrived in Berlin after a tour of inspection of Hamburg, Bremen, Cassell and Nietlehen. He told a newspaper reporter that he was convinced that the present year would witness a fierce outburst of cholera all over the Continent, and instead of being sporadic, as in 1892, the plague would sweep the whole of Europe.

The Allen Line steamship Pomeranian, from Glasgow, Jan. 27, via Moville, for New York, has returned to Greenock in distress, after having met with one of the most serious accidents that has occurred to a transatlantic steamer for years, an accident which resulted in the loss of twelve lives. The vessel was struck by the crest of a raging sea on Feb. 4, and the deck saloon, the charhouse, the bridge and the boats were smashed to pieces, while twelve persons were swept overboard.

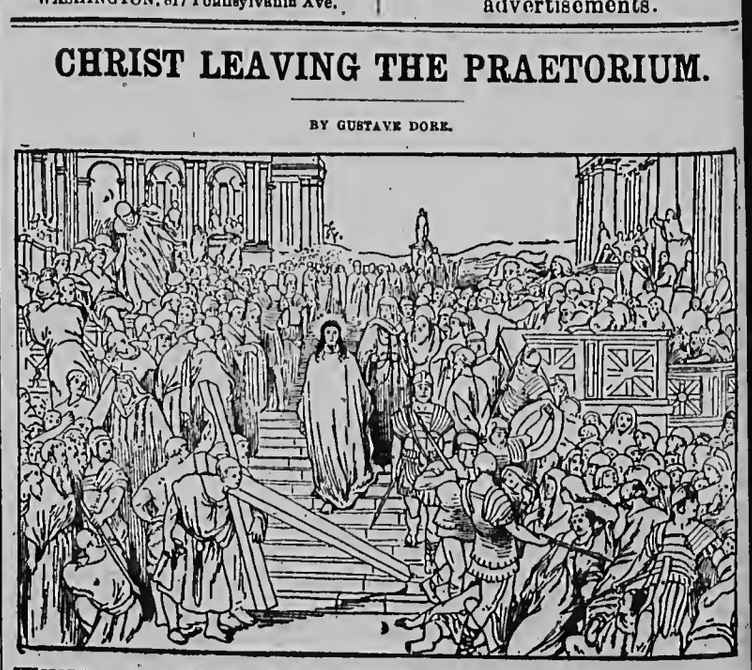
CHRIST LEAVING THE PRAETORIUM.

BY GUSTAVE DORE.



THIS is one of the greatest religious paintings of the century, as it is one of the most wonderful creations of the genius of Gustave Dore. He was a painter of the French school, although his unequalled originality and weird fancy made it impossible for him strictly to belong to any school. The scene represents Christ descending the steps leading from the official tribunal of the Roman Government of Jerusalem after his condemnation. The figure of the Savior, erect and commanding, is the centre of attraction. Dore's aspiration turned towards religious subjects, and he became so fascinated with the delineation of the Savior's face that he painted it fifty times; and in no effort of his genius has the heavenly radiance which emanates from the figure of Christ been so apparent as in this sublime and elevated picture. The gaping crowd, some of them friends, others attracted by excitement; the jeering Jews pressing forward with uplifted hands; the poor and wretched who adored him expressing the most profound sorrow; the sick whom he had healed and those who still craved his divine help all pressing forward to get one last glance at him, while the Roman soldiers with spears and shields driving them back, are graphically displayed in this wonderful picture. The infinite love and pity on His sacred face, as painted with the inspiration of Dore's pencil, is something beyond all description. The reproduction is a photo etching, engraved with the greatest care, preserving all the beautiful softness and value of the original, and has been pronounced by Art critics to be equal in execution to the marked proofs sold by subscription only, for $100 each, in the Dore Gallery, London.

The above handsome picture will be mailed free to each old subscriber sending $2 to renew his subscription for another year, and remitting amount due. It will also be mailed free to each new subscriber sending us $2.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. C. Harris, Iuka, Miss., Feb. 9: "We came to our new work soon after Conference. Have been comfortably situated and well cared for from the first. I find the spiritual condition of the church good; consequently we have good attendance on all the services: preaching, Sunday-school and prayer meeting. We are realizing and expecting a continuation of good times from the presence of the Lord. We observed Week of Prayer and Self-denial, carrying out printed programme. Collected $20 on mission list."

Rev. J. M. Johnston, Harrisonburg, La., Feb. 13: "Our first Quarterly Conference has passed off satisfactory to both the presiding elder and preacher in charge. The preacher has been well received and well cared for; quite a comfortable little home. We have no intoxicating liquors sold in Harrisonburg, and I am told there is not a man in our village who profanes God's name, and the result is the church is well attended, and a good Sabbath-school, and the preacher well pleased with the prospects he has for doing good."

Rev. M. J. Miller, China Grove circuit, Mississippi Conference, Feb 14: "Our first quarterly meeting Conference was held last Saturday at Tylertown. We had our much-loved presiding elder, Bro. R. S. Woodward, with us Saturday and Sabbath, and, as is his custom, he preached some fine sermons. We feel that many were strengthened and encouraged, and that our quarterly meeting occasion was more than usually profitable to the church. Our new church in Tylertown is finished, and is a thing of beauty, and many hope and pray that it may be a joy for all time."

Rev. V. D. Skipper: "As many of the brethren have given accounts of their ponndings, storms and breezes, I will just say that we are not troubled much on Sharon circuit with storms and poundings, but we have a gentle breeze occasionally, which brings into our larder such things as flour, sugar, coffee, tea, potatoes, eggs, chickens, and nice hams. I suppose everyone knows that skippers are fond of ham. These good people have learned that here are two large Skippers at this house. One weighs 186 and the other 180—the largest ever seen in Madison county. Notwithstanding the cold weather, ice and snow, I have filled all my appointments since Conference. Pray that we may have a good year."

Rev. J. A. Poe, P. C., Belzona circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Feb. 7: "I was sent back to this circuit again this year, and I began work immediately after Conference, and have completed my second round, and made about sixty pastoral visits; sold about thirty-five dollars' worth of Bibles and other good books. Our first Quarterly Conference was held Jan. 14 and 15, and our beloved presiding elder, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, was with us, and preached two sermons that, I trust, will prove a blessing to us all. We have made preparations to build a parsonage and repair the church at Belzona. I wish to say that the good people have been more thoughtful of our needs this year than they were last. May the good Lord bless them and make us more useful in administering to them spiritual things for their temporal comfort. We are praying, working and looking for a great revival of religion that will scatter dissention and bind us together in stronger bonds of Christian love. Pray for us."

Rev. J. H. Brown, P. C., Farmerville circuit, Louisiana Conference: "We have an old adage that 'a bad beginning makes a good ending,' and I truly hope that soon will be demonstrated in this case. Early we were somewhat contracted and restricted necessarily. Be it said to the credit of my good predecessor and the good people, there are few, if any, more conveniently arranged and more comfortable parsonages than ours at this place. Apparently, the people have received us cordially and loyally, if not royally. They were even thoughtful and considerate, and planned nicely for our safety and comfort in a (fearful?) storm which struck us on the third instant, the debris of which consisted of flour, sugar, coffee, rice, ham, turkey, butter, eggs, soda, soap, canned goods, etc. I have found a large field; plenty of work; no time for folding hands. Can see the enemy's advance line; can hear the command as it comes along the line from the old fiend himself, 'Onward, forward!' The Lord give us victory."

Rev. J. H. Forcman, Coffadellah, Miss., Feb. 13: "The Conference saw proper to send me to Neshoba charge. I reached the appointment the second Sunday in January. I have just finished my first round. We are well pleased with our appointment. I found plenty of work to do. My circuit takes in almost the entire county of Neshoba, east of Philadelphia. Our first Quarterly Conference was held Jan. 28 and 29. Rev. C. McDonald was at his post, and full of the Spirit; his sermons edifying. The attendance of the officials was not full. Finances somewhat behind; but we had quite a pleasant time. Surely we have one of the best presiding elders in the Mississippi Conference. He was the guest of the preacher in charge. His visit was so pleasant and profitable to us. In reading the Word of God and prayer, and baptizing the baby, he impressed the people of this community with his ability as a minister of the gospel. I preached to a large congregation last Sunday, and thank the Lord it was not in vain. The future prospects for a successful year, spiritually, are bright, indeed. Sorry to say we have about 500 members, and only about twelve copies of the ADVOCATE come to this charge. Hope they will do better this year in this respect. Pray for us, that we may be successful in winning souls to Christ."

Rev. J. M. Huggin, Arkabutla circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "A brief report from this charge might be of interest to some of your readers. I reached the work early in December; my family a few days afterward. We received a warm welcome by the good people of Arkabutla, a number of whom were at the parsonage when we arrived, having prepared us a splendid dinner. The temporal welfare of my family has been carefully looked after by this kind and intelligent people. Many substantial tokens of appreciation have we received from them. May the Lord help me to sow unto them 'spiritual things!' Not being ready for the Week of Prayer and Self-denial (the first week in January), we substituted the week following the fifth Sunday in January. Having failed to obtain programmes I had ordered, we held a series of prayer meetings through the week. At these meetings suitable Scripture lessons were read, and also selections from the 'Annual Report of the Board of Missions' and the Missionary Reporter. The sum realized was not large, as our church in Arkabutla is not strong, numerically or financially; but much good, we believe, was accomplished. Our first quarterly meeting embraced last Saturday and Sunday. Bro. Morehead, our presiding elder, was with us, full of labors. He magnifies the office he fills. Painstaking and conscientious, he looks after all the interests of the church carefully. We had a good quarterly meeting. I am going to press the claims of your good paper upon this people."

Rev. P. H. Howse, P. C., Meadville, Miss., Feb. 11: "Just one week ago to-day I left the town of Meadville for Hamburg, Miss., to meet our beloved presiding elder. I reached Hamburg about eleven A. M., and found him awaiting my arrival. Notwithstanding the cold wind and threatening clouds, we were soon on the road to Meadville, and just as we got into the parsonage it began raining, and next morning it was raining. We had to go out four and a half miles to Oak Grove to attend our Quarterly Conference, and it rained a cold, steady rain on us all the way out there. The road was muddy, but, nevertheless, we got there. But we were no less cold and wet when we did get there. There was no stove in the church, and so good as none in the school-house; so one of our stewards, who had more heart than judgment, invited the whole Conference over to his house; and, notwithstanding our charity for our brother, our shivering bodies induced us to go. It was only a short distance, and we were very soon there. After warming ourselves and feasting on good things, we began business. Every church was well represented by their respective stewards—in fact, every steward was present but one, and we look for him next time. The stewards provided liberally for the support of their preacher, and did not seem to think that he and his family were air plants, and could just naturally live until the next Quarterly Conference. Sunday, at 10:30 o'clock A. M., we had a love-feast, in which a great number stood up as witnesses for Christ, after which Bro. Little preached to us, in the power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit, a wonderful sermon from Matt. i. 23. His words did not fall cold and lifeless, but came burning from a soul fired by the love of God. There was one accession to the church. Our communion service was delightful. Bro. Thomas Flowers, of the Montana Conference, was with us. Our presiding elder presides with dignity, yet emulating that spirit of kindness in his Master. May God bless him and his colaborers! In token of our love for him, we paid him one-fourth of his entire salary."

Rev. W. H. Huntley, Brandon, Miss., Feb. 13: "Brandon moves on with a substantial, if silent, prosperity. Last year was a clearance year—clearance of old things for new. Improvements of value were put upon the church-building, and the old parsonage substituted with one newer and nearer to the church. About the present parsonage hammer and saw are poised and ready for fences and new rooms. Then paint and paper will complete and exhibit one of the best parsonages of the Conference. Our membership consists of as warm and consistent hearts as can be found anywhere. If continual sendings of comforts and luxuries are a mark of piety, this charge is, with propriety, named at the head of the district. Several accessions this year indicate interest and progress, concerning which the preacher thanks God and looks forward with encouragement. There is no whisky sold upon our streets; no dances demoralize our peaceful society. Schools are sustained with eager interest, and are excellent. One is a college for thorough training of girls, for many years under Miss Johnston, a famous Presbyterian instructress, of unquestioned ability, and held in general affection. The high school for boys is under the management of a capable and conscientious principal, Prof. Griffith, a Methodist, with several assistants. Over and above these advantages, amongst the rising hills and many solemn cedars, blows wholesome, healthful air, which keeps ruddy the cheeks and elastic the steps. There are more old people here than in any other Mississippi town of the size; so stated, and, no doubt, truly. Springs break in limpid sweetness, and charged with medicinal virtues, from many places, and grow in value as their merits are proved. Altogether, Brandon is a happy place for a pastor's sojourn, and I doubt not everyone who has served here keeps Brandon amongst the pleasantest and most treasured of past terms of service. Bro. McDonald is abroad, in tireless energy, upon his almost boundless territory. With his heart entirely in the welfare of preachers and peoples, he is achieving the logical consequences of such condition—success. I am grateful for my position here, love my people well, and expect great things for the year."

Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Corinth, Miss., Feb. 8: "Last Sunday, Feb. 5, was a high day in Methodist circles at Corinth. Dr. H. C. Morrison came over from Atlanta to dedicate our new church. A packed house greeted the preacher. He delivered a very able sermon from John xi, 26. After the sermon $750—balance due on the building—was quickly raised. We have now the most beautiful and comfortable church in North Mississippi. Dr. Morrison addressed the Juvenile Missionary Society in the afternoon, and preached a great sermon at night. His visit to us was a benediction to the town. The Winter has been unusually severe, and has interfered with church work. Notwithstanding, we can report some progress. Seven accessions since Conference, large congregations on the Sabbath, and decided increase in attendance and interest in the prayer meeting services. Our people are growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord. Bro. Lagrone, our beloved presiding elder, has been suffering with a severe cold for several weeks, but has filled every appointment but one. Bad roads, cold weather and uncomfortable churches have greatly impeded his efforts, but have not lessened his zeal. A more faithful and useful man of God I do not know. Emigration to Texas and Arkansas has grown to alarming proportions. The people are leaving this and adjoining counties by the score and the hundred. Lands and live stock are being sold in some instances for a mere song. The soil has been exhausted by a bad system of farming, and the people have not the enterprise to recruit it. Our church is feeling the effect of the exodus, and the end is not yet. No wonder the Conferences in Texas can report a net increase of ten thousand members. Our resources to meet financial obligations have decreased fully one-third, and yet the obligations remain the same. An effort is being made to turn the tide of immigration from the West in this direction. The M. and O. R. R. is lending all the aid it can. The Upper Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church has recently held its annual session in Corinth. Bishop Bowman presided. The Bishop impressed us as being a man of most excellent Christian spirit and of great ability. Certain other white men of high position in the church were present, and said some things that it were best had not been said. The truth was perverted and race prejudice intensified, and God was not glorified."

Letter from Macon, Ga.

MR. EDITOR: If you have the space to spare, I would like to say a few words through your columns to friends in Mississippi and Louisiana.

After many "God bless you's," and other kind parting words from dear friends, we left Jackson on Dec. 27. We reached Birmingham early the next morning, and spent the day in seeing the sights of "the Magic City." Considering its age, it certainly is a magic city. We found ourselves in Macon about noon on the twenty-ninth. We were met at the depot by a delegation from the Board of Stewards and driven to the parsonage. There a number of sisters were awaiting our arrival. They had comfortable fires burning, a cook in the kitchen, and dinner in process of preparation. Of course, we at once felt that we were among friends. Our parsonage is a well-built, two-story structure, having ten rooms, besides pantry, bath-room, dressing-room, etc. It is well supplied with furniture. The church and parsonage are on the same lot, which consists of an acre of ground. The parsonage is supplied with gas and water-works. It has also several outbuildings—barn, wood-house, buggy-house, etc. So you see that, so far as a domicile is concerned, we are comfortable enough. My church—Mulberry Street—is the original hive of Methodism in this city. It was organized in 1826. It has swarmed again and again. There are now eight Southern Methodist Churches in Macon and its suburbs, and another will, doubtless, be organized during the present year. Two years ago Mulberry Street had a membership of about a thousand. Since then, owing to her habit of swarming occasionally, her membership has been reduced to about seven hundred. Our morning congregations are quite good, usually about filling the house. The night congregations are not so good. This is due to two causes. In the first place, the Wesleyan boarders, about a hundred and fifty in number, never attend at night. Then, the church is not centrally located. It was so when built, but in sixty years the growth of the town has shifted the center of population.

A new church on the hill, near Wesleyan Female College, has been much talked of in the last few years, but has not yet materialized. That it will do so after a short time I do not doubt. The church pays $1,200 per annum for music. About one-fourth of this goes to the organist; the rest to the choir. The secretary of the Board of Stewards is not a member of the Board, and is a salaried officer, receiving $300 per annum for his services. He earns every dollar he receives, his work being very laborious.

Macon, including its suburbs, has a population of about thirty thousand. There are eleven railroads centering here. Macon is a city of magnificent distances. Many of its streets are a hundred and eighty feet wide. Others are a hundred and sixty, and still others a hundred and twenty feet. The streets everywhere, except in the business part of the town, are lined with trees, most of them having four rows, thus affording an abundance of shade. Macon is just hilly enough to make it picturesque. It affords some of as fine views as can be had in any town I know of.

Judge Lamar's funeral was a great occasion in Macon. There were about a thousand persons inside the church, and I suppose not less than five or six thousand just outside. Then, at least, five or six thousand more lined the streets along which the procession passed. Such a vast concourse of people was a magnificent tribute to the worth of the man. After a few remarks by myself as the pastor of the church, elaborate addresses were delivered by Dr. Candler and Bishop Fitzgerald.

When a school-boy I was taught that Georgia was about in the same latitude as Mississippi. Soon after coming here, however, I began to think that the geographers were all wrong; that I had emigrated in the direction of the North Pole. The weather was very cold here for more than a month, and during two weeks of that time there was snow on the ground. The Ocmulgee river was frozen from bank to bank. The damage done to buildings, goods, etc., by the snow was estimated at $65,000. The cold weather, of course, hindered me very much in the work of getting acquainted with my flock. Recently, however, I am making considerable progress in that direction. With kindest wishes for yourself and your readers, I am,

Yours, W. C. BLACK.

Nashville Notes.

Fully a thousand people, of all grades of society and all shades of religious belief, assembled at McKendree Methodist Church, on the night of Jan. 29, to witness a ceremony whose like has possibly never before been seen—certainly not in the South. The occasion was the presentation of a banner to the Nashville corps of the Salvation Army by the pastor, Dr. Steele, in behalf of his congregation. This meeting was a sequel to that held in the early part of December, a brief account of which was given in the ADVOCATE at the time.

The Salvation Army is an "army with banners"—that is, when their funds or the beneficence of their friends will allow it. The detachment at this point being small, and its treasury consequently low, some sympathizers among the Methodists conceived the idea of presenting them with their regulation battle-flag. It was a service long to be remembered. The martial spirit—though, of course, in its spiritualized sense—seemed to pervade all. Never before did the grand old organ seem more a thing of sensibility and life than when, under the skillful touch of its mistress, it gave forth the triumphal ode, "Onward, Christian soldier," as the Salvationists moved up the aisle. To have seen the first church of Southern Methodism thus opening her doors to the representatives of the much-abused "Army," and to have heard her pastor addressing the adjutant with the words, "My brother, accept this banner with the assurance that you have the sympathy and co-operation of McKendree Church in your work in our city," would have put to eternal silence many a croaker about "denominational strictness" and "sectarian exclusiveness."

The flag, like all the paraphernalia of the Salvation Army, has its symbolic meaning. Adjutant Smith, in accepting it, took occasion to explain its significance. The blue border represents the purity after which every soldier must strive, the red field is typical of the blood that secures his salvation, and the yellow star in the centre ever brings to his mind the fire of the Holy Ghost. In the left hand upper corner is a small American flag. "The only thing we can see this means," said the speaker, "is that we get our stripes here, and expect our stars in the next world."

Following this meeting, on the next night, a sister Methodist Church extended hospitality to the corps, and the public was given the opportunity of witnessing the interesting method that the Salvation Army employs in "swearing in" recruits. This was, in turn, succeeded by a meeting held in one of our leading (would you believe it?) Presbyterian Churches, when an address was delivered recounting the history of the rise of the movement and the prosecution of the work in the slums of our large cities. It would be hard to find instances of devotion to God and humanity more signal and, at the same time, less ostentatious than those exhibited in the daily life of the "slum-lassies" of New York and Chicago.

What ought to be the attitude of the church to this great movement? Should it, in view of all the facts, be one of antagonism, or, what is even worse, indifference? Yet it is even so in most quarters. In a short conversation which your correspondent was fortunate enough to secure with Mr. Smith, he stated that never before had he witnessed such a spirit of fraternity on the part of the churches as that manifested by those in Nashville. In by far the most places the Salvation Army is to the churches what the poor publican was to the old Pharisee. But happily a change is coming about gradually. Undoubtedly, there is a field for this body of workmen to till; and, what is more, if they are not allowed to do it, it will, in all human probability, never be done. It is in the church's power to co-operate with this divinely sanctioned means to preach the gospel to the masses. The Church of England has had her John Wesley and her Gen. Booth. She has, by her unwillingness to assimilate them, lost both. We may learn a lesson from her experience.

Unity of aim, with diversity of method, seems to be the watchword of evangelical religion to-day. From a study of the tendencies of our age, it appears that almost all of the different denominations have given up as a thing impracticable, if not, indeed, altogether undesirable, the idea that Christian union must needs mean strict conformity to an outward rule of organization. We are coming to realize that oneness does not mean sameness. It is only by the combination of elemental sounds that the musician can evoke harmony; one chord would result only in monotone. As Paul became all things to all men, and never the same thing to men of diverse character, so the church has come to believe that each of her component divisions has a specific part to perform in working out the grand consummation. These principles have recently been forcibly illustrated in our midst. For several weeks all the evangelical congregations have been working for one great end; all their lines of operation have been made to converge on one point. Now that the point has been reached, of course the churches are all one, and are presenting a unity of force and action perhaps never before known. The circumstance that has made this, which has always been possible, a real fact is the presence in our city of the noted evangelist Rev. B. Fay Mills. He came to us on the ninth of this month; but his spirit and peculiar "method," as it is called, have been among us for weeks past. To hear his plans for revival work discussed reminds one of a council of war held by some sagacious general on the eve of a decisive battle. Every mine is dug, every fuse is laid, every detail is mastered ere the first charge is made. So it seems to be with Mr. Mills. For a month back all the churches have been preparing inwardly and outwardly for the meeting. Today the charge against sin and worldliness is being made under Mr. Mills as commander-in-chief.

The meeting has begun auspiciously, though no results can as yet be stated. The prospects are that for the next three weeks Nashville is to have one of the most solid revivals in her history.

It is a known fact that there are a number of preachers all through our connection who pride themselves on hating "innovations" and loving the "old and beaten track," that have as yet found no satisfactory answer to their petulant question, "Well, what's the use of the Epworth League anyhow?" Perhaps if any such had been present at a recent League meeting, they would have had their drowsy eyelids opened by some statements made by one of the city pastors in answer to the question, "What may a pastor expect from his Epworth League?" We can not go much into detail, but in the discussion it appeared that that pastor exercised as much care in selecting and looking after the work of his League as he did in any of the departments under his control. One of the features of his plan was to turn the members of the League into collectors for his assessment on the missionary debt. He found that they entered into such a task with far less grumbling, and, consequently, far greater success, than some of his older financiers. A second use that he found was using the League as canvassers for the church paper. Then they formed a ready and efficient Visiting Committee upon which he could rely for trusty service. Another use he put the League to was that of a preventive for backsliding among his young members. But to go further would leave little place for the preacher himself. With his collections all off his hands, his "account with the Advocate" straight, his visiting done, and backsliders looked after, the Epworth League will soon be discussing the question, "What use can we make of our pastor?" Yes, the League has a place to fill, and the wise pastor will not be slow in finding out that place and filling it with efficient workers.

THE HONORED MAN.

I honor the man who in civil life,
Avoiding contention and useless strife,
With principles grand and actions true,
Stands ever ready to dare and do,
Who goes right onward, nor dreads defeat—
In path of duty ne'er knows retreat;
Who values peace yet will not yield
One little of truth for the battle-field;
I honor that man.

I honor the man who unflinchingly goes
Into the battle with his face to his foes;
That dares to stand in the battle's front
And winces not, though he bears the brunt
Of the fierce assault, but with heart as stout
As if he had never suffered rout,
Unfurls his flag and his sabre draws
For God and Right and his Nation's Laws,
I honor that man.

I honor the man that will not lose
His faith in man, though he bears abuse;
Who carries his burden so grim and gaunt
That his neighbors dream not he suffers want
As he gathers the outcasts in sympathy's arms
And champions the helpless, undisturbed by alarms
With wisdom and prudence, and honesty, too,
In council or action stands ready to do;
I honor that man.

"The Church and Prohibition."

FROM THE OTHER SIDE.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the ninth instant there appeared quite a lengthy communication under the head of "The Church and Prohibition," and I beg of you in justice and fairness to allow a few thoughts from the other side to appear in your columns. After reading "words, words, words," and analyzing lengthy sentences; we find that "Layman or Sextus" wishes to give expression to the following ideas:

"Prohibition is to be enforced only by man. Men will not oppose the liquor traffic until they are made better men. Men are to be made better men only through the church. Hence the church alone has power to accomplish prohibition."

This may or may not be true, but if it is true, in God's name why does not the church go to work and accomplish this much-to-be-desired condition? That question is easily answered. Not only in the Methodist, but in all Christian Churches, by far the greater number of supporters are—women.

The liquor traffic is allowed by the voters, and women do not vote! Is it not evident that the church would be far more powerful for good if all of her members had the rights of the ballot? There is much to be said on both sides of this question. It is not, however, to this that I wish to call particular attention. It is the manner in which "Layman or Sextus" refers to women, and to our temperance lecturers in particular. Will the gentleman show us where the "chivalrous courtesy," "high regard," and "high-bred deference" appears in his article when he speaks of them as never having succeeded in catching a man," and says of them that "under the cover of prohibition they sow the seed of other new and strange doctrine, such as female suffrage." He also says that they care only for the collections and to be nicely entertained? Behold a sample of our "Southern chivalry" to the stranger in our gates! Now, I'll make a few statements to the readers of the ADVOCATE.

I have personally entertained some of our W. C. T. U. lecturers, and not one of them had "short hair" nor a "sharp voice," not one "strutted" (elegant, isn't it?) nor "deeryed the church;" not one mentioned "female suffrage" or evinced a desire to "catch a man." All were dressed in quiet feminine attire, though it did not in every case belong strictly to them. The law in this State gives all that a woman hath, even to her dresses and bonnets, to her husband, so that those who were married were, strictly speaking, wearing their husband's clothes. They were thorough Southern ladies, and I was honored in having the pleasure of entertaining them. I, and not my husband, had the trouble, if there was any trouble attached to it, of entertaining them. Did "Layman or Sextus" ever hear of housekeepers entertaining preachers, providing for them "good, warm, comfortable quarters?" Well, I've done it, and I claim the right to entertain women who are doing just as much for the cause of Christ. I never had a woman at my house to treat me other than as a reasonable, thinking human being, and I've had men—preachers in my house—to treat me as if I were made but to attend to the temporal wants of mankind, and was unable to hold an intelligent conversation. (Maybe I can't, but Southern chivalry should have made him hide his knowledge of that fact.) I must say that this is the rarity and not the rule with our ministers. This writer further says: "By their fruits ye shall know them, and if their fruit is principally money, you may know that this is what they are planting to reap." Does "Layman or Sextus" know of an institution that asks for more or asks oftener for money than the church does, and yet none of us think the church a scheme for financial profit. But point to a minister of any denomination who has done more good work than has Frances E. Willard. Only the other day I read of one of our evangelists, W. C. T. U. women, holding a meeting in Tennessee, at which over one hundred conversions took place. "Very good fruit" to be judged by! "Layman or Sextus" is evidently one of those chivalrous (?) Southerners who thinks that we women should sell our birthright for, say—a seat in the street car! The "conditions of Southern society" are by no means perfect, and Southern conservatism is full, full of error.

I maintain that God knows how to pattern women, and if he gives them the ability to work in his vineyard, let men beware how they put a stumbling block in the way. Gladstone thought it perfectly right and proper for women to enter the political arena, make speeches, etc., as long as they worked for him; but he hastens to point the finger of scorn at the first woman who worked against him! Men less eminent have been known to do likewise. "Layman or Sextus" has a perfect right to conscientiously disapprove of women speaking in public, etc.; but is it exactly fair for him to use such weapons as ridicule and unmerited invective to make the public agree with him? If he really disapproves of woman's work, I will undertake to prove to him by the Bible that women ought to use the talents God gives them, and that they ought not to obey men. Above all, I can prove to him that it is greatly the fault of the men that so many women wish they "had never been born, or else been born men." Christ came to save sinners, yet all are not yet saved, and to free the bond; yet there are bondswomen in our land more truly slaves than was the blackest African in ante-bellum days!

I am a Southerner, but first a Democrat! A Methodist, but first a Christian. A wife, but first a woman. And my blood boils when I see some narrow-minded ignoramus attempt to lay down the law to the first and best women of our land, or see some good woman compelled to obey a bad man, or see an inferior man placed by law or church above a superior woman.

Parsonage Gardening.

MR. EDITOR: I send you a few extracts from Chapter IV. of MSS. I have for a book—"The Stuff, and Those Who Stay by It; or, The Parsonage and Its Occupants."

As I have lost hope of ever publishing these MSS., I submit these extracts, which relate to the care of the parsonage, as practical hints to those who occupy these homes.

J. A. PARKER.

CHAPTER IV.

CARING FOR THE PARSONAGE.

The former chapters have been taken up with the consideration of the question of securing, properly locating and furnishing the preacher's home. Let us assume that in your case these things have been done. If so, this home has been provided for you, not as an individual, but as "the man of God." The house, and "all the appurtenances thereunto belonging," is not yours. It is God's house; but for the time being it is your home, and you are charged with the grave responsibility of caring for it, and of adding to its attractions and comfort whatever you may be able by the investment of a few leisure hours and a few spare dimes.

If your grounds have a frontage of sixty feet, your yard will afford ample room for a beautiful display of such hardy ornamental plants and shrubs as you may gather up in your rounds among the people. Almost any sort of a collection is pretty in a yard, if properly arranged. Have order, and you will have beauty. If there are a few feet of the yard extending beyond the corners of the house, there you have a place for a few LeConte Pears, or a few Chinese Cling, or Clingman's May Peaches, or, better, fig trees. Never allow any sort of so-called "ornamental," or "useful," grapes to be planted on the parsonage grounds. As a rule, these are irrepressible pests.

* * * * * *

The proper arrangement of the garden is of importance. Adam had a "garden" to "keep and to dress;" so have you.

* * * * * *

Keep shrubbery out of the garden, unless it be turreted, and then allow these only on the embankments.

* * * * * *

I would not recommend fancy gardening for a parsonage kitchen. Such requires time and money beyond the command of the average "parson."

Beginning with this season—Spring—turnips, mustard, beets, onions and peas ought to be up and growing. Of turnips, the Flat Dutch is best for Spring planting. Any of the smooth-leaved varieties of mustard (except the White) is good. For beets, the Early Blood Turnip, Bassano and Long Blood will supply you till early Fall. Among onions, the Rea is about the only one you can carry over. English peas are a success only when properly "staked." The dwarf varieties are worthless. The Early May (three feet high), followed with some of the large varieties (five to seven feet), gives a succession of crops—not on the same ground. Cabbage may be planted generally in the Southern States from Feb. 15 to June 1. The Jersey, or Early Wakefield, the Early and Late Flat Dutch are good for Summer. Nothing is so sure, nor so good for Winter, as the Green Glazed Collard (?). Any other growth for Winter cabbage will generally prove a failure, while this plant yields a large, tender—not compact—head, incomparably sweeter and more digestible than any other cabbage. It is fit only for the slop tub until the frosts fall on it, when it becomes crisp, sweet and tender as young spinach. The first rain after the middle of July prepare and plant a good crop of turnips. The Golden Globe and Southern Seven Top are the best. The first must be housed, or banked, before the freezes come on.

If all the occupants of parsonages act upon these hints, each preacher, when he moves, will find as good a garden as he left.

* * * * * *

With your orchard thus prepared, and looked after as suggested, you may feel assured of a luxury on your board from May to October. Do not plant any inferior fruit trees. They cost as much as better varieties, and afford very little pleasure or profit. A few trees should be added every year. December is the best time for transplanting.

Do not put fruit trees in the garden, unless you have space to devote to that purpose. About the corners of the yard, and about the barn lot—if you have no other ground—will be very suitable for fruit, particularly figs, wild goose plums, or pecans. A small space in the back yard may be made lovely and useful with a scuppernong vine. If possible, get the blue variety.

* * * * * *

Now, there are some things which you should never allow to grow in or track your yard, garden, or orchard. Keep weeds out, keep cattle out, keep pigs out, keep your horse out.

Chapter IV. from "The Stuff, and Those Who Stay by It" (copyright applied for).

A Remedy for Our Drifting.

That we are sadly drifting from the old Methodistic plan of leaving the Bishop and his cabinet free to send our preachers to their respective fields of labor in the name of our blessed Lord, perhaps, there is not a shadow of doubt. Every year near the time for Conference the people inform their presiding elder, if he himself is their kind of man, what preacher or cast of preacher they want for another year. And if their presiding elder does not suit them, they will communicate freely with some other influential minister, or send a delegate to Conference to do his best for them, or write facts to the Bishop that he may without doubt know what they want irrespective of their needs. Preachers communicate freely with their elders or some other elder as to their desires for another year, or if they already have a very desirable appointment with which the law of limitation does not interfere as yet, they may just intimate that it would be quite pleasant for the people, and for themselves especially, to be returned; or if they have been assigned to the best appointments for several years in succession they may feel very secure in leaving the matter of their sending wholly with the Lord and the Bishop and his cabinet. If the people get the preacher for whom they strove, it is not long, frequently, before he proves not to be the man they thought he was, and hence another struggle for another. If they fail to get the preacher for whom they strove, they get one who does not suit them as well as their former pastor, and, therefore, are more dissatisfied than ever. The style of preacher that some think that will suit them exactly is the one who is likely to say very little about religious matters, if anything at all, in his social contact with them, and that jokes well. But when they secure one somewhat on this order, they soon conclude that he is not religious enough, and, therefore, a struggle for one who is more religious. Others want a very religious preacher, and if they get one who is on this order, and his very life is a rebuke to their loose, irregular way of living, they soon conclude that he overdoes the matter and is too religious, and, therefore, it will not do to keep him any longer than till Conference. While others want a preacher who can entertain them with well-rounded sentences and lofty flights of eloquence, and if they are so fortunate as to secure the idol of their heart, hardly a year elapses before, to their disappointment, they discover that he is nothing but a frail man, and, therefore, unable to entertain them every service altogether with entirely new sentences and flights, without having to repeat some of his former beauties, and, therefore, their desires are not met. Now, a remedy for our drifting.

1. The Bishop and his cabinet, when in their judgment, under divine guidance, so that it is best for the cause of our Lord for a preacher who is an itinerant regularly to be sent to a certain charge, should not consult him as to whether or not he would be afflicted if they moved him, leaving it with him as to whether or not he should be moved, when, indeed, the move would not in the least worst him as respects the new charge, and at the same time pick up and send another man just as useful and deserving, but more embarrassed financially, to a poorer work financially than his former one without saying one word to him about the matter.

2. Presiding elders should have no favorites or pets.

3. All the preachers should be so thoroughly in love with Christ and his cause as to be exceedingly rejoiced to get to do anything for him, feeling highly honored when assigned to any charge, thereby assuring the people to whom they may be sent that their souls are just as precious as anybody's besides, and, therefore, that they are just as anxious to do what they can to save them as they are anyone else.

4. All our people should be so thoroughly converted as not only to desire and groan after perfection in the divine life, but to pray to God to send them the most suitable man, and always feel thankful to him for being honored with a minister at all. A good supply of the Holy Ghost within us will be found to be a most excellent and sure remedy for all our driftings. The Lord fill us all full of the Holy Ghost. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." (Zech. iv, 6.)

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

The Need of Immediate Help Imperative.

A letter from Dr. I. G. John, Secretary Board of Missions, calls our attention to Fort Sill, Oklahoma. He says: "Rev. W. Brewer, who has been sent by Bishop Galloway to the Fort Sill Mission, writes me that he has applied to your Board for aid to build a parsonage at that place. He is now, with a wife in poor health, living in a tent. No house in the place for rent. In that bleak climate a delicate woman is in a fearful condition without roof or shelter. I know you will respond, if possible; but is it possible? Can you help? If so, how much? I have written Bishop Galloway, and will do all in my power to assist. May the Master prosper your blessed work!"

How much can we help, sisters? This mission is a new one, and a parsonage means to it what it did to the mission at Anadarko—the firm establishment of a mission to the wild, heathen Indians on our frontier. Mr. Brewer, the preacher sent to this mission, is deeply in earnest, and willing to undergo hardships. He says: "I want to build simply a two-room house costing not more than $125 or $150, so that when I am away on my missionary tours my wife will not suffer in inclement weather. The government will donate four acres of land for church and parsonage." He continues: "I have innumerable opportunities to sow the seed of the gospel, but am often powerless for lack of material aid."

Of the parsonage at Tempe, Arizona, for which we lately made a call in all the church papers, Bishop Haygood writes: "It is hard to conceive how some help to build the parsonage at Tempe, Arizona, could be so invested as to do more good. Bro. Roberts is one of the worthiest of our noble band in this frontier work." He has no home to bring his wife and child to. We have received many donations for this place, but the sum is not enough. We will report them later.

From Hanford, Cal., a zealous sister writes: "This is one of the livest little towns in California, with such a rapidly increasing population that it is impossible to provide houses fast enough to supply the demand; consequently, our new pastor is homeless. As soon as I saw a notice of his arrival among us, I went into town and found him with a wife and babies in an old abandoned house which was little better than a shed, that would be utterly impossible to make even passably comfortable in the Winter. I found I could get a lot donated in the best part of the town, provided a house could be built at once. Can the Parsonage Society help us? or can you suggest any other source to which I might apply?"

Mrs. Haygood writes of this place: "I feel so troubled about these little children and the poor mother trying to comfort them in this shed. I saw Mrs. P.'s sister to-day, and she gives a heart-rending description of the place they have to call home. They pay $5 a month for that. What must we do?" That ours is a pioneer church has been our boast. May the Methodist Church never cease to claim the name! The preachers are sent, and they go. We understand this is the first Southern Methodist preacher sent to this growing town, where the church is in feeble infancy. But the few are zealous and the preacher brave.

Rev. J. M. Gross, P. E., writes from Oklahoma to Dr. Morton in regard to the pastor at that place: "We positively can not find a house in the city for him to live in. I have lost days trying, and real estate men and others have helped me. The situation is simply awful. The only solution to the situation is to build a parsonage, and we are not able. What we are to do God only knows. The church is poor, houses so small none are able to take Bro. S—— and family into their houses. Now, is it possible for the Parsonage Society, or any other department (There is no other department), to help us to the amount of $300 or $400? If so, we will build at once; if not, I can not think of a solution of this dilemma. (Parsonage and Home Mission Society is the only solution; was organized to solve such problems, and has done it hundreds of times.) A house with three or four rooms here will rent from $15 to $20 per month, and can not be had even then. Everything is full. I know the situation here in every particular. Help we must have, or die. If you can in some way help us so we can build a plain parsonage at once, it will greatly relieve—really save—our cause here. I know of no source to look to but the Parsonage Department of Church Extension."

God grant you may not look in vain, brother! Think of that, sisters! Our society is the only source from which he can hope for help to save the cause of our church—the cause of Christ—in that place. Many, many times has that cry come to us, and we have responded, giving the help needed to establish the church in places where now it prospers. Do you realize the great work you are doing? Do you not see that divine wisdom guided Bishop Hargrove when he called upon us to take up this branch of work? The need of it was great. Let us be true to our trust.

All you need is to know the facts. You will not leave these brethren and the cause of Christ to suffer. Send contributions to Mrs. Gen. P. Kendrick, treasurer, 820 Fifth street, Louisville, Ky. LUCINDA B. HELM.

A Word of Reply.

MR. EDITOR: The article in your paper of Feb. 9, headed "The Church and Prohibition," surprises me very much, and I feel like writing a column or two in reply; but, knowing your preference for short communications, desist. Such a tissue of sophistry, prejudice and jealousy of "foreign importations" combined as that contained in his direct attack on the W. C. T. U., I have seldom seen, even in a secular paper, and am truly glad that "a layman," and not a minister, wrote it.

"Layman" reminds me of the man described in Mark viii, 22-24. When he climbs to that sublime height of Christian love and faith which Miss Willard, her most worthy coadjutors in W. C. T. U. work, and many noble men, in different parts of the world, have reached, he will have attained the condition of the same man as described in verse 25. One of the best portions of his argument proves both the utility and the necessity of the W. C. T. U. work. We make this proposition: If "Layman" will send $1 to Mrs. Caroline F. Gron, business manager of Woman's Temperance Publication Association, The Temple, cor. of La Salle and Monroe streets, Chicago, Ill., and procure and read carefully for one year our weekly national organ, The Union Signal, and not in that time change his views very materially, then we will admit that he has less mental and spiritual acumen than we give him credit for.

Yours, for the coming of Christ's kingdom on earth,

SOUTHERN WOMAN AND W. C. T. U. MEMBER.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Feb. 26, 1893.

PREPARED BY REV. A. F. WATKINS.

SUBJECT.—Reading the Law. (Neh. viii, 1-12.)

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." (Psa. cxix, 18.)

TOPICAL OUTLINE.—I. The Law Read (vs. 1-6). II. The Law Expounded (vs. 7 and 8). III. The People Comforted (vs. 9-12).

HOME READINGS.

Monday—Reading the Law. (Neh. viii, 1-9.)
Tuesday—Obeying the Law. (Neh. viii, 10-18.)
Wednesday—The Ten Commandments. (Ex. xx, 1-17.)
Thursday—The Covenant Ratified. (Ex. xxiv, 1-8.)
Friday—The Finding of the Law. (II. Kings xxii, 8-13.)
Saturday—The Law Confirmed. (Matt. v, 17-20.)
Sunday—"O, how I love thy law!" (Psa. cxix, 97-104.)

INTRODUCTORY.

TIME.—B. C. 445. A. M. 3559.

PLACE.—An open space near the temple in Jerusalem.

PERSONS.—1. Nehemiah, the governor. 2. Ezra, the scribe. Ezra was a descendant of Aaron and of Hilkiah, the high priest, who found the book of the law in the days of Josiah. Nearly eighty years after Zerubbabel he came from Babylon with a band of returning captives. After a short time he seems to have returned to Babylon, and to have come again to Jerusalem about the time of the completion of the walls by Nehemiah. He collected and arranged the law of Moses and other sacred books, and is thought to have been the author of several books in addition to the one called by his name. 3. The Priests—Those mentioned in verse 4. 4. The Levites—Those mentioned in verse 7.

EXPLANATORY.

I.—THE LAW READ.

Ver. 1. "All the people gathered themselves together as one man." The whole people, variously estimated at from twenty to fifty thousand, assembled in Jerusalem, probably at the command of the governor, to observe the New Year's anniversary and to celebrate the completion of the walls, and, perhaps, knowing that Ezra, the priest, had completed his work of collecting and arranging the sacred books, they came together in an open space "before the water gate," and asked that the law be read to them. "The water gate" is thought to have been the entrance to the subterranean reservoirs under the temple. "The scribe." This was an order of religious teachers which arose after the return from captivity, when the prophetic office ceased among the Jews. They seem to have originated with Ezra, "the great scribe," and were the copyists, and students, and teachers of the law.

Ver. 2. "And Ezra, the priest, brought the law before the congregation both of men and women and all that could hear with understanding." The sacred roll was carefully brought out to them. The men were accompanied by the women who brought with them such of their children as were old enough to listen intelligently to the reading and explaining of the law. "First day of the seventh month." This month, embracing parts of our September and October, was the first month of the Jewish civil year and the seventh month of their ecclesiastical year. It was the month of feasts, the "Feast of Trumpets," "The Day of Atonement," and the "Feast of Tabernacles" all falling within it. The first day, which they were now celebrating, was their New Year's day and the "Feast of Trumpets."

Ver. 3. "From the (early) morning until the mid-day." The scribe read, assisted by those who were with him, while the people attentively listened to the word as read and expounded.

Ver. 4. "Stood upon a pulpit." This was not a pulpit such as those to which we are accustomed, but simply a wooden scaffold high enough to put the scribe in view of the people and sufficiently large to conveniently accommodate fourteen persons. The persons whose names are mentioned in this verse were probably all priests.

Ver. 5. "Opened the book in the sight of all the people." "The multitude, till then sitting, in Eastern fashion, on the ground, instantly arose in sight of the sacred book and stood reverently to hear its words." (Geikie.) Understand opening the book to mean unrolling the writing as a scroll.

Ver. 6. "And Ezra blessed the Lord." He opens the service with prayer and an ascription of praise to God. "And all the people answered, Amen, Amen." "Such responses characterized ancient worship and ought ever to be retained." (Terry, in Whedon's Com.) They show that all were participants in the act of worship. The people raised their hands as if to supplicate God or to call him to witness, and bowed their heads in adoration.

II.—THE LAW EXPOUNDED.

Ver. 7. The persons whose names are given here were all Levites. They were probably placed at intervals through the crowd and translated the Hebrew, in which the law was written, into Chaldee, which was the language spoken by the Jews at that time, and explained the more difficult passages so that all could understand what was read to them.

Ver. 8. "So they read."—Ezra or one of the other priests read "the words distinctly," and the Levites repeated and explained the words and caused the people "to understand the reading."

III.—THE PEOPLE COMFORTED.

Ver. 9. By the reading of the law they became acquainted with God's commands and their own shortcomings and they began to weep. "The contrast between their own practices and the requirements of the law as laid down by the scribes, alarmed them." (Geikie.) "Far and wide rose loud weeping; confession and lamentation filled the air." (Geikie.) By their rulers they were now reminded that this was the occasion of a joyous festival, and were urged to celebrate it in becoming spirit.

Ver. 10. Nehemiah orders them to enjoy the feast and to cause those who had nothing to be partakers of their gladness. "The joy of the Lord is your strength." The joy that God gives his people is that in which they abide as in a strong tower.

Ver. 11. "Hold your peace, for the day is holy." The Levites hushed their lamentations and cheered their hearts and they went forth to enjoy the remainder of the day with appropriate festivities, sending portions to their poorer brethren so that they could participate in the joys of this holy day.

Ver. 12. "Because they had understood the words declared unto them." Now, for the first time, they clearly understood God's will, and were resolved to conform themselves to the teachings of his law.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

(1) We ought, like these Jews, to be eager to hear and understand God's law. (Ver. 1.)

(2) As soon as children can understand they should be instructed in the Word of God. (Ver. 2.)

(3) A message from God demands the closest attention. (Ver. 3.)

(4) Happy the people whose influential men are on the side of the right. (Ver. 4.) The responsibilities of high position. Responsibility for influence, great or small.

(5) A reverent posture in worship is important. (Ver. 5.) "Bowing the head" as a sign of reverence is the least that can be expected of any attendant upon divine worship. An irreverent looking around upon an assembly engaged in prayer is a mark of ill-breeding, to say nothing of the respectful reverence which all true worship demands. (Terry, in Whedon's Com.)

(6) The people ought to say, Amen. It indicates attention and denotes participation in the service. (Ver. 6.)

(7) Instruction, to be practical, must be understood. (Vers. 7 and 8.) We can not obey until we understand the command. Theology may be intricate; but practical religion is simple.

(8) The first effect of understanding God's law is to excite alarm and sorrow; but the giving of the law is an evidence of God's mercy and favor, and rejoicing will always follow godly sorrow. (Vers. 9 and 10.)

(9) A holy day should be a day of rejoicing and not of sadness. (Ver. 11.) Sunday ought to be a happy day.

(10) The gladness of the child of God should find expression in doing good to others. (Ver. 12.)

How the Late Bishop Phillips Brooks Composed His Sermons.

Bishop Phillips Brooks, who has been esteemed the greatest of American pulpit orators of his time, was frequently asked how he composed his sermons, a question which he did not often answer. Probably the addresses of no orator of his own denomination, perhaps those of no pulpit orator of any denomination, in recent years have been so carefully studied by clergymen of culture for the purpose of getting at the secret of his wonderful powers of oratory and his remarkable beauty of style as have the sermons of Bishop Brooks.

Not so many of his sermons have been printed as his admirers have wished to be the case. Bishop Brooks had a singular antipathy to the reproduction of his sermons in type, and when one of them was reported secretly by a stenographer and printed in full the bishop was disposed to be angry and did find fault with the publisher of the paper.

Three years ago Bishop Brooks delivered a remarkable series of addresses in Trinity Church, in New York City. It was during the Lenten season. He had promised Dr. Morgan Dix, the rector, that he would preach for one hour each day between 12 and 1 for a week or more. Trinity Church stands in the very centre of the seething life of New York during business hours. Negotiations of colossal magnitude are timed by its chimes and conducted under its shadow. It was a serious question whether even so famous an orator as he would be able to draw from their vocations in the busiest hour of the day a sufficient number of men to make the series successful.

But it was wonderfully successful. Men worth millions, and negotiating for properties representing many more millions, postponed their business for that hour and side by side with their clerks thronged Trinity Church. The aisles were packed, and so great was the throng that the doors were closed and locked before Dr. Brooks began his sermon. Laymen were permitted for the first time in the history of the church to enter the chancel.

An effort was made to report these sermons by one of the most competent stenographers in New York, and he was compelled to give up in despair. So rapid was Dr. Brooks' utterance that it was impossible to maintain stenographic speed with him.

During this series the writer met Dr. Brooks one morning at the house of his brother, the Rev. Dr. Arthur Brooks, and in the course of conversation Dr. Brooks was asked about his method of sermon writing or composition. As he preached without notes and with such rapidity of utterance, it was apparent that it was not his custom to write out his sermons and then memorize them.

Dr. Brooks said he very rarely wrote out a sermon, and it often happened that he did not make up his mind what his sermon was to be about or even select his text until a few hours before delivery. In the case of this remarkable series, Dr. Brooks said that before he came to New York he had mapped out the general line of the addresses. Then each day, perhaps an hour or two before the time came for him to go to Trinity Church, he retired to his brother's study and, without using manuscript at all, turned over in his mind the subject for the day, dividing it into appropriate parts, considered the treatment of each division and had them well in mind before he entered the pulpit. That prevented diffuseness or wandering. Having the skeleton thus mentally prepared, it was entirely easy for him to develop it in the pulpit. In that sense, perhaps, Dr. Brooks was the most nearly extemporaneous of all preachers, excepting possibly Henry Ward Beecher, whose method was almost similar to that of Dr. Brooks.

Dr. Brooks said that the preparation for sermons should be a continuous one. He did not much believe in withdrawing to a library and preparing an elaborate essay. Constant study of the Bible and of sacred history and incessant meditation thereon enabled a clergyman always to be prepared to speak. Suggestions, hints, happy illustrations, moral lessons, should be continually impressing themselves upon the mind of one who endeavors to teach religious truths from the pulpit.

"When a clergyman is filled with the spirit of Christ, when he knows the Gospels not only by word, but by knowledge of the hidden truths contained in them; when he has had wide experience not only of books, but with men and women and with the life of the world, then he is constantly prepared to preach, and the only thing to be done in the composition of a sermon is the selection of a subject, the arrangement of the line of treatment, so that the sermon can be kept within reasonable limits of time."

That was Dr. Brooks' recipe for preaching; at least, it was a system which he adopted. It has been supposed that his remarkable rapidity of utterance was due to the enthusiasm and mighty pressure of thought which was upon him when he addressed a congregation, but the fact is that this rapidity was, perhaps, the only rhetorical effort in his sermon which was the result of determination. Early in life Dr. Brooks had an impediment in his speech, which he thought at one time would make it impossible for him to become a clergyman. He discovered, however, that when he talked with great rapidity he overcame this difficulty, and that he could overcome it in no other way. Therefore he diligently practiced rapidity of speech, trying to carry with it distinctness of enunciation, and he at last mastered this difficult task.

While among great American preachers his method of sermon preparation was almost identical with that of Beecher, it is, perhaps, more than a coincidence that the greatest of nonconformist British preachers, Mr. Spurgeon, should have also adopted precisely the same method of preparing his sermons.

The Longevity of Our Ministers.

In a recent issue the Rev. E. D. Green called attention to the fatality of late so common in our ministerial ranks. We are glad that he has done so, and hope his brethren will not allow the matter to end with his single correspondence. The present year has been abnormally destructive. The opening months threw their dark shadow across our churches, and the closing months are but little less somber. Ten ministers have died during the year. Mr. Green asks how this is. In the light of the promise that the days of our years shall be three-score years and ten, in the light of the fact that the earlier generation of preachers were hale as well as hoary—many of them dying with unfailing powers at an age to which those of the present generation seldom reach—we say, in the light of these facts, how are we to account for the brevity of the span of the present generation of our preachers? Do the circuits kill the preachers, or do the preachers kill themselves? We can not think the circuits kill them, unless the circuits kill them by their increased comforts. Indeed, circuits never afforded more comforts than they afford to-day. They were never more compact, never more hospitable, never easier to work. Now, we hold a theory that wide circuits and occasional appearances, rather than frequent appearances, in the same pulpit, will not only add stature to a man's body, but length to a man's life. Just as the centralization of city life shortens the generations of those who feed it from rural neighborhoods, so the centralization of circuit life shortens the life of those men who become the slaves of its system. A man who has to live in the open air five days out of seven, providing he is well shod and well fed (and our fathers wore good boots and sat down to good dinners—dinners which we, in our degenerate days, could not digest), such a man, we say, is good for the eighties. On the other hand, a man who only walks to and from a chapel, or, say, three or four chapels, within the radius of a mile of where he lives, spending the bulk of his time in a close study, forcing thought, first in his brain, then in painful sentences upon paper, and lastly committing it to memory, and then sweating to repeat it to his critical nineteenth century auditors, is not, and can not be, a healthy and long-lived man. Nor will he be a great man intellectually. A pedant he may be, a scholar he may be, a theologian he may be, but a great preacher he can not be, nor can he become a power among his flock.

Oxygen is a necessary element in the composition of a good sermon as well as in the constitution of a healthy frame. We wish to say no word against study, but study alone is a poor preparation for the pulpit. Christ was wont to come down from the mountains to preach and to teach, and we should have more preaching like unto his if more of our preachers followed his methods of preparation. There can be little doubt that the exotic and forcing methods of pulpit preparation are killing the men, as well as their preaching power. We seldom hear a sermon with the old ring, and just as seldom do we look upon a preacher with the old breadth of build, the old rosy countenance, and the old sonorous voice. We do not say the preaching of the day will not bear comparison with the preaching of a past generation. All we say is, it has not the power, the driving power, and this for a good reason, the men who now preach have not the physical power to drive their teaching home.

We are told that the demands of the age are not driving power, but thinking power. We can only account for this false estimate of the age's demand from the fact that decrepid men have set it going to screen their own feebleness. Thought we want, and must have. But it must be allied to strength. The leaders of the age are strong men—men of iron nerve and constitution. Even in the case of ascetics such as Newman and Manning, we had iron constitutions that never bent beneath the burden of years. Hence it is that, of all men, a leader in thought, a preacher and a teacher ought to preserve his physical powers in order that he may do justice to his intellectual and spiritual faculties.

But to return to our subject. There can be no doubt that modern circuit methods do not conduce to physical efficiency. It therefore becomes the duty of the preacher, as far as he can, to correct the method in its relation to his own health. No man should walk less than six miles a day, and every man should remember that coarse fare is healthiest fare. One of the first lessons a young minister should learn is that of mastering worry—worry about examinations, sermons, popularity, and change of circuits. Indeed, we want a professor who shall be expert in giving lessons in equanimity and calmness of disposition—a man who, imperturbable himself, can communicate his imperturbability to others. Again, a young minister should take lessons in diversion. He may follow, for too long a time the same course of life. In reading, thinking, visiting, preaching, the common and daily routine is unbroken. Churches are ignorant of this, and hence never allow the license that a highly-wrought brain from time to time needs. Certain games, once permissible to men like Luther, are now forbidden. Now, diversion may be had almost at any time, and in any manner. A great doctor has lately said if the brain-worker would for three or four intervals of five minutes each throw himself down upon the floor of his study, and allow each limb to lie as limp as a rag and as lifeless as those of a corpse, all attention being given to one arm, or one leg, until by imagination the said limb is supposed to be disconnected from the body, this being followed in turn by the other remaining limbs, in the course of five minutes the whole frame will become recharged with those forces used up in the stress and strain of work.

No, it is not our circuits that kill us; we kill ourselves, though the modern-living tendency towards circuit luxuriance goes far towards enervating our manhood. Many years ago, an old Wesleyan Methodist superintendent said to his young colleague (now an old man), "Remember three things are conducive to your health: strong boots, sound digestion, and the grace of God." The recipe answered splendidly seventy years ago. Let us return to the same remedy, and then perhaps we shall preach with the same power the old gospel.—Free Methodist (England).

Matter vs. Mind.

Reading a few pages in Thoreau, and laying the book down, we are anew conscious of the grave defect in so keen an observer. In one of his early volumes Herbert Spencer tells us it may be a fact that his neighbor's cat has five kittens, more or less, but he questions whether it be worth his while to charge his mind with it. How far is a knowledge of nature valuable or desirable which leaves out of view human nature? Is it worth while to ignore civilization and live in a wilderness to analyze the mysteries of a mudpout? Thoreau lived in the most critical period of American history, and left, beside his published works, something like thirty volumes of manuscript, diaries and journals of almost as many years. Yet while the liberties of mankind are imperilled, and the nations of the world are changing front amid the roar of cannon on the field of battle, he is calmly writing down year after year the date of the first dandelion and the color of the late huckleberry leaf.

To-day, in the name of Science, it is demanded that our whole theory of education be reversed, and that nature take the place of "the humanities." It seems to be felt that it were better to know the present life of an oyster than to ponder upon the future life of man. This purely physical science measures the outside of a man's skull, but ignores the chambers of his heart.

It is, after all, "a fad," and will have its day. Nothing can be more flat and commonplace than that science which drops man himself out of view. Science can not live apart from philosophy, and the visible universe ceases to interest the soul of man apart from the question of its origin and its end. Nothing can persuade the spirit of man to march around the shores of eternity counting pebbles. Dignify the knowledge of material nature by what terms you choose, beautify its presentation by the witchery of rhetoric, man is still conscious that there is something nobler in himself, to which all the outer world must be related.

The nature-writers of to-day are, we trust, preparing for a class to succeed themselves, who shall, without being less accurate as photographers, be more perceptive as poets. What nature needs is not so much a worshipper as an interpreter, one who will use the researches of the biologist, the chemist, and the astronomer as the means of at once illustrating and enlarging the greatness of the human soul.—New York Evangelist.

Every man having a beard should keep it an even and natural color, and if it is not so already, use Buckingham's Dye and appear tidy.

Learning gives us a fuller conviction of the imperfections of our nature; which, one would think, might dispose us to modesty: for the more a man knows, the more he discovers his ignorance.—Collier.

Catarrh, Heart Failure, Paralysis of the Throat

"I Thank God and Hood's Sarsaparilla for Perfect Health."

"For the benefit of suffering humanity I wish to state a few facts: For several years I have suffered from catarrh and heart failure, getting so bad I could not work and

I had a very bad spell of paralysis of the throat some time ago. My throat seemed closed and I could not swallow. The doctors said it was caused by heart failure, and gave medicine, which I took, but it did not seem to do me any good. My wife urged me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, telling me of Mr. Joseph C. Smith, who had been

Rev. John A. Ellis.

It is with a sad heart that we announce to the Mississippi brethren the death of their co-laborer in the Master's vineyard, Rev. John A. Ellis. Bro. Ellis had been in a low state of health for a long time, but yet he did not cease entirely from his loved employ, until his Lord released him from earth and transferred him to a realm of larger opportunities and brighter rewards. He died Feb. 16. We have no particulars. His remains were interred at Amite City. We hope that some one of his brethren will prepare a tribute to the memory of this saintly minister of Jesus Christ.

Death of Rev. Jno. A. Ellis.

I have just returned from Amite City, La., and the burial of Rev. Jno. A. Ellis, one of the oldest and most distinguished members of the Mississippi Conference. He died in the parsonage at Moss Point on the night of the fifteenth instant, after an illness of only two weeks. On Sunday, Jan. 26, he preached with unusual power a sermon he had prepared with great care. During the service he was taken ill and never recovered. His end was peace—his last words being, "There is rest." A faithful, self-denying preacher and a Christian of symmetrical and almost flawless character has fallen on sleep. A large company followed him to the silent tomb. I will ask the privilege of paying at another time an extended tribute to my glorified friend.

BRIEFS.

Our pastor at Carondelet Street Church, Rev. W. H. LaPrade, has been passing through the waters. During the whole of January he was laid up by sickness. Now he is called to mourn the loss of his mother, who died last Thursday, Feb. 16. We do sympathize most deeply with our brother and family. The saddest day we ever had was when the news came, "Mother is dead." Sister LaPrade had been sick for some time, but passed quietly and painlessly into the realm of joy and beauty and health. She was a good woman, and her record gives assurance of large reward in the everlasting kingdom.

We have read of nothing more wonderful than the account given last week of Mr. Gladstone's great speech in the House of Commons, on the occasion of his introduction of Irish Home Rule bill. That a man in his eighty-fourth year should be able to stand on his feet between three and four hours, and pour out a continual stream of words in explanation of the complicated measure, is a wonderful exhibition of physical endurance and intellectual force without a parallel. And when the statement is made that the House sat entranced during those hours, what a splendid tribute it was to the oratorical power of the octogenarian statesman! In contemplating such an intellectual and physical feat, admiration easily glides into wonder. Mr. Gladstone, in his eighty-fourth year, is the Titan of the world's forum.

The Lenten Season

Last week a great number of Christian people entered upon their annual fast season, which they will observe until the Easter festival. This fast is of very old observance, dating back before the time of Irenæus, who mentions it as being kept before his day. It is called "Lent" from the fact that is observed in the Spring of the year; lencten being the Anglo-Saxon word for the Springtime. It is evident from the history that in the time of our Lord and his apostles, and for some considerable time after, fasts were voluntary acts with the individual. In the early days of the church, individuals set apart days of fasting for their own benefit, and these days were generally Wednesdays and Fridays until three o'clock in the afternoon. These days were known as dies stationum—that is, sentry days, when the Christian soldier stood sentry on the watch against the approach of evil. This custom seems to accord more with the teaching of our Lord than the modern fast. For while Jesus gave no express command to fast, the fact that he gave directions as to the manner of observing a fast seems to sanction the practice. His rules in regard to it, however, appear to us to be directly against the modern manner. According to Christ, the person fasting must not "appear to men to fast;" according to the rule now, the matter is blazed abroad as much as possible, and a great noise is made to attract attention to this custom.

The forty days' fast of Lent appears to us to have arisen in this way: Among the Jews the greatest feast was the Passover, because it commemorated the greatest fact in Jewish history. The greatest fact in Christian history occurred at the time of the Jewish Passover, viz.: the death and resurrection of Jesus. So stupendous an event and one so far-reaching in its beneficial results ought to be most worthily commemorated. Hence everything must be done to render the Easter festival as glorious as possible. But people engaged in the cares of business and absorbed in the gaieties of society could not find time for proper preparation for entering upon the celebration of the sacred duties of the Easter week. Hence it was ordained that a fast should precede that week, during which period of fasting the people could make that preparation. At first the period of fasting was different in different places. In some places only a few days were observed; in some, three weeks; in some, six weeks. In other places the custom obtained of beginning the fast seven weeks before Easter, but was observed in three periods of five days each. Some thought that thirty-six days—a tithe of the year—should be observed. Finally it was settled that as our Lord fasted forty days, this should be the rule in governing the time of the lenten fast. So from about the close of the seventh century forty days has been observed as Lent.

In regard to the manner of observing this fast, there has been as great diversity of practice as in regard to the time of keeping it. In the Book of Homilies of the English Church we have this testimony on this point: "They have not all one uniform order in fasting. For some do fast and abstain from both fish and flesh. Some, when they fast, eat nothing but fish. Others there are which when they fast eat of all water-fowls, as well as of fish, grounding themselves upon Moses, that such fowl have their substance of the water, as the fishes have. Some others, when they fast, will neither eat herbs nor eggs. Some fasters there are who eat nothing but dry bread. Others, when they fast, eat nothing at all; no, not so much as dry bread. Some fast from all manner of food till night, and then eat, without making any choice or difference of meats."

So it seems to have been left with the individual as to the extent of his fast, though the common idea is that fasting is perfect abstinence from food every fast day until evening.

The other requirements of the lenten fast seem to be public worship of some kind every day, with frequent celebrations of the Lord's Supper; public amusements are prohibited; celebrations of birthdays and marriages are held to be unsuitable; increased diligence in charitable deeds is enjoined.

Such, in brief, is the lenten fast upon which thousands of professed Christians entered last Wednesday. We have no disposition to criticise them, but we think it a wide departure from the simplicity of the gospel.

Reading in the Pulpit.

We do not intend to find fault with the brethren. Only a faultless man is justified in finding fault with another. Nor do we propose to criticise them severely, because we are not above nor below criticism ourselves. We are just going to point out a mistake which some of our preachers make, which mistake is limiting and hedging in an influence which ought to be continually widening. And we point it out because it can very easily be remedied, and we feel sure that most of those who make it will see that a remedy is in reach, and will use it.

Some of our preachers make the impression upon their congregation that they really do not know how to read! As a rule now, the people are readers and they know what reading is, and when the preacher opens the Bible and reads a chapter or a Psalm in such a manner that nobody can understand a sentence in it, he creates the impression that he can't read correctly. There are preachers who make this mistake. And, strange to say, they do not always belong to what is called the less educated class. Some of them are A. B.'s.; some A. M.'s.; and some even have a D. D. tacked to their names. We have heard some of these educated preachers read a Psalm in a way that a ten-years-old boy would be ashamed of. This is a mistake and a disgrace to the preacher. It is a mistake, however, which can be corrected and a disgrace which may be rolled off the very next time he enters the pulpit.

We are quite sure that the reason for this mistake is in the fact that the part of public service which consists in reading the Holy Scriptures is not regarded as a very important part. It is too often looked upon as an introductory exercise to pass away the time until the people shall have settled down in quiet to hear the sermon. This view excludes any special preparation for this part of the service, and the preacher not infrequently selects his Scripture lessons after he enters the pulpit. And he just as often selects passages that are inapt to the occasion, and that contain sentences which rather surprise the reader himself. This sort of a Scripture reader does not read to edification, because he don't himself know what he is reading. We take it to be true that no man can read correctly, and, therefore, to the edifying of his hearers, who does not know what he is reading. And he can not know it, if he puts off selecting his lessons until he goes into the pulpit.

To correct this mistake, then, all the preacher has to do, is to select his lessons and study them before he enters the sacred desk. Of course, this brings additional labor and requires more time to effect it; but when it is done, there comes ample remuneration in the fact that the hearers are delighted and edified and the reader himself filled with refreshment of soul. The Word of God ought not to be mumbled over, nor drawled out, nor repeated with a break-neck speed. It is too sacred a thing to be treated in that way. There is great common sense in it all, and it ought to be read so that the sense shall be plain to the people. "It is profitable for instruction," and it ought not to be read in a manner which will render it uninstructive. Surely the preacher who remembers that the Scripture is the Word of the Lord, by which the people are to be brought to salvation, will neglect no pains to be able to read it correctly in the congregation. By studying his lesson carefully to get the sense, and then giving the proper intonation and emphasis when he reads, he will find his audience becoming very much interested in this part of the service. Instead of waiting until this part of the service is over before coming into the sanctuary, he will find the people flocking in to be in time for this most profitable and interesting exercise.

Religious Literature in Mississippi.

Some time since, while reading one of our excellent church papers, I came across this editorial paragraph, which I reproduce for the benefit of all whom it may concern:

Have you given your church paper a thorough presentation from your pulpit and a personal canvass among your people? No work of our ministry is more obligatory or important. "It is impossible," said Mr. Wesley, "for a people to grow in grace unless they give themselves to reading." That was a wise observation, in the light of which we fear there is not much growth in grace in many homes in all our land . . . How can they make intelligent members, and keep in touch with the onward progress of the church? It is impossible—hence their leanness and indifference.

In the face of these strong, undeniable assertions, let me present some equally strong and undeniable facts concerning the circulation of our literature to the prayerful consideration of Mississippi Methodism. May we remember that "faith without works is dead, being alone!"

There are in the two Mississippi Conferences in round numbers 80,000 communicants. This represents, at least, 20,000 families. There ought to be not less than 20,000 Methodist church papers. Is this the case? Let us see. There are of NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATES 4,328—say, 4 500. Of Nashville Advocates, 1,800—say, 2,000, and of miscellaneous 500, making a total of only 7,000 church papers taken. Let it be observed I have made an allowance of 900 papers for increase in the subscription list of the Nashville and New Orleans Advocates, and for other Methodist papers taken. This leaves 13,000 Methodist families in the State of Mississippi without a Methodist paper, or 62,000 of the 80,000 communicants. Let it be remembered further that allowance has not been made for a single itinerant preacher taking one of these papers, nor for a single family taking more than one, while it is a fact that nearly or quite everyone of the 300 pastors take both the Nashville and New Orleans Advocates, making 600 papers, and many take as many as five or six. It would hardly be amiss to say that the ministry take nearly 1,000 of these 7,000 papers. This greatly changes the above figures.

With these facts before us is it a wonder we advance so slowly in some departments of church work? No; but it is a wonder we have advanced so rapidly. If every pastor would make it his duty to press and press the claims of his church papers, until every family took them, there would be an impetus forward similar to the swan-like air-ship in "Sam Williams" as it passed over the university town of Cosmos. Why not try it?

LARETA.

Louisiana Products—1892.

Our good friend, Hon. H. C. Newsom, Commissioner of Agriculture for Louisiana, has favored us with his annual "Report on Acreage of the Principal Crops by Parishes for the Year 1892." As many of our readers will not see this report, we give some figures from it which will interest all tillers of the soil. Louisiana is divided into fifty-nine parishes. Some of these are very large, others quite small. Of these fifty-nine parishes we find that six produced no cotton at all. These six are: Lafourche, Orleans, Plaquemines, St. James, St. John Baptist and St. Mary. The fifty-three parishes had 1,101,070 acres in cotton, which produced 498,526 bales, which was not quite a half-bale to the acre. Of the fifty-nine parishes, eighteen produced no sugar at all. The forty-one parishes had 209,000 acres in sugar cane, which produced 398,567 hogsheads of sugar, and 384,681 barrels of molasses, containing 50 gallons each. All the parishes had 1,201,780 acres in corn, from which was gathered 18,747,773 bushels. Twenty-eight parishes planted no rice. The thirty-one parishes which raised rice planted 192,786 acres, which produced 179,047,701 pounds. There were 47 237 acres planted in sweet potatoes, which brought forth 2,869,099 bushels. The acreage of Irish potatoes was 24,198 acres and the yield was 736,960 bushels. Seven parishes planted no oats. The fifty-two parishes produced 707,374 bushels of oats from 53 317 acres. Tensas parish raises the greatest number of bales of cotton, which was 30,470. Avoyelles comes next with 28,680 bales. St. Mary parish produces the biggest sugar crop, footing up 65,110 hogsheads of sugar and 58,599 barrels of molasses. Assumption is next with 42,800 hogsheads of sugar and 34,256 barrels of molasses. In the matter of corn, Claiborne parish is ahead, having harvested 728,415 bushels. Lafourche is next with 681,528 bushels. Calcasieu leads all in rice products, the crop reaching over 40,000,000 pounds. Caddo and DeSoto are ahead on sweet potatoes, each parish having raised 124 320 bushels. East Baton Rouge produced 74,624 bushels of Irish potatoes, with Orleans next, with 50,400. Bienville produced 67,600 bushels of oats, and Claiborne next with 54,791 bushels.

We take it that this is a pretty good show—enough to demonstrate that our people can live more at home if they will "apply themselves thereto." With corn and potatoes and rice and oats, which grow well and produce good crops, why should our people want for bread and meat to eat and stock to use in farming?

One reason why some Christians have so little comfort in their religious life is that they think about themselves too much, and about doing good to other people too little. Too much thinking about ourselves begets selfishness, and that poisons all the springs of happiness. What has been aptly termed the "over-sense of one's own personality" is a thing which, if too diligently cultivated, will strangle all the finer impulses of the nature and finally make a man "a good for nothing." The cure for this dire and wasting disease, which is prostrating the energy and hope of many Christians, is to become absorbed with the desire to be of some use to others. By divine help compel your religion "to seek and to save" others, and you will never again have "a spell of the blues."

NOTES.

The Methodist Times, of London, says: "The Methodists will never reach the masses until they adopt generally the practice of street preaching."

Says the Southern philosopher:

When you have a thing to say,
Say it! don't take half a day!
Life is short—a fleeting vapor;
Don't you fill the whole big paper
With a tale that, at a pinch,
Could be crowded in an inch!

A writer in the New York Evangelist thus describes Phillips Brooks' preaching:

He may be compared to the Indian juggler who plants a seed in the sight of the audience, and in a few moments displays a full-grown plant. Phillips Brooks starts with a kernel of truth and before he finishes his sermon, you have a great tree, with branches and roots running off in every direction and fruits dropping from every bough.

There is a passage of Scripture which we think has been misapprehended and misapplied. Too many of us get a wrong idea of the words: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." The general idea of reward for service is correct, but the mistake is in the notion of the reward. "Ruler over many things" can only mean opportunity for larger service. It simply means a wider field and more abundant labors. The reward is not a release from service, but in removal to a place of larger service and greater responsibilities. Study it out, and see if we are not correct.

One of the first things a pastor should find out is the working capacity of each member of his church. Then give each his work.

Speaking on this topic, Dr. Cuyler well says: "Next to the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, what our churches most need is the development of all the members. While pastors are often overworked, a large proportion of the people are underworked. In every church hive there is a lamentable lot of drones. In seasons of revival nearly every member is alive and busy; but what we call a 'revival' ought to be the normal condition of every healthy church."

The Richmond Advocate, in a leader on "How Readest Thou?" has this pertinent paragraph, which we commend to certain of our readers:

Between the judiciously selected phrases of the careful writer who is walking, with most deliberate step, upon the margin of a delicate subject are injected whole lines of meaning furnished by the prejudices, the excited passions, the jaundiced preposessions of many a reader. Such a reader asks, like Calaphas, "What further need have we of witnesses?" We have, say they, all we wanted from his own lips, or, at any rate, from his own pen. But take his words; give them fair, honest interpretation; they are far, indeed, from what they are charged with. What was behind them only the omniscient God surely knows; but whatever it may have been, it was unsaid.

One of the strangest of things is that people with intellects to be developed and strengthened and refined will pass hours and sometimes days in a pastime which can contribute absolutely nothing to intellectual growth. Playing at cards is pre-eminently a pastime of this kind. It helps in no way whatever to the improvement of mind or morals, and it does seem that no man or woman of sense will squander time upon it. One of the very worst things about card playing is that it destroys all taste for reading and saps Christian vitality. How a follower of Christ can waste time and arrest mental and spiritual growth by this amusement is one of the mysteries of iniquity which only the devil can explain.

"Diligent in business" is one of the wisest of sayings. A man or woman who keeps busy can hardly be successfully tempted to evil. At any rate, such an one is less liable to fall under the power of temptation than an idle person. And then, besides this negative quality of industry, there is the positive quality that diligence is itself a blessing. There is no consolousness so sweet and satisfactory as that which comes from duty done. Doubts and fears rarely trouble the diligent. Apply this to Christian life and work, and it is also true. Those who are busy for Christ and humanity are very strongly fortified and can easily resist the assaults of Satan. Then let everybody keep busy in secular and spiritual things.

Truth and duty are always wedded. There is no truth which has not its corresponding duty; and there is no duty which has not its corresponding truth. Every word of God includes these two—revelation and commandment. He who lives by every word of God is a man who is continually seeing new truth and accepting the duties that arise out of it. The real first question that you want to ask about any new man whom you meet and desire to measure, is whether he has this capacity, whether if God showed him that something was true, and out of that truth there issued some duty for him, he would be able and willing to put his comfort aside, and take the duty and perform it. That is the real fundamental mark of manhood, to live, not by bread, but by the word of God. All other distinctions between man and man are superficial and insignificant.—Rev. Phillips Brooks.

Important Notice.

To the Members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference:

I wish to call especial attention to the depleted condition of our contingent fund set apart for Conference expenses. Unless speedy and enlarged action is taken to relieve it thoroughly weak state, it will be impossible for this fund to do what it is expected to do—and what there is no other provision for doing—meet the expenses of our next annual meeting.

Our missionary year is approaching the close of its last quarter, and our finances are below the average along all lines; so that we earnestly entreat for a grand rally—the fulfilling of pledges, collecting back dues, and payment of contingent fund, in order that we may wind up the year's business in shape. But I beg to repeat that we are specially behind with contingent fund. Who will understand that this notice calls on some one to do something?

A Preachers' Meeting.

WINONA DISTRICT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

At the urgent request of many of the preachers of this district, I call a meeting of all the preachers of Winona district to meet at Carrollton on Thursday, at 9 o'clock A. M., on March 30, 1893, to take steps to organize a preachers' meeting for the mutual improvement and efficiency of the preachers as well as the work of the district. I desire a full attendance, and urge that each preacher come determined to help make such organization a success.

For the success of the first meeting, I suggest that the following brethren prepare a paper on the subject in connection with their name:

Observance of the Sabbath: Consequences of Its Violation—R. M. Davis.

The Prayer Meeting: And Shall the Preacher Lead?—Jno. R. D. King.

The Pastoral Instruction of Children—Geo. H. Lipscomb.

How Shall We Study the Bible?—T. Cameron.

Revivals: How to Procure Them—L. M. Lipscomb.

Evangelists and Their Work—J. Ritchey.

How Can We Make the Sunday-schools More Efficient?—C. B. Ames.

The Gambling Evil, and Its Remedy—R. A. Meek.

How to Raise Money for Church Purposes—J. T. Howell.

On Epworth Leagues—O. L. Savage.

The Necessity of Circulating Religious Literature—E. H. McNabb.

Let each preacher name six of the most helpful books for a pastor to own either for reference or study.

These organizations have proved very beneficial in other districts, and we may justly expect much good from this in our district.

On the Wing.

Matherville is the home of Rev. J. N. Ware, P. C., of the Clarke circuit. February 4 and 5 was the time of the first Quarterly Conference. Rev. T. L. Mellen, P. E., was on hand, and graciously gave to this scribe the Sunday service. The weather was somewhat favorable, the congregation was not so large as one in my situation could have desired, but the collection was creditable, $24 50 being raised in cash and subscriptions.

Matherville itself is a pleasant little village on the edge of the prairie belt, eight miles east of Shuhuta. Its leading spirit is Mr. J. N. Mathers, a prosperous farmer, merchant and turpentine distiller. We were royally entertained by him and the other good people of this community. Ware, Chambers and Mellen together tip the beam at seven hundred and two pounds. It required two teams to haul us, but Bro. Ware was equal to the occasion.

At DeSoto we preached to a large congregation gathered together by Pastor Bradford. Many faces were there that we had looked upon in other days; many new faces were there; some of the old friends were at rest. We had an interesting occasion. The brethren contributed to our endowment $33—$10 of this they desired to have applied to their pastor's note.

Tuesday night found us at State Line. Here Watkins had gathered quite a harvest, and here the notes were all paid; yet they said, We are for the education of our boys, and added $13 to our fund.

Wednesday night we spent with Bro. Bell at Buckatunna. Here we found a company of faithful men who were striving to build up all the interests of their town. Some of them were among the first to pay anything toward the endowment of Millsaps College. We preached to them, we talked to them, and left the town with an addition of $10.

Buckatunna is destined to become quite a trading point. The Robertson Mills are situated about four miles from the village, and to the east is Healing Springs.

Mrs. Hooge helped us so generously that we can not forbear this personal mention. Brethren, help us now. Pay up your notes. Give us an additional amount.

An Appeal.

I am struggling to build a parsonage on Zion circuit. The house is up and ready for the shingles. The people have done about all they can do with the exception of some who never do anything for the church. It will require about $100 to complete the house, with me to do the most of the work. Will every Sabbath-school scholar within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference send me a nickel to aid in completing the house which is so much needed?

Now, dear children, this is a very small favor, it seems to me, that most anyone could grant it. Well, you say, what good could a nickel do? Taken by itself, I will admit that it can't do much; but put 16,240 nickels together (the number of Sunday-school scholars there are within the bounds of the Conference), and you have $812, enough to build two parsonages. Now, children, please send me a nickel through either your pastor or superintendent to Escatoupa, Jackson county, Miss., and God will bless you for it. The work will have to stop if I do not get help from somewhere. The school at this place contributed $2.35.

Yours in Christian love,

LITTLE THINGS.

A good-by kiss is a little thing,
With your hand on the door to go,
But it takes the venom out of the sting
Of a thoughtless word or a cruel fling
That you made an hour ago.

A kiss of greeting is sweet and rare,
After the toil of the day,
But it smooths the furrows out of the care,
And lines on the forehead you once called fair,
In the years that have flown away.

'Tis a little thing to say, "You are kind,"
"I love you, my dear," each night,
But it sends a thrill through the heart, I find;
For love is tender, as love is blind,
As we climb life's rugged height.

We starve each other for love's caress,
We take, but do not give;
It seems so easy some soul to bless,
But we dole love grudgingly, less and less,
Till 'tis bitter and hard to live.

Celebrating Birthdays.

It is a lovely custom, that of celebrating the family birthdays. It costs so little, and means so much for future memory.

One dollar will pay for a flowering plant, a little book and a bunch of cakes and apples. If mother makes the loaf cake, brother buys the walnuts to "nail" the top, and sister gets the ten little candles to light it all round, the dollar may be spent for a quadruple silver-plated knife, and a pretty necktie.

This world is not a vale of tears, nor were the people in it intended to be miserable and stingy. God's sunbeams dance and sparkle as brightly on the bare kitchen floor as upon the drawing-room carpet, and the cottager's child should be, and has a right to be, made as happy as the millionaire's. It is the spirit within rather than the materials without that makes real happiness.

Childhood's capacity for pleasure is immeasurable. It is good to be a child, and it is wise to encourage the habit of making the home cheerful and its inmates happy. The features may be ugly and the hands hard and soil-stained, but the heart may be sweet and tender and the soul big and glorious.

A dear little woman in New York, who has to perform miracles in economy to make ends meet, has never missed celebrating the birthdays that have come round to six children in the last eighteen years. Often the merriment has been made with a few dimes. But she has made puddings and pies to eat, odd little things to trim up a bureau or a writing desk, something to wear, or the presentation of an old keepsake, so very dear to the giver.

She has given to one a cup and saucer tied with a bit of ribbon, to he the child's very own and sacred to his use; she has provided a very wonderful meat pie, and the honored child has served it; she has baked a delicate cake for a tea party for sister to preside over, and when father's birthday comes round guess what he gets? A letter from everybody in the house, sent through the mails! Even baby is among the correspondents, and for days there is something to tell about the way the fat little fellow held the pencil and tried to swallow the stamp when the envelope was sealed and ready to be posted.

The Spirit of Doubt.

The spirit of doubt is a spirit of evil skilled in the guileful art of deluding emotional minds into habits of self-torture. Its methods is to suggest the improbability that they are children of God because of the number and magnitude of their past sins, the persistence and strength of their worldly affections, the impure images which haunt their imaginations, and their lack of abiding joy. By dwelling much on such suggestions, these sensitive souls are held back from acts of faith and love and lured into habits of self-accusation until their trust in Christ becomes as a slender flower shaken by a pitiless wind, and their hope of eternal life is eclipsed by the groundless imagination that God has forsaken them. Thus, as it was with the devout Alfred Vaughan, their way seems to lead "through the darksome desert of chaos and ancient night." To beat back this tormenting spirit the distressed believer must use the tried weapon of stubborn faith, saying to his invisible accuser, "Yes, I am, as you say, a great sinner, even the chief of sinners; but Christ is so great a Savior that if all the sins of the world could be charged to my account, he could and would forgive me, seeing that he is 'the Lamb of God' who took away the sin of the world." Pascal gives a stepping-stone to this conquering faith when he represents Christ as saying to the doubting soul: "Console thyself; thou wouldst not seek me if thou hadst not found me!"—Zion's Herald

WOMEN AND THE USE OF MONEY.—Would it not be wise if some exercises in the mysteries of money were added to the curriculum of every girl's studies? A boy finds it all out by actual contact with the public as soon as he is out and a part of it; but a girl may become a mature woman, shrinking then through the habit of long protection, and be thrown on the mercies of the world with her money to fall the prey of the first cheat and cozen. She is taught at school the spectral of the stars, and the map of stars; what pity that she should not be instructed in the workings of life on the planet where she lives!

That a knowledge of the nature and meaning and care of money should be made a part of every girl's education is growing more and more evident in this age of enlargement and prosperity, which puts money into the hands of so many women. And in the coming century, the woman's century, as it is already called, in which so many women will be workers and earners of money, it is all the more important, in order that they may be neither handicapped nor too far outstripped, that they should be well instructed as to business movements and investments, that they may be directed in the right way before they set out to earn.—Harper's Bazar.

"Quit You Like Men."

The thing at which our Lord is ever aiming in all his dealings with us is the production of true manhood. What is manhood? It is not the ability to lift great burdens like Hercules, nor strike a blow like Corbett. It is not the gift to dramatize like Shakespeare, nor paint like Raphael, nor carve like Angelo, nor build like Wren, nor philosophize like Hegel, nor speak like Webster, nor invent like Edison. Brilliant endowments do not represent manhood. Extraordinary talent does not add a feather's weight to it. Great geniuses are often great rogues. That which makes manhood is character. It has a moral quality. It has to do with the motives and purposes of life. It is a sanctified disposition, bridled tongue, subdued passions, and a burning desire to be useful in every good cause. True manhood is forgetfulness of self. It is submissive in sorrow. It is patient when assailed. It is the greatness of soul which forgives enemies. It is Christ-likeness.

He who really desires manhood may have it. The Holy Spirit will aid us in our struggles out of self. He will help us to put sin under our feet. His power will lift us up to a broader life. Then will we show forth the fruits of the Spirit, which are joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. All may have this priceless heritage who will allow him to have right of way in heart and life. Oh, shall we not gladly yield to-day? Manhood is the birthright of every soul. It is not a quality which may appear only once in a long while. It is a flower which may bloom upon the stalk of every life. The weakest may become strong. The most timid may become courageous. The thoroughly selfish may be filled with concern for others. The most revengeful may overflow with charity and forgiveness. This is something which we can not do for ourselves. Only the strong arm of God reaching down into the depths of our depravity and weakness can reach and rescue us. Only his grace can help us win in this struggle for manhood. But his grace is sufficient.—Epworth Herald.

A GENIUS FOR HELPING FOLKS.—"There is a man," said his neighbor, speaking of a village carpenter, "who has done more good, I really believe, in this community, than any man who ever lived in it. He can not talk very well in prayer meeting, and he doesn't often try. He isn't worth two thousand dollars, and it's very little he can put down on subscription papers for any other object. But a new family never moves into the village that he does not find them out, to give them a neighborly welcome and offer any little service he can render. He is usually on the lookout to give strangers a seat in his pew in church. He is always ready to watch with a sick neighbor, and look after his affairs for him; and I've sometimes thought he and his wife kept house-plants in the Winter just for the sake of being able to send little bouquets to invalids. He finds time for a pleasant word for every child he meets, and you'll always see them climbing into his one horse wagon when he has no other load. He really seems to have a genius for helping folks in all sorts of common ways, and it does me good every day just to meet him on the streets."—Christian Observer.

BREVITY.—The demand for brevity is everywhere heard. Sermon, story, poem, must be short. To be eloquent, witty, pointed, in a newspaper paragraph or a five-minute speech, is the coveted art. It is even observed that God, when he created the universe, obeyed the law of brevity; for he said, with sublime directness, "Let there be light!" Cæsar's "Veni, vidi, vici!" has been the admiration of all succeeding ages. The religions of the world have been condensed into mighty words. There are words of weight and momentum that we know are half battles; and the greatest thoughts of all time have been put into words, not into addresses or a dribble of commonplace. The great orations of antiquity were mainly short, and for this reason they have been remembered. Paul's sermon on Mars Hill was condensed into a paragraph, but none other save that of the Great Exemplar was ever more memorable. The human memory is a defective and imperfect thing, capable of holding but few consecutive impressions, and even those must be deeply stamped to be retained.—Christian Register.

IS CHRISTIANITY TRUE?—"Is Christianity true?" is a query strongly pressed on the thought of the age by men who take pride in their knowledge of science and in their philosophical speculations. But to the man who has tested Christian truth by personal experience this query is as satisfactorily answered as the divine character of Christ was to the man whose eyes had been opened. He could say: "I was blind, I now see. Christ opened mine eyes. How can I doubt his divinity?" In like manner the modern man can say: "I was a wretched sinner, steeped in the love of evil. I prayed to Christ. He pardoned me, taught me to hate sin, to love him, to love humanity, and to live a pure life. How can I doubt the truth of his religion? And what he has done for me he has done, and is still doing for millions. Could all these moral transformations be wrought by a mythical Christ and by a system of falsehoods?" Nay! nay! No human soul ever was, or ever can be, regenerated by a myth or by a lie.—Zion's Herald.

WOMAN'S WORK.—A woman has a personal work and duty, relating to her own home, and a public work and duty, which is also the expansion of that. The woman's work for her own home is to secure its order, comfort and loveliness. The woman's duty as a member of the commonwealth is to assist in the ordering, in the comforting, and in the beautiful adornment of the State. What the woman is to be within her gates as the center of order, the balm of distress and the mirror of beauty, that she is to be also without her gates, where order is more difficult, distress more imminent, and loveliness more rare.—Ruskin.

If you are getting lazy, watch James. If your faith is below par, read Paul. If you are impatient, sit down quietly and have a talk with Job. If you are just a little strong-headed, go and see Moses. If you are getting weak-kneed, take a look at Elijah. If there is no song in your heart, listen to David. If you are getting sordid, spend a while with Isaiah. If you feel chilly, get the beloved disciple to put his arms around you. If you are losing sight of the future, climb up to Revelation and get a glimpse of the promised land.—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

A little six-year-old boy overheard his aunt remark to his mama that their neighbor Mrs. Smith's parlor carpet was so ugly it really made her sick to look at it. The little boy improved the first moment to visit neighbor Smith and ask to see her parlor carpet. "Certainly, Jamie, come in; this is the parlor carpet—but why do you wish to see it?" "'Cause," said Jamie, "Aunt Jane said it made her sick to look at it, and I want to see if it makes me sick."

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

HOW HE HELPED HIMSELF.

Help yourself, help yourself, little boy, do!
Don't wait for others to wait upon you.
Grandma was holding her afternoon chat,
Knitting and rocking away as she sat,
"Look at the birds, how they build their own nests;
Watch the brown bees always toiling their best,
Put your own hands to the plough, if you'd thrive;
Don't waste your moments in wishing, but strive."
Up in her face looked a mischievous elf,
"Don't forget, darling," said she, "help yourself."
Afternoon shadows grew drowsy and deep,
Grandma was tranquilly lulled in sleep;
Nothing was heard but the old farm-house clock
Plodding along with its warning tick-tock.
Out from the pantry there came a loud crash:
Pussy jumped up from the hearth in a flash.
Back to her chair stood this practical boy
Steeped to the ears in jam, custard and joy.
Frightened, he cried, "Please, I've upset the shelf, Grandma, I minded, I did help myself."

To Japan.

THE TRAIN AMONG THE ROCKIES.

An extra engine was used to steady the train through the mountains, and an observation car was attached. To describe all the peaks, gorges, dashing rivers and wonderful glaciers would keep you away from Japan too long. One of the glaciers seen is estimated to equal all those of Switzerland combined. Much of the time the way was more than 4,000 feet above the level of either ocean, and snow and ice were all around that day of late June; and yet, ever and anon, some huge form would lift itself above us to the height of more than a mile. Indeed, but for an occasional village, or hunter's hut, the solitary grandeur of the mountains would be oppressive.

Stephen is the station at the summit, and here I run the risk of making my article longer than usual by asking you to read from the guide-book as follows:

From here the line descends rapidly, passing the beautiful Wapta Lake at Hector, and crossing the deep gorge of the Wapta, or Kicking Horse, river just beyond. The scenery is now sublime and almost terrible. The line clings to the mountain-side at the left, and the valley on the right rapidly deepens until the river is seen as a gleaming thread a thousand feet below. Looking to the north, one of the grandest mountain-valleys in the world stretches away to the north, with great, white, glacier-bound peaks on either side. Looking ahead the dark angular peak of Mt. Field is seen. On the left the Duomo-like head of Mt. Stephen (8,000 feet above the valley), and the spires of Cathedral Mountain still further to the left, occasionally appear over the tree-tops. Soon the slope of Mt. Stephen is reached, and on its shoulder, almost overhead, is seen a shining green glacier, 800 feet in thickness, which is slowly pressing forward and over a vertical cliff of great height. Passing through a short tunnel, and hugging the base of the mountain closely, the main peak is lost to view for a few minutes; but as the train turns sharply away, it soon reappears with startling suddenness, and when its highly colored dome and spires are illuminated by the sun, it seems to rise as a flame shooting into the sky.

Two miles beyond Field, very lofty, glacier-bearing heights are seen at the north. The line rises from the flats of the Wapta (or Kicking Horse), and after crossing a high bridge over the Otter-tail river (whence one of the finest views is obtained), descends again to the Wapta, whose narrow valley divides the Otter-tail and Van Horne ranges. The line which has gradually curved towards the south since crossing the summit at Stephen, runs due south from here to Leanchoil, where the Beaverfoot river comes in from the south and joins the Wapta. At the left, the highest peaks of the Otter-tail Mountains rise abruptly to an immense height; and, looking south, a magnificent range of peaks extends in orderly array towards the southeast as far as the eye can reach. These are the Beaverfoot Mountains. At the right Mt. Hunter pushes its huge mass forward like a wedge between the Otter-tail and Beaverfoot ranges. The river turns abruptly against its base and plunges into the lower Kicking Horse canyon, down which it disputes the passage with the railway. The canyon rapidly deepens until, beyond Palliser, the mountain sides become vertical, rising straight up thousands of feet, and within an easy stone's throw from wall to wall. Down this vast chasm go the railway and the river together, the former crossing from side to side to ledges cut out of the solid rock, and twisting and turning in every direction, and every minute or two plunging through projecting angles of rock which seem to close the way. With the towering cliffs almost shutting out the sunlight and the roar of the river and the train, increased an hundredfold by the echoing walls, the passage of this terrible gorge will never be forgotten.

MR. EDITOR: I, like many others, have found the "children's corner" very interesting, and would like my writing to fill a small space. I am one of the girls of the Seventh Street Orphan's Home. We have Sunday-school here Sunday afternoons, and we are always glad to meet our kind teachers, and to hear the Word of our dear Lord and Savior. We have a great many little children, who help to form our circle, each one trying to learn some lesson that will be pleasing to our Creator. My teacher is Mrs. Belle Perkins, who is a lovely Christian women. If any of the readers of the ADVOCATE would like to know who our kind and faithful superintendent is, they can find out by solving this acrostic, and the first letter of each answer, if properly arranged, will spell his name. What did Jacob call the name of the place where God spoke with him? Who was Isaac's wife? How many persons were saved in the ark? Who was fed by the ravens? Who was Absalom's father? What was the eighth plague? How many children had Sarah? With what word does Solomon begin his preaching in Ecclesiastes? What people did God punish by sending plagues among them? By whom was David anointed? What were Christ's words to Paul when he first sent him on a mission? Who was Hegar's son? How many sons had Jacob? Where did Jacob sojourn at the time of his death? I remain,

Your friend, ROSA WHITNEN.

Frederick and His Officer.

An officer in the army of Frederick the Great, who had distinguished himself by his bravery and skill in war, was so imprudent as to run into debt, and found himself in great trouble.

One night, as he sat in his tent, he took a piece of paper, and in a melancholy way drew up a list of his debts, and wrote at the bottom: "Who will pay these debts?" While he sat and brooded over his troubles he fell asleep. By and by some one came in without awakening him, stole behind him, and looked over his shoulder at the paper. It was the king. When he read the paper he was filled with pity for his brave officer, and wrote after the question, "Who will pay these debts?" the answer: "I, Frederick, will." He then left the tent as quietly as he had come in. When the officer awoke he started with surprise to find something more, and in a different handwriting, on his paper. When he saw what it was he was overjoyed. Frederick fulfilled his promise, and the officer was even more diligent and faithful in his service than before.—Sunday-School Visitor.

Winning an Education.

A well-known Chicago lawyer, wishing to bestow a scholarship entitling the holder to a four years' college course, asked a tutor who prepared boys for college to name the boy who best deserved it. The teacher said that two of his boys—Frank Gray and Harry Strong—were very anxious to go to college, but could not afford the expense—that they were equal in their studies, both observed the rules equally well.

"Well," said the lawyer, "if at the end of the year one boy has not gone ahead of the other, send them to me and I will decide between them."

As before, at the closing examinations the boys stood equal in attainments. They were directed to call at the lawyer's office, no information being given as to the object of the visit.

Two intelligent, well-bred boys they seemed, and the lawyer was beginning to wonder greatly how he should make a decision between them. Just then the door opened, and an elderly lady of peculiar appearance entered. She was well known as being of unsettled mind and possessed of the idea that she had been deprived of a large fortune which was justly hers. As a consequence she was in the habit of visiting lawyers' offices, carrying in her hands a package of papers which she wished examined. She was a familiar visitor to this office, where she was always received with respect and dismissed with kindly promises of help.

This morning, seeing that the lawyer was already occupied with others, she seated herself to await his leisure. Unfortunately the chair she selected was broken and had been set aside as useless.

The result was that she fell in a rather awkward manner, scattering her papers about the floor. The lawyer looked with a quick eye at the boys before moving himself, to see what they would do.

Frank Gray, after an amused survey of the fall, turned aside to hide a laugh he could not control.

Henry Strong sprang to the woman's side and lifted her to her feet. Then, carefully gathering up her papers, he politely handed them to her. Her profuse and rambling thanks served only to increase Frank's amusement.

After the lady had told her customary story, to which the lawyer listened with every appearance of attention, he escorted her to the door and she departed.

Then he returned to the boys, and, after expressing pleasure at having formed their acquaintance, he dismissed them. The next day the teacher was informed of the occurrence, and told that the scholarship would be given to Henry Strong, with the remark: "No one so well deserves to be fitted for a position of honor and influence as he who feels it his duty to help the humblest and lowliest."—Exchange.

Jack and His Blind Mate.

"One always likes to read about the fidelity of animals," said a gentleman the other day; "and I will tell you a little incident that came under my observation when I was taking my vacation last Summer. I stopped at a farm-house, and the farmer was the owner of a pair of chestnut horses, named Doll and Jack. He had raised them from colts, had always stabled and driven them together, and they were consequently much attached to each other. Last Summer he turned them out to pasture, and while wandering around the fields I noticed the incident.

"Doll had been blind several years, but she never betrayed it by her gait when traveling. In the pasture she would sometimes become separated from her mate, and as soon as she discovered it she would commence to search for him. Sometimes she would whinny, and he would respond to her, when she would go directly toward him, and when she found him they would rub their noses together. At other times Jack would not answer, but would stop eating, raise his head, and watch the course his blind mate would take, back and forth across the pasture, each time turning toward the left and nearing the fence at each turn. Frequently she would stop and listen. If she was nearing the mischievous Jack, he would stand perfectly still; but if she was some distance away, he would stamp his feet two or three times when Doll was listening. She was always sure of finding him, though sometimes it would take an hour to do it, and then they would go away side by side cropping the fresh grass. When they went to the spring in one corner of the lot to drink Jack always led the way, and he would stand beside the trough and call to his mate until she stood beside him, and both would drink together.

"One day a terrible racket was heard in the pasture, and it was kept up so long that one of the men was sent to see what it was all about. Doll had gotten one of her feet caught in the spokes of an old wagon wheel that lay in the pasture. She stood very still and quiet in the trap into which she had walked, while Jack was thrashing around the pasture and neighing as though he had been hired to rouse the neighborhood. Doll was released, while Jack stood by and watched the operation with apparent delight, that was manifested with a wild gallop around the lot when she was once more free."—Utica Observer.

Pin Money.

"Here is your pin money," said Uncle Hugh, as he handed his niece a bright silver dollar.

"Thank you, uncle; I was just wishing for some spare change," and Maud's eyes fairly beamed as she took the offered money.

"Uncle Hugh, when you give me money to spend just as I please, why do you always call it 'pin money?'" Maud asked.

"Well, my dear, I will tell you the origin of the term 'pin money.' Pins were introduced into England by Catharine, first wife of Henry VIII. They were not, however, the well-known small-pointed instruments, such as we use, but were made of gold, silver, ivory, and brass, many of them weighing as much as six or eight ounces. Such pins as those were worn in the hair and used on different parts of the clothing to fasten folds or drapery, and were quite ornamental. Thus, you see, the first pins were much more useful to ladies than gentlemen. The Spanish manufacturers were permitted to sell their pins only during the Christmas holidays, and in that way gentlemen began to give the ladies of their respective families money at Christmas-time with which to buy pins. At first they were very expensive, costing as much as we now have to pay for a valuable piece of jewelry. However, after pins had become common and cheap, gentlemen continued the practice of giving their wives, daughters and sisters money to buy pins. In that way the term 'pin money' originated, and it is now applied to an allowance made to a lady to buy any small articles she may need or desire."

"I am glad you told me all about it, uncle," said Maud, "and I thank you very much."—Harper's Young People.

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JOHNSON—BYRON B. JOHNSON, one of the Stewards of Sweet Water Society of the Black Hawk circuit, North Mississippi Conference, died in peace and in hope of eternal joy at his home in Holmes county, Miss., Feb. 3, 1893. He had been a member of the church ever since he was twelve years of age, and steward four or five years. He was happily married to Miss Minnie Clower, of Holmes county, Dec. 24, 1885, and was left a widower July 12, 1891.

The writer of this obituary knew personally both the husband and wife, and I unhesitatingly say I have no doubt that they have gained renewed acquaintence where joys are unalloyed and where partings are no more. There was no better man in Sweet Water than Byron Johnson—peace to his ashes! I expect to meet Bro. and Sister Johnson "beyond the sunset's radiant glow."

May the God of all grace comfort and sustain his loved ones, take care of his two little children, and bring them all safely home by and by. B. F. PHILLIPS.

COLEMAN—On Monday, Jan. 23, 1893, we laid to its final rest in the old Sharon Cemetery the body of our loved and honored mother in Israel, Mrs. MARY A. COLEMAN. A long life of faith and trust in God resulting in a peaceful entry into the Master's joys. Sister Coleman was born in Jefferson county, Miss., April 26, 1817—her maiden name was Divine—thus having reached beyond the allotted time to man by nearly six years. She was educated at the first female college ever established in the State, at Old Washington, in Adams county. She was married to Asa Coleman, of pleasant memory, and moved to Madison county, in 1835, and established their home near the town of Sharon, where they reared a family of three sons, and from which both took their departure to be with the heavenly Father. From its first erection this home prepared its prophets' chamber. Many pleasures have the weary itinerant enjoyed at this happy home. To entertain the servants of God was their great delight.

Sister Coleman joined the Methodist Church in 1837 at Old Pleasant Grove Camp Ground. A few remain who remember this sacred spot. Her husband preceded her a few years, since which time she has lived at the old residence with her oldest son, Frank, who with Dr. S. K. Coleman, of Canton, Miss., remain to mourn her departure. On Sunday morning, Jan. 22, she quietly entered into that rest which remains for the people of God.

FERRALL—Mrs. T. J. O. FERRALL (nee Chandler) died Jan. 31, 1893, at Enterprise, Miss.

Another link is broken, another tie binds us in heaven. This dear one was a great sufferer for years, but bore it with patience and fortitude. Death came suddenly; news of her illness flashed over the wires, and in quick succession that of her death. Her daily life stands as a beautiful monument of Christian graces, and we feel that our loss is her eternal gain. She graduated at Brookhaven, Miss., with the highest honors, and while in school, through the instrumentality of the lamented Dr. Johnson, was converted and joined the church, and was a consistent member till God called her home. She remembered her solemn vow to support the church and its institutions, and labored for the advancement of the same when health permitted. But in her home life is where so many beautiful and rare traits of character developed. From early childhood, and through years of maturity, her kind and gentle influence was felt in the home circle, like a bright ray of sunshine. Her love and devotion to her parents, husband, brothers and sisters, and only boy, were of the highest and purest type. Her gentle spirit has gone out into that beautiful world beyond, to meet her loved ones who had gone before, while many hearts are crushed beneath the dark shadow.

Cheer up, dear ones; she only sleepeth, and will be waiting and watching for you at the golden gate. Farewell, dear one, till we meet again. AUNTIE.

Johnson City, Tenn.

MAYO—FREDERICK EPPS MAYO was born in Versailles, Woodford county, Ky., Jan. 8, 1816. He moved to Louisiana when a young man, and located in Bayou Sara; from thence he moved to Morehouse parish, and was married to Mrs. Mary M. McDowell about 1855. He purchased a farm on Bayou Bartholomew, where he lived until 1867, when he moved to Missouri. He moved back to Louisiana about 1870, and purchased a farm near Farmerville, Union parish, where he lived until his death, which occurred Jan. 21, 1893.

Bro. Mayo lived to be advanced in years before he became religious. He was blessed with a good and faithful wife, a woman of strong faith and deep piety, who prayed unceasingly for over thirty years that God would bless and save him. She realized the answer to her prayers. He joined the M. E. Church, South, about ten years ago, but was not converted until 1888. His conversion was clear and satisfactory. He shouted and praised God for his salvation. From this time he lived a Christian life. God gave him the victory over all his enemies. He conquered by the power of faith. Death brought no terror to him; he met it as the valiant soldier meets the enemy on the field of battle, and conquered. He expressed himself as being ready and desirous to go home. About his last words were, "Oh, joy!"

He leaves a loving wife, daughter, two sons, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn his death; but they look for a reunion in the beautiful home above. May God's grace sustain the bereaved! T. S. R.

MOORE—Bro. L. N. MOORE, son of O. J. Moore, of Winona, Miss., was born July 1, 1851; married to Miss Belle Rodgers, of Starkville, Miss., in 1876; joined the M. E. Church, South, by profession of faith in 1877, and departed this life in the town of Winona, his home during life, on Jan. 3, 1893.

Those meager dates and facts tell that an immortal soul has passed through an earthly existence. The recording angel's book tells of individual conflicts, victories and failures, of the influence on other lives, and of that influence down the coming ages to the end of time.

Bro. Moore leaves an aged father, two sisters, a wife and three children, with many other relatives and friends, to mourn his loss. He was an efficient member of the Board of Stewards of Winona station, North Mississippi Conference, a merchant highly respected by all who knew him, an obedient son, a kind and considerate husband and an affectionate father.

This writer preached his funeral to a large concourse of friends, said by many to have been the largest funeral procession ever seen in Winona. Truly his death touched many hearts. We commend the bereaved to him who bore our griefs, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. May that God who "tempers the wind to the shorn lambs" pour in oil in the bereaved hearts. JOHN RITCHEY.

Whereas, It has pleased God to remove from our midst our friend and brother, L. N. Moore, And, whereas, The intimate relation existing between our deceased brother and the members of our Board of Stewards renders it proper that we should place on record our appreciation of his services as a colaborer in the office of steward and as a man; therefore, be it Resolved, By the Board of Stewards of Winona station, North Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South, that, while we bow with humble submission to the will of the Most High, we do not the less mourn for him who has been called from labor to rest.

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Moore this Board of Stewards and the church lose a member who was always active and zealous in his work, ever ready to aid the needy and distressed, and devoted to the welfare of the community in which he has lived.

Resolved, That this Board of Stewards tender its heartfelt sympathy to the family and relatives of our deceased brother in this their sad affliction.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered on the secretary's record, and that a copy of them be sent to the Winona Times and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, also that a copy be sent to the family of our deceased brother steward. JOHN RITCHEY,
For Committee.

SCOTT—On Wednesday, Oct. 26, 1892, SARAH COLTON SCOTT sweetly breathed out her life in the arms of Jesus. How long she suffered and how much only God and the dear ones about her bedside during her long and severe illness know.

She was born in Covington, La., Feb. 5, 1843. She was loved and admired by all who knew her. As a Sunday-school scholar, and afterwards as teacher, she exercised in her life those Christian graces which endeared her to all. Her gentle and amiable disposition, her consistent Christian life, will long be remembered by her old friends in Covington and in this city. Early in her girlhood she joined the Methodist Church in Covington. On Feb. 16, 1865, she was united in marriage to Mr. M. J. Scott.

Many times during her illness she spoke of death as a relief from pain and trouble, and asked those who loved her not to pray that she might recover strength. Shortly before her death she spoke of the blessing for those that overcome, and the advantages she possessed over those left behind. As her strength grew weaker her faith seemed to break through all earthly barriers and take hold on God. Her eyes shone like stars as she gazed upon her husband and children and loved ones about her. By her request her dear sisters sang, in broken voice, her favorite hymns, among them,

"Jesus can make a dying-bed Feel soft as downy pillows are."

As they bent over her they could hear her say, "He bears me up in his arms." "Meet me."

What a legacy that death-scene, a treasured memory in the hearts of the dear ones left behind, who mourn their loss, yet joy in her eternal gain. Death came not to her as a dark dread, but as a bright hope. As she had lived so she died.

Always interested in any religious work, but through bodily weakness deprived of visiting the house of God, she eagerly read religious works, especially those on sanctification and holiness of life. She never professed sanctification, but earnestly talked of and prayed for it.

May the bereaved ones live for and look forward to the time when they shall be reunited, when "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." ONE WHO LOVED HER.

The Complete Man.

Jesus was the complete man because he was the divine Son of God. In him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. He was perfectly human, because he was truly divine.

In him all races and all nationalities equally find sympathy and brotherhood. His human nature was more complete than that of the aggregate humanity. In him all human virtues meet, and all exist in their perfection. In him all the diversities of human nature find their representative. In him is the perfect ideal of character, for every individual, of every land and of every age.

No trait of character that is found in him is a vanishing type. The growth of the individual and of the race must always be toward him. The law of the survival of the fittest ensures the perpetuation of his image. The sublimest saints are but fractions of the fullness of Christ. In him law and love are seen in perfect and final harmony. The complete humanity of Christ is our encouragement to holiness and our comfort in sorrow. The complete and glorified humanity of Christ leads us to the throne of God. Those of every land and every race, of every temperament, and of every variety of station, gifts, environment and condition, find in him their ideal and their peace, their redemption, their example, their way and their goal.—Northern Christian Advocate.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., was visited by a terrific blizzard on Feb. 19, and much damage was done.

A bill making crinoline wearing unlawful was introduced in the General Assembly of New York last week.

In 1888 there were 43.94 square miles in Chicago. Now there are 181.70, and Rogers Park is soon to be annexed.

On Feb. 17 and 18 New York City experienced a heavy snow-storm, one of the heaviest of the year. Seventeen inches of snow fell.

Major Ethelbert Barksdale died, on Feb. 17, while on a visit to his plantation in Yazoo county, Miss. He was an eminent Mississippian.

There were 4,300,000 tons of bituminous coal mined in Alabama in 1891. In 1892 the production was 5,272 000 tons, an increase of nearly 22 per cent.

Gen. G. T. Beauregard, the last survivor of the Confederate military leaders who attained the full rank of general, died in this city on Feb. 20, aged seventy-five years.

A freight engine exploded in the Texas and Pacific yards at Fort Worth, Texas, on Feb. 19. One man was killed outright and several more were seriously wounded.

The coal monument prepared for exhibition at the World's Fair by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company has been completed at Shenandoah, Pa., and is now awaiting shipment.

John E. Collingsworth, Commissioner of Agriculture of Texas, has called a convention of cotton planters of the State to meet in Austin on March 10. Farmers, merchants and all interested are invited to participate. The object is to influence the farmer, not only of Texas, but of the South, to plant less cotton.

A crusade against the pool rooms has been started in Connecticut by the press, the clergy and the Yale College faculty. A bill has been introduced in the Assembly making it a misdemeanor to conduct or to frequent a pool room, and the president of Yale is using all his influence with the governor to insure its passage.

A prominent railroad man has said that they was not likely to be as many visitors to Washington, March 4, as on the occasion of Harrison's inauguration, when they were estimated at 87,000, or when Cleveland was inaugurated in 1885, when the crowd was much larger. This official thought that 50,000 would cover the total of visitors.

The President, who has power to conclude treaties with other countries, has already fixed up a treaty of annexation with the Hawaiian commissioners, and all that is necessary to settle this matter will be to secure the consent of ratification of the Senate. The treaty declares that Congress shall provide a form of government for the islands, and plainly nothing else is possible at present but a territorial form. It is provided that the Chinese inhabitants of the islands shall acquire no right above other Chinese outside the limits of the United States, and will not be allowed to come to the States on any account. The sum of $20,000 yearly will be offered deposed royalty.

FOREIGN.

The British navy has a gun that will fire a 100-pound projectile four miles, and do it so rapidly that four of them will be in the air at the same time.

The unmarried men of Quebec are in a state of mind over the serious proposition of the provincial government to impose a tax of from $100 to $500 on all the bachelors.

Charges have been made by the Chamber of Commerce of Lima, Peru, that the new silver coins issued by the government are illegal. The charges are founded upon the statement that the new coins do not contain the proportion of silver required by law.

Chancellor Von Caprivi has scored an important success on the Army bill in committee. The several amendments offered by the two-year service provisions of the bill were rejected by the committee. The belief is growing that the government will succeed in having the measure adopted.

British soldiers will wear seamless socks in future, because they insure greater marching efficiency. The old style of seamed socks chafed the skin and made the soldiers foot-sore. Tenders for the supply of 900 000 pairs, a year's estimated requirements, have been invited by the government.

Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule bill, which was read for the first time at the House of Commons on Feb. 17, was discussed in all its bearings by Mr. Gladstone at the time of its presentation to Parliament, and all its features have also been thoroughly set forth in the debate which followed.

There is now reason to hope that the great cotton strike in Lancashire, England, which has lasted for more than three months, is practically at an end. It is true that the terms of settlement have not yet been arranged, but there appears to be little doubt that the long idle spindles will shortly resume work.

The Army Committee of the Chamber of Deputies have commenced their examination of the bill providing for the increase of the strength of the regiments and for the addition of commissioned and non-commissioned officers. It has been decided that the infantry regiments shall comprise three battalions, instead of two.

A hurricane swept the Island of Nofou, of the Samson group, recently, continuing for sixty hours. The storm in severity equalled that which destroyed the foreign war-ships four years ago. Thousands of trees were leveled to the ground, the old Wesleyan Church was swept away, and the European and native houses destroyed.

A large number of lives have been lost, owing to deadly gas in the Impensada Lead Mines, near Carthagena, Spain. The lead mines are situated at Alina Zeron, about twenty miles from Carthagena, and have been worked for centuries. The work has been pushed with energy recently, and it is claimed that sufficient precautions have not been taken to prevent fatalities. Twenty-seven are said to have died from suffocation.

Chronic Catarrh.

AS TREATED BY THE LEADING PHYSICIANS OF TO-DAY.

Pe-ru-na is a specific for every case of catarrh—for the Acute and the Chronic. The dose of Pe-ru-na should be a large tablespoonful before each meal and at bedtime. This dose should be gradually increased to two tablespoonfuls. Women and some delicate men should begin with a teaspoonful, and as slowly and gradually increase to the above full dose. The Acute Catarrh and Humid variety of Chronic Catarrh, under this treatment, will disappear in from one to two weeks; but in the Hypertrophic variety this treatment must be continued in some cases from one to three months; and in very rare or extremely bad cases it must be continued for six months. In some cases of Acute Catarrh (cold in the head), where the case is severe, a teaspoonful of Pe-ru-na should be taken every hour.

Everyone should send for a free copy of a treatise on catarrh, coughs, colds and consumption, by the Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, of Columbus, Ohio. Sent free during February and March.

"CHRIST IN THE TEMPLE."

The original painting, by Hoffman, of Christ teaching in the Temple, now hanging in the Gallery at Dresden, has produced a more profound emotion, in the religious and artistic world, than any picture in the modern gallery of fine arts. It is to the modern school what the Sistine Madonna was to the old. The reproduction is an etching from steel plate, engraved by an expert, in the art, and printed on the best plate paper, size 22x28. It has all the beautiful softness and exquisite harmony of tone and value which have placed etchings at the head of all other artistic reproductions. No one who has ever seen this picture can forget the earnest, melancholy eyes and exalted expression of infinite loveliness and purity of the inspired boy as he stood surrounded by the grave and gray rabbis intently listening to every word that fell from his lips. We all know the story of his journey up to Jerusalem, when he was twelve years old; how he tarried there, and Joseph and Mary knew not of it, but supposed he was returning to Nazareth with his kinsfolk and acquaintances; but they found him in the Temple in the midst of the doctors, both hearing and asking them questions. "And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers." The painter has chosen this scene and portrayed it with such vividness of expression, such original and profound conception of the subject, that all nations and creeds attest their intelligent appreciation by the enormous demands for copies of this great work.

The above handsome picture will be mailed free to each old subscriber sending $2 to renew his subscription for another year, and remitting amount due. It will also be mailed free to each new subscriber sending us $2.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 40.—NO. 9. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1893. WHOLE NO. 1906.

C. W. CARTER, Editor.
D. L. MITCHEL, Publisher.

PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Hon. Ethel Barksdale.

This distinguished Mississippian died suddenly on the night of Feb. 16, and was buried at Jackson on the afternoon of Feb. 18. He was a confidential friend of Hon. Jefferson Davis, was a leading member of the Confederate Congress, served two terms recently in the Federal Congress, and for years was a great journalist. He was a member of our church in Jackson, and a steward. At his funeral Bishop Galloway paid the following tribute to his life-long friend and brother:

Again Mississippi is called upon to mourn the loss of her eminent dead. Scarcely had one shadow passed, and the solemn notes of one funeral died on the evening air, before another fatal shock is felt and another prince and leader falls into the open grave. We turn away with silent step from one honored tomb only to re-form our circle, and, with bowed heads and muffled tread, march beside the bier of another distinguished statesman and trusted Christian patriot. But to us, no one we lay to rest to-day was more than a leader, famed in the councils and history of the nation; he was our friend and neighbor, the sharer of our common joys and sorrows. We were proud of him as a public servant, but we loved him for his private virtues. We were honored in his greatness, but we rejoiced in his graces. Without attempting an analysis of his great character, or following minutely the story of his distinguished career, I desire to recount a few of his virtues for our emulation.

From his native State of Tennessee he came to Mississippi in the days of his early youth, and here spent his long and toilsome life. First entering upon pastoral pursuits, he soon heard the call of duty to wider fields and more conspicuous stations. Providence had designed him for leadership and amply endowed him with gifts adequate to its repeated exigencies and imperial responsibilities. And in every place the results of his labors and the splendor of his achievements gave eloquent testimony to the prescience of his statesmanship and the grandeur of his character. For full fifty years he has been a public life—often conspicuous, always potential. And throughout that long, eventful period, while an open, aggressive advocate of measures that necessarily invited sharp antagonisms, he never compromised a principle, or betrayed a cause, or fled a field, or deserted a friend. Indeed, I believe it will be the verdict of history that he was pre-eminently the man for a crisis. His genius was most resplendent when the clouds were darkest, and the tempest greatest, and the danger nearest. When other cheeks were blanched his was steady. When passion swayed the hour, he was in most perfect command of his powers and seemed to exercise the coolest judgment.

For many years he was Mississippi's greatest journalist, and in that position won highest distinction. Entering the profession before he had attained his majority, his columns soon commanded wide attention for epigrammatic keenness of style and fearless independence of editorial opinion. So marked was his genius that, while yet a very young man, he was summoned to the capital to conduct the leading journal of his party in the State. And potential, political influence it became the London Times of Mississippi. With his lofty idea of journalism he rejected the dictum of a celebrated editor, and felt that his mission was to instruct and improve, and not to astonish and amuse. He was no mere huckster of news, no gilo retailer of community gossip, or pale reflector of ambient and volatile sentiment, but himself made public opinion on great questions, and saw much of it crystallized into constitutional and statutory law. With conscientious carefulness he eschew personal journalism; and while faithfully and fearlessly discussing public measures and the official doings of public men, he never invaded private character, nor lifted the veil from the humblest or most unhappy home. His columns were clean, as need a pure pen, and not a muckrake. In that respect he was an example worthy of all imitation.

He was a master of state-craft. Profoundly versed in the great philosophical principles of government, and having an accurate, cyclopedic acquaintance with the history of political movements, he was an acknowledged leader, unfaltering in courage and almost invincible in argument. More than once his fertile brain outlined the issues of the hour and constructed the platform on which political battles were fought, while his generals planned great campaigns and his skilled eye guided the moving columns to victory. Sometimes he was in advance of his people, and (inevitable penalty of leadership) suffered severe criticism of his plans and even suspicion of his motives; but in nearly every instance time vindicated the wisdom of his statesmanship and applauded the patriotic purity of his purposes. For his loved land he fought a thousand battles, and never one against it. No priest ever ministered at any altar with holier reverence than he carried into the service of his country. He was the soul of chivalry. No armed knight of the Middle Ages ever had a higher regard for the virtue of woman or the integrity of man. Sensitive to wrong, cherishing above treasure his untainted honor, he never, in the least, betrayed it, nor allowed another to impugn it. Had he accepted a soldier's commission, I doubt not that he would have been on the tented field what Sir Henry Havelock became to the chivalry of England.

Fearless in the advocacy of what he thought to be right, he was ever a generous ally and a magnanimous foe.

He was eminently wise in counsel. Full and accurate in information, rigidly analytical in thought, cautious in reaching conclusions, and generous in personal judgments, within a vast circle his advice was eagerly sought, and his opinions became almost their rule of action. It is a matter of history that the greatest national leaders paid deference to his views. Before the late ever-to-be-lamented war of brothers, one of the distinguished senators of this State, and afterwards President of the new Confederation of States, publicly acknowledged his frequent indebtedness to the brilliant, sagacious young journalist. And later, in the highest councils of State, and amid the trying exigencies of war, he relied most upon his clear, calm judgment.

His friendships were ardent and enduring. Warmly attached to those who were admitted to the inner, sacred circle of his confidence, he trusted them without suspicion, and was grateful for their affection.

He was wonderfully attractive to young men. His keen eye quickly discerned their future possibilities, and generously encouraged their laudable ambitions. In this way he was ever in active sympathy with the current life and hopes of his time. And never had any public man more loyal support and enthusiastic following. The Tenth Legion of Cæsar and the old Guard of Napoleon never followed their leaders with more perfect assurance and thrilling ardor than did the friends of the great patriot we bury to-day.

He was a friend of the poor and obscure. He extended the same friendly greeting to the humblest and most unknown as to the titled and the great. He never slighted the one, nor courted the other. His kind words and warm hand-grasp will long be a precious memory to many a poor toiler.

His home life was singularly beautiful. There his virtues shone with steadiest and divinest ray, and there he was loved almost to idolatry. To his wife and daughters he was as attentive and courtly as a lover; to his sons as respectful and deferential as an honored companion.

This falls upon me as a sore personal bereavement. Coming, as I did, to this capital in inexperienced young manhood, he extended me a cordial welcome, had me to share the hospitality of his happy home, and soon gave me his perfect confidence, which was intimate and uninterrupted to the evening of his sudden death. I have known his inner life—the sacred secrets of his noble soul. I have been in his home when shadowed with sorrow, and seen the strong man bowed with grief. I have knelt by his side in prayer and heard the clear announcement of his conscious faith in a personal Savior. I had the pleasure of receiving him into the fellowship of this church. Though modest, as one should be, in expressing his religious experience, his trust in Christ was sincere, and his hopes for the future bright even to joyousness. Our pastor will sadly miss the presence of a helpful, appreciative hearer, whose soul fed on the blessed Word of God.

There is to me a striking coincidence, if not a strange providence, in this hour. I have in sacred keeping a copy of the Clarion issued during the fateful year of 1878, with a darkly-leaded death notice of myself, and his tender heart tribute to his young friend and former pastor. That news proved erroneous. The death angel stayed his coming, and the one supposed to be at rest that day lives to reverently place a modest flower upon the honored grave of his Christian brother. Statesman, patriot, neighbor, brother, friend, thy worthy deeds are enshrined in the hearts of thy countrymen, and will ever shine with increasing radiance in the chronicles of the skies. A leader in any host, a trusted counselor at any council board, a premier in any Cabinet, a peer in any realm, would have been the gifted Ethelbert Barksdale. May we meet him in the home of the redeemed!

Holston Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: Your kind invitation to write an occasional article for the ADVOCATE found me emerging from the profoundest depths of the severest Winter known to the inhabitants of this country since the "cold Saturday" of my childhood, which I remember from one circumstance only. The husband of our cook lived some five miles in the country, and, on coming to see his wife in town, brought with him a load of poultry which froze to death on the road. My memory calls to mind the singular spectacle of a semi-circle of fowls laid around the old-fashioned kitchen fireplace in the hope of reviving the spark of life. Whether "Uncle Ben" succeeded, or not, I can not now remember.

I have had several reports of that cold day which has become the standard with all people who were brought up before the days of thermometers and signal officers, and, by all accounts, it must have been the coldest day ever known. Stage drivers were taken dead from their boxes. Horses' of whatever color, turned frosty-white in their stalls. One traveler who went out to feed his horse returned to the house and reported his own horse missing and a strange gray standing in his stall. Boiling water thrown into the air descended in the form of hail-stones. Well, we did not quite beat that record here, but the thermometer one night went to sixteen degrees below zero, and for six weeks the snow and ice remained on the ground. There was not a drop of rain from Dec. 20 to Feb. 5. In the city of Knoxville it was reported by relief parties that they found people who had lain in bed for several successive days and nights because they had no fuel or food in their houses. I was in the city one day when the thermometer was only ten degrees above zero; but it was a bright, cheerful day, and I had the pleasure of calling on the Rev. H. D. Moore, of Alabama, who had just taken charge of our Church Street charge there. He was well received, but has since been sick, as have many others since the cold spell broke.

Two of our best men have died since Conference—Rev. Tobias Smith, at Sweetwater, and Rev. J. L. M. French, at Bristol. Both were men in feeble health, but not advanced in age, and each had done good and faithful work in the Conference. The memory of the just is blessed.

Judging from the papers, which are about the only means I have of hearing what is going on outside my own narrow circle, there is not much doing in our pastoral charges.

A revival of considerable power is reported at Athens.

An elegant church, worth some ten thousand dollars, is being built at Sweetwater.

The colleges are not generally so full as usual this year, but then we have more of them than any other Conference.

I am not far from the Four Seasons Hotel, built with an extravagant outlay of Northern money, in the neighborhood of Cumberland Gap, as a resort for wealthy invalids and pleasure seekers. It was located, it is said, on purely sanitary consideration—Claiborne county, East Tennessee, showing the lowest death-rate of any county in the United States. It has four hundred rooms, and would make a splendid university, with an adequate endowment.

There are immense beds of coal and iron here, but the greatest wealth of this part of the South is in the congregation of several hundred thousand white people, who may be said to be all Protestants, believers in the Bible, and the most capable of improvement of any race upon the face of the earth, because they have the elements of abundant food crops, good homes, and a healthy climate. You would be surprised, however, at the low standard of education among the masses, the modicum of knowledge imparted being the course of study in the public schools, which do not run, on an average, more than four months in the year.

We were blessed with a great revival in our community last Fall, and have now a flourishing school.

Reading, as I do, with interest every article from the far South, I hope this may entertain some of your readers.

On the Wing.

Covington county has more to offer the young man, who is looking to Mother Earth for a living and a fortune, than any other section of our good State that I have visited. Virgin forests of pine on gently rolling hills, clear creeks with adjacent growth of hard wood and rich alluvial soil, stand open to entry, and, where occupied, are offered at low figures.

Williamsburg, the capital, is a neat little town, twenty-seven miles west of Ellisville, on the N. O. and N. E. R. R. It sustains two newspapers and several stores. Its jail is a small structure, but of modern build. Its court-house is the worse for wear, but in its hall impartial justice is meted to all.

We had the pleasure of getting better acquainted with that veteran itinerant, Rev. J. H. Evans. After preaching twice, a cash collection of $2 50 was taken, and the congregation agreed to pay the note of one of its members who had died. This made a total of $12.50 for Williamsburg.

Here Rev. M. L. White met us, and we visited with him Santee, where $10 in cash and subscriptions were secured; Mt. Carmel, where $13 50 were added to our endowment; Blountville, where $7.50 were given, largely by the young ladies. Bro. White, as well as the agent, rejoiced that the few notes due on his and on the Williamsburg circuit were either paid or provided for. The hospitality and kindness of these people, one and all, was royal, was truly Southern.

We met Bro. M. H. Moore at Thompson's Chapel, in Marion county. Here, as at Blountville, the people are just completing a neat church. As the result of a talk by the agent, and an exhortation by the preacher in charge, $2.50 was added to our fund.

From here to Columbia the road is over rolling foot hills. Columbia, the early capital of Mississippi—neat, clean, progressive. An elegant court-house graces its public square. A large, modern high school faces the Methodist Church. On every hand are the evidences of growth. Friday night, and again Saturday night, we preached to fair congregations. Forty-one dollars were contributed by the Columbians.

Sunday morning found us fourteen miles south of Columbia, still on the banks of the Pearl. Here, at Paine's Chapel, a large congregation greeted us. After a delightful altar service they added to our endowment $15.

Seven miles to the south lies Wesley Chapel. Let silence here prove golden.

Fourteen miles through the open pine forests are quickly traveled in company with Rev. D. C. Rawls. This brings us to Poplarville, the county seat of Pearl. At this point, owing to the sickness of a good brother, our appointment was not well known. Poplarville is developing rapidly. A magnificent brick court-house, complete in all its appointments, is nearly eclipsed by its $5,000 free school building, which is rapidly nearing completion. Two large saw mills draw and hold quite a population.

A collection of $30 in cash and subscriptions ended a twelve days' itinerancy.

Everywhere I find men and women looking toward Millsaps College, and willing to help to make it a complete success. Brother, if you owe a note, won't you help us by paying up just now? Address

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: I have been wanting for a long time to send you a few lines, but so many things have interfered.

I have been in China now something over two years. Arrived in Shanghai, October, 1890, just a few days before the Annual Conference. My appointment, by Bishop Wilson, that year was to Changshuh. We had no foreigner living there at that time, so Soochow became headquarters for me, Changshuh being only about thirty miles away. During the year I made several visits to my station, though they were generally very short.

At our Conference of 1891 Mr. Gray, who had been in the Anglo-Chinese College, Shanghai, and I exchanged places. He soon moved into a rented Chinese house, and began work in the city to which he had been appointed.

At our last Conference, Bishop Key saw fit to return me to Changshuh; also to continue Bro. Gray. So we two are keeping Bachelor Hall. We each have a personal teacher, and study morning and afternoon. Bro. Gray has been away a good deal on itinerating trips, visiting the neighboring towns and villages with native preacher. When here he, with native helper, does street work in the afternoon when Chinese study is over.

It is my part to assist the native worker at our street chapel (situated outside the "Little East Gate") every day from Monday to Friday. Saturday afternoon we do not open the chapel. Sunday morning we two foreigners attend chapel together, where a service is held, especially for the Christians, this service not being opened to the public. Just after preaching the "day school pupils" are called in (this school is just behind the chapel), and Sunday-school is held. There are, perhaps, twenty, or more, scholars. We have one probationer who lives in a village some miles from here, but visits this city. Bros. Gray and Lea (native preacher), in their round, visited this village, and the probationer opened her house for preaching.

Changshuh is a walled city of, perhaps, seventy-five or a hundred thousand people, including the many who live just outside the wall. The city is situated at the foot of a mountain (nearly 1,000 feet high), which looks like it was just set down on this level country. Within the city wall is included a part of this mountain. Near us are some very pretty lakes.

Thanks for the ADVOCATE kindly sent me. Yours truly,

B. D. LUCAS.

Send Forward the Funds.

I have just received a letter from a brother. Hear it: "After reading Bishop Keener's appeal in the Nashville Advocate, I hasten to send you, as treasurer, my subscription for the support of Mrs. Lambuth in Japan, adding fifty per cent. to the amount subscribed. That consecrated woman, bereft of her husband, stands firmly at her post, striving to fill her own place and his, so far as she may, in the forefront of the battle. We can not afford to let her suffer for lack of money, nor for that yet more needful sympathy by which souls are sustained in the ever-failing, yet ever-prevailing conflict against the powers of darkness."

True, my dear Doctor, and I hope others will see the matter as you see, and go and do likewise.

Please send forward the subscriptions you gave at the last Conference, brethren, as early as convenient.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. R. M. Staudefer, Columbus, Miss.: "The Culpepper meeting here is glorious, and is increasing every hour. The Holy Ghost came upon the people in great power at the service last night. The city is profoundly stirred by the preaching of this wonderful man. God is with him."

Rev. W. A. Clarke, P. C., Sabine circuit, Louisiana Conference: "I reached my field of labor in due time, and was kindly received by the people. I have been busy preaching, praying and visiting. I am now on my second round. Brethren, pray for us, that we may have a baptism of the Holy Spirit during this year."

Rev. W. F. Sanders, Summerville, La., Feb. 16: "I reached my work on Jan. 13, 1893, and found no parsonage. We stopped near Jena, but are now living one and one-half miles northeast of Summerville P. O., best known as Centerville. I think the outlook is good, and all things bid fair for a revival on this work this year. I am pleased with my work. I have ten churches, and plenty to do."

Rev. John H. Stafford: "I have met every appointment in my charge, and have had a good time. The people are very much scattered, but are all the more hospitable. I have but one disappointing preaching-place, and hope to soon change the aspect of affairs at it. I am determined to do a hard year's work. I have 11 places to preach to the people, and will not miss any of the dates of services."

Rev. J. W. Ellison, Mt. Olivet circuit: "Our first quarterly meeting has just been held. Bro. Mounger, our genial presiding elder, was with us, to the pleasure and profit of all who heard him. While we do not record whirlwinds, breezes and cyclones, we can say that the pastor received a hearty welcome to return to an appreciative people, who have taken a firm hold upon the work of another year, and are moving on with steady gait to a success due sincere faith and earnest labor. The pastor's salary is an advance on last year. The pastor is grateful for many tokens of Christian love that are being constantly sent to the parsonage. God grant us a revival at every appointment."

Rev. D. Scarborough, Pearlington, Miss., Feb. 19: "The Master's cause is moving on in our town. We have a fine Sunday-school, weekly prayer meeting, and preaching three Sundays in every month. Our pastor, Bro. R. B. Downer, has gone into the work with that zeal and energy that characterize the true servant of Christ. He is fast winning the hearts of our people. Truly he is a man of God. His holy life and godly conversation are making a deep impression upon the minds of everybody here. His preaching is very edifying to Christians, and is of a nature that sends conviction to the hearts of sinners. We hope that he will do much good in this community during the year, and earnestly pray that the blessings of God may be with him in all his work. An interest in your prayers in behalf of this charge is solicited."

Rev. T. G. Freeman, Weir, Miss., Feb. 21: "Our first quarterly meeting was last Saturday and Sunday. Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan was on hand in his usual acceptability and power in the pulpit and chair. The report of the preacher in charge on Sunday-schools and general state of the church was rather meager. The weather has been so unfavorable for filling appointments since Conference. We are moving on in peace and, I hope, doing something in the Master's cause. The people are kind, and I don't think they intend to let their preacher suffer for the necessaries of life. I am in a new field this year—new district, new presiding elder, new circuit, and I am a new preacher. I hope and pray that all these new surroundings will contribute to a successful year's work for the Master. I heard the best sermon last Sunday that I have heard preached by a presiding elder in a long time. Pray for us, that the Lord may bless us abundantly. The Lord bless the ADVOCATE!"

Rev. J. W. Honnoll, P. E., Holly Springs, Miss., Feb. 23: "I found the Holly Springs district well organized and in good working order, and, notwithstanding the great financial pressure on the country, and our great loss of means and members by emigration to the West, our circuits are all holding up their assessments to where they were last year, and are paying the preachers more money on the first round than they have done before for years. The preachers are all at their work, and mean business. We are praying for and expecting a successful year. Bro. T. W. Lewis has just closed a good meeting of ten days at Holly Springs. The preaching was done by J. S. Thomas, of Oxford. On last Monday night our new parsonage at Mt. Pleasant was destroyed by fire—a sad loss, which left Bro. Jacobs, wife and six children without a home. We had just held his quarterly meeting the Sunday before, which was a great success, and Bro. Jacobs was delighted with his home and prospects for the year."

Rev. J. M. Pugh, Ocean Springs, Miss., Feb. 16: "Our first quarterly meeting for the current year has passed. Though the weather was quite unfavorable, we had a pleasant time, and the occasion was profitable. Bro. Partridge, our presiding elder, was with us, and his ministrations in the pulpit were highly edifying. He came in the spirit of the Master, and all are much pleased with the new presiding elder. His visit was a benediction. We had a good love-feast on Sunday morning. Well, after traveling about two hundred miles, we find ourselves comfortably domiciled in the new parsonage at Ocean Springs. It will compare favorably with the best in the Conference. We all feel grateful for such a home for the pastor, and we are indebted to the energy, zeal and piety of Sister W. R. Stuart for such a comfortable pastor's residence. She has thought, prayed and worked for a parsonage, and she feels the greatest satisfaction in realizing the consummation of her hopes. It is not now, as formerly, that when the preacher came a house had to be sought and rented at a high rate for his home. God's blessings will surely attend her and those who labored with her in the good work. Christian friends, without denominational distinctions, gave the pastor and his family a 'reception' last Tuesday. It was a pleasant occasion, and the thirty or forty ladies and gentlemen who were present did not come empty handed, but tokens of appreciation were left at the parsonage. We hope to have a revival on the work during the year. Will everyone who reads this offer one prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, that we may experience a work so devoutly to be desired?"

PATIENT WITH THE LIVING.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Sweet friends, when thou and I are gone
Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
From comrade or from neighbor;
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
And done with all the sighing,
What tender truth shall we have gained
Alas, by simply dying!

Then lips too chary of their praise
Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
Shall no defect discover.
Then hands that would not lift a stone,
Where stones were thick to cumber
Our steep hill-path, will scatter flowers
Above our pillowed slumber.

Sweet friend, perchance both thou and I,
Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take this earnest lesson home—
Be patient with the living;
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
Our blinding tears to-morrow—
Then patience—e'en when keenest edge
May whet a nameless sorrow.

To a Young Preacher.

Dear Brother: Yours I received, and thought on your question: "How to live in this world so as to get to heaven?" It is one of the common pleas of my heart, which I have often occasion to study and, therefore, takes me not unprepared. It is hard to keep the helm up against so many cross winds as we meet withal upon this sea of fire and brass. That man knoweth not his own heart, that finds it not hard to break through the entanglements of this world. Creature-smiles stop and entice away the affection from Christ; creature-frowns encompass and tempestuate the spirit that thinks it does well to be angry. Both ways grace is loser. We had all need to watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation. The greatest of our conflicts and causes of complaint seem to have their origin here; temptation follow tempers. As there is two predominant qualities in the temper of everybody, so there are two predominant sins in the temper of every heart. Pride is one in all men in the world. Come and I will tell you what the Lord has done for my soul, and in what way my soul keeps toward him. I long since came to the conclusion to look after no great thing in this world; but to know Christ and him crucified. I find that I make best way in low gale. A high spirit and a high sail together is dangerous; and, therefore, I prefer to live low. I desire not much. My study is in my calling. So much as to tend that without distraction. I am bound to plead for all I get, and try not to want more. I see a need for everything God gives me, and I try to want nothing he denies me. There is no dispensation through affliction, but either in it or after it. I find I could not do without it, whether it be taken from me, or not given to me. Sooner or later God quiets me in himself without it. I cast all my care upon him who has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." I live securely on the care and wisdom of my heavenly Father.

My ways, as you know, are in some sense hedged up, and seem to grow darker and darker daily, but yet I distrust not my God. He has said, "Commit your ways unto me and I will bring it to pass."

I think the Lord deals kindly with me, to make me grateful and believing for all his mercies before I have them. The less reason has to work upon, the more fully faith casts itself on the faithfulness of God. I find while faith is steady nothing can disquiet me, and when faith totters nothing can establish me. If I tumble out among means and creatures, I am lost; but if I stay myself on God, and leave him to work in his own way and time, I am at rest and care not if a thousand rise up against me. I work with God by the day. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I find so much to do with my calling and my heart, that I have no time to puzzle myself with peradventures and futurities. To get good and to do good occupies all my time. Many things more I might say, but enough. But before we part suffer a word of counsel. Oh, brother, keep close to God, then you need fear nothing. Maintain secret and intimate communion with him, and then a little of this world will go a great way. Take time for secret prayer; do not crowd religion in a corner of the day. Nothing is got by thieving nor lost by praying. An ingenious and industrious young man seldom fails of a useful and happy life. Study the Word of God. Study good books. There is a superfine, onrious sort of learning which signifies no more than a splendid foppery to no manner of purpose. For what better are we for those studies which furnish us only with thoughts and words to no use or benefit? What is it to us to know how many knots Heronies had in his club or whether Penelope was honest or not. Never puzzle your head about how many angels can dance on the point of a needle nor beat your brain about the proportion between the cylinder and the sphere, though Archimedes highly valued himself upon the invention.

That is the best knowledge which makes us good and useful in the world rather than learned. True knowledge values things by weight and measure, and not by the distinction of words and authorities. Seek not station in this life, but seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and he will add all that is needed.

I leave you with your God and mine. The Lord Jesus be with your spirit. Pray for your own soul. Pray for our Zion, and pray hard for your brother, McMINN.

Enforcement of Discipline a Necessity.

It may not only seem strange, but untrue, to some that the enforcement of discipline is a necessity; but to us it does seem that even a little serious religious thought on this subject would settle it fully with any honest individual that it is a necessity. Why any discipline at all if it is not to be enforced? Does not the very existence of discipline imply enforcement? Most assuredly it does. Then why any hesitancy about its enforcement? Its non-enforcement can meet the approval of none but the disloyal. God himself is a God of discipline and its enforcement, and, therefore, to be opposed to discipline, or its enforcement, is to be unlike God, and to be unlike God is to be like Satan. The individual who is authorized and required to enforce discipline wrecks his integrity with God and with the truly pure and good of earth if he does not enforce it to the best of his knowledge and his ability, and makes himself a party with the disobedient. But some one may say that he knows quite a number who are authorized and required to enforce discipline that do it not, and yet they are esteemed to be the very best of men. It may be very true that they are esteemed as being very good and even among the very best of our people; but does that make it true that they really are? It does not. It argues a wholesale rejection of discipline. It argues partyism with the disobedient. It argues a low state of conscience. Every disobedience should be corrected, for if it is not, there is likelihood of its repetition, and, if repeated, there is not only danger of the disobedient one becoming incurable, but there is great danger of its tainting others who have knowledge of it. It is hard for a decaying fruit to remain with other fruits without decaying them also. Disobedience is corrupting and contagious, and hence Paul, in addressing the church at Corinth, which had not severed one of its members for gross disobedience, said: "Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? Purge out, therefore, the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened." (I. Cor. v, 6, 7.) Again he says, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." (I. Cor. xv, 33.) The original is, "Phtheirousin ethe chresta homilitai kakai," literally meaning, evil instructions, or evil companionships, corrupt good usages, habits, or practices. The New Version has it, "Evil company doth corrupt good manners." The Am. Com. has it, "Evil companionships corrupt good morals." If there is an Achan in the camp, he must be looked after, or God will not bless Israel. Is this not one reason, and the great reason, why God's people are not as spiritual as they should be? Is this not why our Bishops, at the last General Conference, were forced to declare that the piety of our church was not commensurate with its growth otherwise? Is this not why the Holy Spirit did not come down upon us when Methodism throughout the world prayed for his descent in obedience to a resolution of the Ecumenical Conference? Is this not why our revival meetings seem to do so little, if any good, only while they are being held? Show me a church that does not enforce discipline, and we will show you a church that is dying, spiritually, if it is not already dead. We will show you a church that has a strong friendship for the world. "The friendship of the world is enmity with God. Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." (James iv, 4.) The members of the church that has a discipline, and does not enforce it, will lose respect for it themselves. This is evident when they do contrary to their discipline; therefore, the great necessity for enforcing discipline, not only here and there, but throughout our church, and, in order to this, let each preacher in charge of a work be sure to obey the discipline himself, and see to it that his people do, too. What a mighty and pure church ours would be if its discipline was enforced!

It seems quite difficult for some individuals to learn what the enforcement of discipline is. Some seem to think it is tirading the people from the pulpit; others seem to think that it is expelling members from the church, while others seem to think that it is merely preaching the gospel; and we may add that others seem to think that it is simply advising the disobedient to be obedient. But it is not one of these. Discipline means a system of rules of conduct, and, as respects church discipline, it may be a part of the gospel, or authorized by it just as our Rules are. "Enforcement of discipline" means the act of compelling obedience to discipline or rules of conduct, or a reproof and an acknowledgment and a promise of amendment for breaking any of them, and also expulsion in cases of gross immorality, such as committing adultery, stealing, committing murder, persistent stubbornness, etc. We refer now to our Discipline (page 164, ¶ 281, Ans. 2): "But in case of neglect of duties of any kind, imprudent conduct, indulging sinful tempers or words, or disobedience to the order and discipline of the church: First, let private reproof be given by a preacher or leader, and if there be an acknowledgment of the fault, and promise of amendment, the person may be borne with, otherwise the preacher must take with him two or three faithful friends, who shall labor to bring the offender to proper repentance; but, if he will not hear them, and there be no sign of amendment, the offender must be dealt with as in case of immorality."

Let us refer to the Discipline again in order to learn something about cases of immorality. There are cases of immorality and gross immorality. Discipline, page 162, ¶ 277: "Upon the presentation of such bill of charges, the preacher shall appoint a committee of not less than five, nor more than thirteen, before whom the accused shall be duly cited to appear, who shall have full power to try the case; and if the accused be found guilty by a majority of the committee, let the preacher declare him suspended or expelled."

Now, we have the matter according to our Discipline, just as plain as anyone can ask; and then think of a Methodist preacher who has promised not to mend our Rules, but to keep them, not enforcing discipline. Just think of the predicament in which Dr. J. M. Weems involves himself in his article, "Loaded with Small Shot," in his effort to glaze matters, instead of for the good of the church and for the good of the disobedient, taking a stand in favor of our Disciplines and against any disloyalty whatever! We quote his own words: "In a ministry of more than twenty years I have been forced to expel three persons from the church, and in these cases my action was so manifestly just that the parties confessed their error and came back to the church. I had rather preach a man's funeral than to turn him away from the church."

In these words of his he admits that his act in expelling those three persons was just, and so just, too, that the expelled confessed their error and came back to the church, and yet he says that he had rather preach a man's funeral than to turn him away from the church. Rather preach the funeral of a man that lived and died in error than to pursue a just and right course with him that will awaken him, constrain him to confess his error and come back to the church? Preposterous! Awful! But how sentimental the Doctor becomes as he pours forth his utterances! He continues: "Yes, I have had dancing, drinking, swearing, theater and circus-going members to deal with; but I have found the gospel of the blessed Son of God in the church to be something more than a mere organization. I have found it to be a most wonderful organism, with a defensive power that is almost irresistible when brought in contact with the quickened conscience of man. In some the progression is sometimes tryingly slow; yet the coveted end will come in a large number of the worst cases if the pastor perseveres in earnest faith and prayer, and a loving presentation of the gospel."

If this statement holds good, why did the Doctor expel those three persons and say it was just? and why did he join and why does he continue in a church that has laid down the rules of procedure that we have already cited from the Discipline, that he has promised to obey, and whose Rules he has solemnly promised not to mend, but to obey? He quotes Luke xiii, 6, 7, to prove his position—to represent a member of the church; but he forgot that the digging about the tree, etc., represents a disciplinary course which was to end in expulsion, or its being cut off, if it was not cured by such a course. Let the Doctor define himself. If he is in favor of discipline and its righteous enforcement, let him say so; and if he is not, let him say so—so our church and people may know where he stands. As Methodists, it is necessary for us to define ourselves, and remain defined, and act accordingly.

"For What Is Your Life?"

If this question was asked and answered from the three standpoints of history from which every life is viewed, there is but little doubt of an immense divergence in the conclusions reached. That a man may or may not think of his own life depends largely upon his environments. If these are filled with bright, or what most men are pleased to call helpful, accidents he is apt to place an high estimate upon himself. This he may do, notwithstanding the consciousness that here and there along the development are unrequited actions that sting the heart and feelings of others. By some subtle process of reasoning he may justify his acts in his own mind by coupling them with ends that sustain no relation whatever with first motives. Yet this by no means affects the judgment of the other parties who must be heard from before the final and just estimate can be placed upon the life. And these judgments are not accidental relations to the estimate of life; they are fixed by the provisions and decrees of divine law. And we may as reasonably expect the brightness of the day will cause men to forget the darkness of night, as that these judgments will be set aside and fail to appear when the true estimate of life is to be made manifest unto all.

"Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Whether the brother has or has not a real cause to be offended has nothing to do with the effort at reconciliation. To him it is real—whether that fact be the result of a faulty judgment of the act involved, or of prejudice, or of both—and the fact that I know his state of mind fixes the obligation to seek reconciliation. But it is not alone the judgment of this brother that helps determine the character of a life; the judgment of God is also to be considered. This judgment not only comes of the relations of the life with absolute power to judge correctly, but of an experience in the things that directly effect the life judged. "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life."

And there are those whose lives have been spent so quietly, as under a half revealed shadow, that they place little or no value upon life as they have lived it. Indeed, in the most serious moods of reflection upon life, it has been a question with them why God ever gave them being. They have never felt any call to high places, nor so much as an ambition to feel the call. They are regularly in their places in the sanctuary, listen attentively to the sermon, good or bad,—and go home with hearts full of gratitude for another hour spent in the house of God. Yet with the softness and gentleness of a sunbeam they glide into the home of sickness and sorrow, and their presence is as cheering as is the light in darkness. The little ones and the poor recognize them on the highway, in low, sweet and gentle tones, as thoughts go back to some word of kindness spoken or act of mercy shown. These are they of whom we often hear the remark, "They will never set the world on fire," and so they think of themselves. I do not know so much about that. What will be the judgment of God and man of such lives in that hour when judgment means everything? How timidly they will ask in that hour: "Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick or in prison, and came unto thee? And then shall the King answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Then, what is your life? J. M. WEEMS.

Rev. John A. Ellis.

If the joys experienced in heaven can be intensified or increased, then surely there is more joy in heaven to-day caused by the arrival of our dear pastor, Rev. John A. Ellis.

A little more than six weeks ago he was sent to this work by the appointing power; now he rests, never more to itinerate, free from pain and suffering of any kind.

"Man proposes, but God disposes." Bro. Ellis proposed a grand work—the conversion of sinners and the upbuilding of the Redeemer's kingdom. His plans were all laid, and with intense earnestness and zeal he only desired to carry out his plans—accordingly, he began his blessed work of preaching and pastoral visiting.

Here is an item from the pastor's report at the first Church Conference, held Jan. 29, and shows his earnestness and zeal: "Twenty-seven pastoral visits I have made in my work notwithstanding the weather and other unavoidable hindrances." Immediately after the Conference adjourned, he remarked to me, "I have a violent headache, brother," and that same hour took his bed, never more to preach or labor among us. It has been my privilege to be very much with him and his devoted Christian wife since they first came among us, and a great blessing it was. One so pure, so truly humble, and so entirely consecrated to God as Bro. Ellis, could not help but be a blessing to others. His work was the burden of his mind, the salvation of souls his great desire, and every effort to glorify God. In the pulpit he was a master, his preaching plain, forceful, edifying and full of the Holy Ghost, instructive both to a child and mature mind. Those who ought to know say that "Bro. Ellis was not only a fine preacher, but the best we have had here for many years."

During his illness he had a continual consciousness of God's abiding presence, which kept him cheerful, hopeful and bright till the very last. Now Bro. Ellis is gone home. We were blest with his company and that of his saintly wife. Our loss is felt sorely and most generally all over Moss Point. The vessels at the wharf hang their flags, half-masted to-day, so general are the expressions of sorrow and sympathy. They are gone. One to the home beyond the river, the other to wait and work for her Lord a few years longer. May this dispensation of God's providence be sanctified to the widow and the children!

Our Father is at the helm; fear not.

"The soul that on Jesus has leaned for repose,
I will not, I will not, desert to his foes;
That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no, never, I'll never forsake."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—March 5, 1893.

PREPARED BY REV. A. F. WATKINS.

SUBJECT.—Keeping the Sabbath. (Neh. xiii, 15-22.)

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." (Ex. xx, 8.)

TOPICAL OUTLINE.—I. The Sabbath Desecrated (vs. 15 and 16). II. The Evil Rebuked (vs. 17 and 18). III. The Evil Removed (vs. 19-22).

HOME READINGS.

Monday—Keeping the Sabbath. (Neh. xiii, 15-22.)

Tuesday—The Sabbath Appointed. (Gen. ii, 1-3.)

Wednesday—Sabbath Sanctity Enforced. (Jer. xvii, 19-27.)

Thursday—Sabbath Breaking Denounced. (Ezek. xx, 13-20.)

Friday—Jesus and the Sabbath. (Luke vi, 1-11.)

Saturday—Our Lord's Custom. (Luke iv, 14-21.)

Sunday—Sabbath Joy. (Isa. lviii, 8-14.)
—Hurlburt.

CENTRAL THOUGHT.—The Holiness of the Sabbath.

INTRODUCTORY.

TIME.—Probably B. C. 423. The chronology of the lesson is uncertain. Counting twelve years as Nehemiah's first term of office, at the end of which he returned to Babylon, we have B. C. 433; then, allowing the shortest time in which the great abuses mentioned in our chapter could have arisen (say five years), we have 423. The expression, "after certain days," in verse 6, is an indefinite term, and may mean several years. Some authorities place the time as early as 434, and some as late as 410. The date given (423) seems to me most probable.

PERSONS.—Nehemiah is the only conspicuous person in the lesson.

PLACES.—Jerusalem; within the city and without its gates.

CONNECTING LINKS.

After the dedication of the temple and the reading of the law came the celebration of the Feast of Tabernacles; then a day of fasting and confession, and the renewal of the covenant; then the repeopling of the city by drawing by lot from the surrounding villages; then the return of Nehemiah to Babylon and the growth of numerous evils; then Nehemiah's return to Jerusalem, and the vigorous and effective reform of the abuses. Among the reforms accomplished was the restoration of the purity of the Sabbath, as we are taught in the lesson.

EXPLANATORY.

I.—THE SABBATH DESECRATED.

Ver. 15. "In those days." Upon his second visit to Jerusalem, Nehemiah beheld the desecration of the Sabbath, which had arisen during his absence. "Treading wine-presses." The wine-press consisted of a large vat, ordinarily eight feet square and three feet deep, into which the grapes were thrown, and where they were trodden under foot, and a smaller and lower vat into which the juice ran. They were generally made of wood, but were sometimes hewn out of rock upon a hill-side. The treading of the wine-press on the Sabbath was in direct violation of the Fourth Commandment (Ex. xx, 8-11) as well as the recent covenant (Neh. x, 31). Equally in violation of the law was the trafficking in the other things mentioned here. "I testified against them." He rebuked the flagrant disregard of the holy day.

Ver. 16. "Men of Tyre." A heathen city on the seacoast northwest of Jerusalem. The inhabitants were grossly immoral and had no regard for the Sabbath, and their influence was very demoralizing to the Jews. The Jews alone of ancient peoples observed the Sabbath, and the example of their heathen neighbors was a constant temptation to them.

II.—THE EVIL REBUKED.

Ver. 17. "Then I contended with the nobles." It would seem that with their consent or tacit approval this profanation of the Sabbath had taken place and they now attempted to justify the evil. The word "nobles" is not the same as "rulers" in verse 11 above. It means those of prominence and influence, not necessarily of official position. "What evil thing is this." There was with him no palliation of the wrong, no compromise of the right.

Ver. 18. "Did not your fathers thus." He reminds them that the neglect of God's laws as to the Sabbath had been one of the great crimes for which the prophets had rebuked them (see Jer. vii, 27 and Ezek. xx, 13), and for which God had punished them with ever-increasing judgments until finally the terrible captivity, from which they had but now returned, was visited upon them. "Yet ye bring more wrath." He warns them that a still more bitter cup would be poured out unto them unless they ceased to provoke God by the desecration of his day.

III.—THE EVIL REMOVED.

Ver. 19. "Began to be dark before the Sabbath." The Jews reckoned their days from sunset to sunset. Hence, just at sunset on the day before the Sabbath he ordered the gates of the city to be closed until the Sabbath day was over, and lest the order should not be strictly enforced, he set some of his own servants to guard the gates, which were to be opened only for the passing in or out of those who lived in the vicinity, and these only when they carried no burden.

Ver. 20. "So the merchants . . . lodged without." Being unable to carry their wares through the gates, they camped out near the walls, and during the Sabbath day carried on their traffic with those who gathered about them. "Thus a crowd gathered about the gates and the holy rest of the Sabbath was broken." (Keil.)

Ver. 21. "I will lay hands upon you." Their evasion of the law caused the adoption of stringent measures, and they were warned that they would be arrested if they persisted in their violations of the law. This vigorous course put a stop to the evil.

Ver. 22. "I commanded the Levites that they should cleanse themselves." The indifference into which the Levites had fallen may have made this purification more necessary than would ordinarily have been the case upon being assigned a new duty. The meaning seems to be that, in addition to the usual gatekeepers, there were detailed certain Levites to see that the sanctity of the Sabbath was not violated by the passing of traffic in at the gates. "A reason for this may have been the moral influence which the sacred character of the Levites would be supposed to exert." (Terry.)

The prayer with which this lesson ends is a commingled expression of conscious integrity and humility.

THOUGHTS ON THE SABBATH.

The observance of the Sabbath is an essential condition of individual and national piety. So much is this the case that the neglect of the Sabbath is one of the first indications of moral decline, and a corruption of the Sabbath is always accompanied by a loss of moral character. The desecration of the Sabbath would mean the overthrow of public and private virtue.

Mr. Webster said: "The Sabbath is the bulwark of our liberty, because it is the bulwark of morality."

Lord Beaconsfield said: "Of all the divine institutions the most divine is that which secures a day of rest to man. I hold it to be the most valuable blessing ever conceded to man; it is the corner-stone of civilization."

"Sunday," said Emerson, "is the core of our civilization, dedicated to thought and reverence. It invites to the noblest solitude, the best society, the loftiest knowledge of truth and duty."

Sir Robert Peel: "I never knew a man to escape failures in either mind or body who worked seven days in a week."

Blackstone: "A corruption of manners usually follows a profanation of the Sabbath."

Descegneville: "France must have your (America's) Sabbath or she is ruined."

Mr. Gladstone: "Believing in the authority of the Lord's day as a religious institution, I must desire its recognition by others; but beyond this I have in the course of a laborious life signally experienced its mental and physical benefits."

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

(1) We ought not only to observe the Sabbath ourselves; but as far as possible influence others to do so. (Ver. 15.)

(2) It is as wrong to buy and sell as to labor on the Sabbath. (Vers. 15 and 16.)

(3) It is as wrong to buy as to sell, and to buy a little thing, like a newspaper, or a big thing, like a house, is wrong, ordinarily, to buy bread on the Sabbath day. (Ver. 15.)

(4) We should not allow the example of sinners to induce us to do wrong. (Ver. 16.) (See Prov. i, 10.)

(5) People of great influence are more to be condemned than others for wrong doing; for increase of influence springs increase of responsibility. (Ver. 17.)

(6) Punishment will always follow sin. (Ver. 18.) (See Num. xxxii, 23, and Romans vi, 23.)

(7) "Sabbath breaking is a crime (1) Against God, who commands it. (2) Against society, which becomes demoralized and iniquitous without its elevating influence. (3) Against the body, which needs its rest from toil. (4) Against the soul, which requires it for religious advancement." (Hurlburt.)

(8) Law is useless unless vigorously enforced. A lax administration of law is an encouragement to its infraction. (Ver. 21.)

(9) Every act should be performed in a prayerful spirit, and with a sincere desire for God's blessing and guidance. (Ver. 22.)

A Saint Gone to God.

Mrs. Martha Matheney La Prade died in her seventy-third year at the residence of her son, the Rev. W. H. La Prade, now pastor of the Carondelet Street Church. She was a native of Vicksburg, Miss., but her father moved to Florida as early as 1822. There she was married. In 1858 she was left a widow with five children, four of whom still survive her. She has been living with her son William since 1876.

She was converted in girlhood, and since has ever been a consistent, timid, yet firm Christian, and unswervingly true to Methodism. For years she had lived in the cloudless expectancy of heaven; that she would awaken in the likeness of her Lord. For some days before death she was unconscious, and so left only the beauty of her approach to the King and her enduring strength through the trials of life as the sufficient assurance and comfort of her children, that she is now with God.

Hon. Ethel Barksdale.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT ADOPTED BY THE METHODIST QUARTERLY CONFERENCE, JACKSON, MISS.

At the first Quarterly Conference of the First Methodist Church, held at the Sunday-school rooms, Friday evening, Feb. 17, 1893, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, We have heard with feelings of mingled regret and heartfelt sorrow of the death, this morning, of Hon. E. Barksdale, an honored and beloved member of this church and of this Quarterly Conference; And whereas, A sad and melancholy duty makes it obligatory and eminently proper that this Quarterly Conference should pay tribute, though feeble it may be, to the memory of our deceased friend and brother; therefore

Resolved, That in the death of Maj. Barksdale this church has lost a useful member, the community a good citizen, a true and tried counselor—the whole country a patriot and statesman whose death creates a void in our midst that can not be filled. Truly a great man has fallen.

Resolved, That most deeply and sincerely do we sympathize with his family in their great bereavement, and pray that God, in mercy, will grant sustaining grace to enable them to bear with Christian fortitude this sad affliction.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Quarterly Conference, the city papers and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be requested to publish, and a copy furnished to the family of the deceased.

Several members paid beautiful tributes to the memory of the dead editor and statesman—among the number being the Rev. A. F. Watkins, pastor, who spoke most eloquently and feelingly of the many traits of character which tended to make him truly a great man.

What Revivals Do.

Revivals cause joy in heaven.
Revivals make happy homes.
Revivals fill up the empty pews.
Revivals hasten the millennium.
Revivals are fatal to card parties.
Revivals diminish saloon receipts.
Revivals open closed pocketbooks.
Revivals are hard on icy formality.
Revivals create agreeable neighbors.
Revivals give strength to weak saints.
Revivals suit nineteenth century conditions.
Revivals give zest to all churchly activity.
Revivals that stay avoid sensational methods.
Revivals often square up old accounts at the grocer's.
Revivals furnish arguments infidels can not answer.
Revivals reach after sinners who are very low down.
Revivals whose fruit is hand-picked are of most account.
Revivals promote mutual confidence between pastor and people.
Revivals that start even one soul toward heaven are successful.
Revivals promote the social life of church and Sunday-school.
Revivals often make a better understanding among the churches.
Revivals are divine and human. The human side is not the greater.
Revivals reveal the peculiar talents of heretofore diffident Christians.
Revivals in which the Holy Ghost is honored give permanent results.
Revivals are to church members what Gideon's tests were to his soldiers.
Revivals reach some people, who could not be moved in any other way.
Revivals inspire the kind of singing that should last all the year round.
Revivals will everywhere receive the ready support of consecrated Epworthians.
Revivals have furnished thousands of members to churches who say they do not believe in them.
Revivals are accompanied by some things we can not approve. But does not the end justify the means?
Revivals are responsible for the conversion of two-thirds of the ministers who to-day stand in evangelical pulpits.
Revivals bring to the service the intermittent Christians. True. And some die before they have a chance to backslide, and probably get safely to heaven.
Revivals to reach the maximum of usefulness must receive the undivided attention of God's people. Entertainments, social visiting, extra duties should be laid aside for the time being. There must be concentration as well as consecration. "This one thing I do."—Epworth Herald.

Revival Preaching

Should be conversational. The minister ought to do as the lawyer does when he wants his jury to understand perfectly. He uses a style perfectly colloquial. The lofty, swelling style will do no good. The gospel will never produce any great effects until ministers talk to their hearers in the pulpit as they talk in private conversation.

It must be in the language of common life. The words should be such as are in common use. Jesus Christ invariably used such words. For a minister to neglect this principle is wicked. . . I have heard ministers preach even in a revival in such a way that I felt as if I wanted to say, "Sit down, and don't confound the people's minds with your barbarian preaching, which they can not understand."

It should be illustrative. Truths not illustrated are generally as well calculated to convert sinners as a mathematical demonstration.

Shall it be a matter of reproach that ministers follow the example of Jesus Christ in illustrating truth by facts! Let them do it, and let fools reproach them as story-telling ministers. They have Jesus Christ and common sense on their side.

Illustrations should be drawn from common life. Some think this is letting down the "dignity of the pulpit." Dignity indeed! Just the language of the devil. He rejoices in it. Jesus talked about the hens, and chickens, and children in the market-place, and sheep and lambs, shepherds, and farmers, husbandmen, and merchants. The illustration should always be such that the people may see through it—the truth illustrated.

Preaching should be repetitions. An eminent lawyer said to me: "In addressing a jury I always expect that what I wish to impress upon their minds I shall have to repeat, at least, twice, and often I repeat it three or four times, and even as many times as there are jurymen before me." If a jury, under oath, called to decide on common affairs, can not understand without so much repetition, how is it to be expected that men will understand the preaching of the gospel without it?

The minister should feel deeply on his subject. Let a minister only feel what he says, speak and act as he feels, and he will be eloquent.

He should aim at the conversion of his congregation. Most sermons were never aimed at converting sinners. I knew a case where a minister who had great revival success lent one of his sermons to a preacher who had none. He preached it, and when at its close a seeker came weeping to him for instruction he was amazed, and, apologizing, said, "I did not aim to wound you: I am sorry I hurt your feelings." Horrible!

A minister should address the feelings, and then deal with the conscience and probe to the quick.—From "Lectures on Revivals."

Too Much Preaching.

In a recent address at a Conference of the Free Church of Scotland Guild, Professor Henry Drummond suggested that it would be wise to change one of the Sunday services to some other form than that of a sermon. Among other things, he said that so far as he could learn, the people were tired and sick of over-sermonizing, and the ministers were tired and sick of making sermons; and he questioned whether making two sermons was the best thing a minister could do for Christ.

About every decade the question of too much preaching comes up for discussion by the religious press; but after the fires of discussion have died out, the pastors continue in the old way, preaching two sermons every Sabbath, and the second one generally to a much smaller audience. To change a custom as old and universal as that of preaching twice each Sabbath to the same congregation will require a change of popular sentiment upon the question rather than logical argument to its favor; and many of its advocates must run the gauntlet of criticism. At the time when the two-sermon plan was originated, it may have been highly expedient as the principal means of indoctrinating the people with the principles of Christianity; but to-day, under widely different conditions, the multiplication of religious books, the publication of numerous sermons, the increase of efficient teachers, the introduction of the prayer meeting, class meeting, Bible class, and Sunday-school, supersede to a great extent the necessity of so much preaching.

The progressive minister should not spend all his study hours in making sermons. He needs several hours each day for original investigation. If he neglects the work of acquiring fresh knowledge, he will soon exhaust his mental resources. He must be a feeder, else a dwarf. Where there is an outlet, there must be an inlet, or exhaustion will take place. Few ministers can prepare two good sermons each week besides attending to all their pastoral and official duties, and then have time left for general improvement.

Besides, it is always better for the preacher to concentrate his thoughts into one impressive sermon than to spread them over two, when, perhaps, the last one is only half remembered and digested and improved by his hearers. One good sermon a week, driven home to the consciences of men, will do more good than half a dozen ordinary ones hastily prepared under the pressure of too much work. The times demand not less preaching, but a decrease in quantity and an increase in quality.

Besides, would not a smaller quantity, but more substantial kind, of preaching improve the spiritual health of a congregation? Under the double-sermon regime our religion is made to consist too much in the duty of becoming "hearers of the word" rather than "doers," and hence we hear many defend their morality on the plea that they "go to church." Is not the temple of the nineteenth century regarded as an auditory rather than a place of worship. Thus we say of a Catholic, "He goes to mass," and of a Protestant we may say, "He goes to sermon."

Our people need more than to listen to sermons. They need spiritual exercise, an opportunity occasionally to participate in the services. The work of the church is twofold—constructive, or building up within, and aggressive, or winning by the utilizing of all the talent of the church. The former exists for the sake of the latter. Our morning service and Sunday-school are for constructive work; our evening service should reach the working element and be supplemental to the morning sermon. We believe that the stimulating of greater Christian activity, as the sequel of more earnest, vigorous preaching, would conduce to a more genuine and aggressive Christianity.—United Brethren Quarterly Review.

How To Be a Pastor.

Determine to become a pastor, cost what it may. If you are shy and bashful, conquer your diffidence; a man has no business to be a shepherd if he is afraid of his sheep. If you are naturally reserved and reticent, unlock your lips. Go and talk with your people about anything and everything until you get in touch with them. It is not best that a minister should talk exclusively about things that are spiritual. Talk to them about their business, and show your interest in what they are doing.

Watch your chances to put in a timely and loving word for your Master. You are Christ's man on Christ's business. If you can only gain your point by going often to the house, then go often. One soul wins others. You can reach the parents sometimes by reaching the son or daughter.

Personal conversation with individual souls will train you to be a closer, more suggestive and practical preacher. They will make you colloquial and simple and direct in the pulpit. Half of all the preaching is fired into the air. You will gather most precious material for your sermons by going about among your people and finding out what they are doing, what they are thinking, what they are suffering and what they need.

Devote a portion of every day to pastoral service. To visit a large congregation consumes a vast amount of time; but can you spend it more profitably elsewhere? Be on the lookout for sermon hints wherever you go; one hour with a live man may teach you more than two hours with a dead book.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

GAMBLING.—To those who are troubled to understand the essential wrong of gambling, we commend the following from a sermon by Archdeacon Sinclair at St. Paul's, London: "Gambling bears to stealing exactly the same relation that duelling bears to murder. In duelling each combatant is necessarily prepared to have his life taken, and in gambling each is similarly prepared to take or lose what is not properly his own. Of all habits, gambling is the most intrinsically savage. Morally, it is unchivalrous and unchristian. 'All gambling,' said the acute Archbishop Whately, 'since it desires to profit at the expense of another,' is a breach of the Tenth Commandment."—Observer.

Tremendous Roaring in the Head —Pain in the Stomach.

"To C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Two years ago I had a severe attack of the Grip, which left me in a terribly weak condition. Last winter I had another attack and was again very badly off, my health nearly wrecked. My appetite was all gone, I had no strength, felt tired all the time, had roaring noises in my head, like a waterfall. I also had severe headaches and in my stomach. I took medicines without benefit, until, having heard so much about Hood's Sarsaparilla, I concluded to try it, and the result is very gratifying. All the disagreable effects of the Grip are gone, I am free from pains and aches, and believe is surely curing my catarrh. I recommend it to all." GEO. W. COOK, St. Johnsbury, Vt.

Severe Sinking Pains

CURED

"About seven or eight months ago I was attacked by a cough, and at once began to take a medicine much advertised as an expectorant, and continued using it until I had taken about six bottles. Instead of giving me relief, it only made me worse. I tried several other remedies, but all in vain, and I don't think I had three whole nights' rest during my illness. I began to think that had laid hold of me, and my hopes of recovery were all gone. I was a mere skeleton, but a friend of mine, who had been some time away, called to see me. He recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and kindly sending me a bottle, I took it, but with little hopes of recovery. I am thankful, however, to say that it cured me, and I am to-day enjoying the best of health."—J. Wilmot Payne, Monrovia, Liberia.

BRIEFS.

Let the pastors in the Mississippi Conference remember that by Conference resolution next Sunday, March 5, is "Veteran's Day." Let a good day's work be done for the Conference claimants. They are deserving of good remembrance by all the church.

The periodical Christian is one whose religion is limited to special times and occasions. He is great on communion seasons, feeling that he must be at the Lord's table, however negligent of the sanctuary upon other Sabbaths. He is all warmth and excitement during protracted meetings, but soon cools off and falls into indifference until the next revival occurs. He is very zealous while religious conventions of different kinds are in session, but does little for Christ in ordinary church work. It is well to be alive in Christ's service in these ways, but one should be a Christian at all times and under all circumstances. A mark of the best type of piety is—"always abounding in the work of the Lord."—Presbyterian.

The three Conferences in Missouri have done a commendable thing in arranging for an educational convention during the coming Summer. The committee on arrangements met recently in St. Louis, and made out a program, selecting subjects to be discussed, and speakers. Lexington, Mo., is selected as the place of meeting, and the time is June 27. Our brethren up there are acting wisely in this matter. In order to secure better results in our educational work, we must enlist the co-operation of more of our people, and we think one of the best ways to do that is to bring the people together in conventions, where, under the guidance and teaching of men familiar with this line of work, they may learn something of the needs of the church, and hear plans discussed as how best to supply those needs. We trust our Missouri brethren will make their convention a big success.

We have had a glance at the tentative program of the World's Missionary Congress, which is to be held in Chicago, Sept. 28–Oct. 5, inclusive, but we do not understand that it is at our disposal to give to the public in its present state, and so we can only say that if the council having the matter in charge do not make any improvement, even on the initial program, it will be a very rich and varied congress. It is to embrace every feature of missionary work, whether in Christian, civilized or pagan and other non-Christian lands. It will deal with the moral, social and religious problems of our cities and our civilization in general; denominational unity in the solution of practical benevolent problems; methods of evangelizing the masses; all forms of home missionary work; Bible work; foreign missions, their reflex influence, their agencies; Christian governments and human rights; and a grand concert of prayer will probably be within the plan. Eminent men, secretaries, expert workers in all departments are to be invited to discuss themes and to exchange views and narrate experiences.—Missionary Review.

What the church needs most to-day is a few whole-souled, thorough-going, downright religious men and women—men and women who will dare to die before they will dare to "play at religion."

A Little Gleam in an Editor's Life.

It is said if you place a crawling child in a room where only one little ray of sunshine peeps through a crevice, the child will crawl to the bright spot and try to use it as a plaything. We feel like the child in the darkened room, hastening to the bright spot on the carpet. A bright ray has darted into our sanctum, and looks so beautiful that we must play with it just a little bit. We would not have the reader suppose that we ordinarily dwell in the gloom and shadows. Not at all. But sometimes an editor thinks he is obliged to do a certain thing, and does it, and slap! bang! go the window shutters and the beautiful light retreats before the incoming darkness, and his poor editorial heart goes pit-a-pat, pit-a pat, in presence of the ghosts of retributive justice who throng around clamoring for his punishment for the rash act done. A crevice too small for him to escape by, but large enough to admit a ray of brightness into that gloom, is a God send in that case.

Not many days ago we took occasion to exercise the editorial prerogative and run the pen through a sentence from one of our most valued and widely known and best appreciated correspondents. His high position in the church made the pencil tremble as it ran through the words. What he had been, what he is now, and what he promises to be in the future, made the act a daring and dangerous one. But most men can afford to be brave and daring when the person against whom they make a show of bravery is hundreds of miles away, and so in a spasm of as heroic courage as was ever displayed on the "foughten fields of this world's history," the fatal words, condemned at the bar of editorial wisdom, were stricken from the manuscript. Repentance came, but, alas! it was like Esau's, too late. The rashness of the act began to appear in all its enormity, and it grew bigger and more dreadful and more enormous until the poor editor actually vacated his chair and office and took the flying train to escape a visitation of the horrors. Three long days and nights he secluded himself from printers and publishers and newspaper correspondents, brooding over his temerity and wondering how the tragedy would end. But even a scared editor can't stay long away. He must return and face the music no matter how martial it may be. And so he crept back and began casting furtive glances over the pile of unopened letters on his desk to see if his injured contributor had put in an appearance! Sure enough, there was the familiar chirography, and with opening eyes and trembling hands he took up the postal, expecting to hear and feel an explosion of dynamite! And the strange adage was again verified, for "the unexpected happened!" Here is what that postal said:

Dear Doctor: How faithful are the wounds of an editor. Many thanks for that erasure. I certainly did not intend to convey the idea which that language indicated, but just the opposite. How many men have been spared exposure by the kindly pencil of a friendly editor! Fraternally,

The editor did not exactly swoon away, but he crawled over to that bright spot in his sanctum and played with it till his heart was again filled with hope and brightness. And now why can't everybody in God's great church do something like that to make a fellow-being bright and hopeful? A ray is a little thing, but it comes from the fountain of the Sun, and all that is necessary for it to beautify and brighten is a small opening through which it may pour itself.

A word may be small, but there are little openings in human souls through which kind words will enter and carry brightness to weary spirits, and refresh natures tired with the cares of earth! How little effort it requires to manufacture happiness.

The Compassion of Christ.

The great fact of the incarnation of our Lord is proof enough of his divine compassion. That sort of compassion had its eternal home in his heart, and moved him to come to earth "to seek and to save that which was lost." It is not of this that we desire to write a few lines, but of the compassion that ruled the heart and was manifested in the life and evidenced by the deeds of the Man of Nazareth. How often in the Gospels we meet with the expression: "He was moved with compassion!" In almost every instance this remark is made when Jesus was surrounded by the multitudes and was contemplating their condition and circumstances. It seems that a crowd of people always visibly affected him, and that the feeling of compassion at such times was uppermost and dominated all the other feelings of his soul. The feeling of compassion is easily moved in most men by the sight of suffering and want, but generally goes no further. It may go so far as to desire to relieve the sufferer, but rarely penetrates the condition out of which came the want and suffering. At this point the largeness and breadth of the compassion of Christ manifest themselves. His compassion not only pitied the sufferer and manifested a desire to relieve him, but it went further than his temporal condition and showed itself as most deeply concerned for the wants of his spiritual nature. The compassion of our Lord would often change its object, even while he was exercising it. This is shown in many cases, where in healing the physical ills and diseases of men, his compassion would reach out in search of moral and spiritual diseases and move him to administer to their cure also. Bodily weakness attracted his compassion, but under the bodily weakness he saw spiritual weakness, needing strength, and his compassion moved him to supply that need also. Hungry people moved his compassion to work to supply their hunger "lest they should faint by the way;" but when in that hunger of the physical nature he saw the type of a deeper and more distressing soul-hunger, all the great deeps of his compassion were stirred with desire to minister to their spiritual necessities.

An ordinary Christian will look at a great crowd of people and never think of the deeper necessities of their souls. Christ looked at the crowds that thronged him, and they appeared to him "as sheep having no shepherd." He looked at the crowds, and they appeared as so many immortal spirits ready for the reaper's sickle. He saw in everyone of the crowd a blurred and defaced image of his own glorious person, and his compassion moved itself to retouch that image that it might glow again in its original beauty. Under the rags of poverty, beneath the loathsome diseases of the body, alongside of the deep, spiritual necessities of the people he saw divine possibilities, and his compassion moved itself to help them make those possibilities the realities of their daily lives. The compassion of our Lord seemed to delight itself in supplying the soul-needs and alleviating the heart-woes of the people with whom he came in contact. He saw so clearly that deep truth, that where the soul is wrong, all is wrong, that his compassion laid contribution upon all the resources of his great nature to right that wrong. He saw so clearly that other truth, that where the soul is right, it will right all its conditions and circumstances, that his compassion exerted itself to save and sweeten the souls of men.

In his philanthropy, work for bodily ills, while generally performed first, was really secondary. In his philanthropy the supreme thing was work for the soul.

That is the philanthropy which should characterize the life of everyone of us—a philanthropy which, in the language of "our excellent Book of Discipline," does "good of every possible sort, and as far as possible, to all men: to their bodies of the ability which God giveth, by giving food to the hungry, by clothing the naked, by visiting or helping them that are sick or in prison; to their souls, by instructing, reproving or exhorting, all we have any intercourse with; trampling under foot that enthusiastic doctrine, that 'we are not to do good, unless our hearts be free to it.'"

The Temperance Women.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union held in Carondelet Street Methodist Church, last week, a joint convention of the Unions of the first and second districts. Mrs. M. R. Goodale, president of the State Union; Mrs. F. A. Lyons, president of the First District Union, and Mrs. W. V. Crouch, president of the Second District Union, were present. The attendance of members was very good. The various committees made gratifying reports and the routine business of the convention was transacted satisfactorily. The consecration service at each noonday was an auspicious opening for the business meeting which followed. Rev. F. A. Parker, of Rayne Memorial Church, gave an interesting address the first day, as also did Mrs. Goodale and Mrs. Wells, the National organizer. Much deep sorrow was expressed at the death of Rev. G. S. Inge, who had engaged to be present and help in the work. During the meetings several persons addressed the audiences, among whom were Mrs. C. E. Merrick and Dr. J. M. Beard, of Felicity Street M. E. Church; Dr. La Prade, Dr. Purser, and others. During all the time the audiences were fairly good and appreciative.

We desire here to point out what we regard as a serious mistake committed by most temperance workers. We think public meetings in the interests of temperance should be held in places where those who need the benefit of such meetings will attend. Those who need temperance work do not and will not attend temperance meetings in churches. In a church the large majority of the audience is already in line with the temperance movement and nearly all the work done is superfluous. It does not reach those who need it most. Will our temperance workers take this criticism kindly and look it over and see if there is not some show of reason in it?

Superintendents' and Teachers' Union.

The New Orleans Sunday-school Superintendents' and Teachers' Union will hold their regular monthly meeting next Tuesday, the seventh, at 7:30 P. M., in the Carondelet Street Methodist Church. The election of officers for the coming year will take place. There will also be a normal class drill conducted by Mr. A. F. Godat, a leading Sunday-school worker of the city. The members of the Union are especially requested to attend, and a cordial invitation is extended to all others to be present.

A Call for United Prayer.

Jesus said: "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."

The Scarritt Bible and Training-school stands to-day a grand testimony to the fulfillment of this precious promise. In the beginning, when it seemed impossible, there were those who agreed to ask it of the Father; and step by step has its needs been brought to him, and what was asked "on earth" has been done by the Father in heaven.

Now, once again have we agreed touching that we shall ask. Money is needed to pay for furniture and to meet other expenses, but more than all for the endowment fund that the school may be maintained; so we are asking a special blessing from God on the Easter services, that the people may be moved to make a large offering that day, larger than ever before, that his name may be honored through their liberality making his work to prosper. Will not every member of the Woman's Missionary Society join this prayer league and offer that petition daily until Easter, and ask her pastor to make public prayer for it every Sunday? Thus adding faith to faith, we shall be strong to prevail. "According to your faith" is the measure of God's gifts. Let us expect great things from him, and show our faith by our works.

MISS MARY HELM,
MISS BELLE H. BENNETT,
MRS. S. C. TRUEHEART,
Committee on Easter Services.

Sunday-School Union Anniversary.

The officers of the Methodist Sunday-school Union, of this city, are preparing for the celebration of the anniversary of this old and valuable organization. At a meeting held, last week, in Carondelet Street Church, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: E. P. Mackie, president; W. B. Thomson, vice-president; J. H. Campman, treasurer, and D. Zable, secretary. The anniversary is to be held April 16 in Carondelet Church. E. P. Mackie, H. W. Spear, W. B. Thomson and D. Zable constitute the committee to prepare the program for the occasion. The organists of Rayne Memorial, Carondelet and Felicity Churches were appointed a Committee on Music.

At this meeting the Union made the request that all our Sunday-school workers be urged to attend the Normal Class conducted by A. F. Godat every Tuesday, 7:30 P. M., Carondelet Street Church, and the Teachers' Bible Class, taught by Rev. W. H. La Prade, every Friday, 7:30 P. M. in the same church.

We urge our pastors and Sunday-school superintendents and teachers to co-operate harmoniously to make the occasion a successful one. Occurring at the time of our District Conference, it ought to exceed in interest anything we have ever had, and we have had some notable celebrations. We hope to see the old church crammed with children and grown folks, too.

The following figures have been published by the Commissioner of Education: Number of pupils enrolled last year in the common schools of the country, 13,203,170, and the average daily attendance, 8,404,228. There were 363,922 teachers, 122,551 being males and 241,371 females, and the total expenditure for the support of the public schools was $148,173,487. The progress of education among the colored people is presented in the following statistics: Number of pupils, 1,309,251; teachers, male, 13,567; female, 10,497.

NOTES.

Good preaching becomes better preaching when a praying church is behind the preacher, and becomes the best preaching when both preacher and people are filled to overflow with the Divine Spirit. Then the word runs and burns like fire.

Here is a good point from one of our exchanges which we commend to pastors and church workers: "A hotel proprietor says the 'hotel business is a cumulative one. Brown, if he is suited, sends Smith, and Smith sends Robinson, and so on. But the trick is to get Brown.' Just so with the matter of church attendance. The successful church is the one that 'gets Brown.'"—Mid-Continent.

A man would be considered very boorish who would sit down to dinner at a well-filled table and find fault with the head of the household because there were dishes served which he disliked. An editor sets out various dishes because various people are to be fed. If some are not to your taste, remember there are others who like that very thing.

Christ is the soul of all missionary enterprise. This was shown recently at a gathering of Boston Unitarians, when one of the number stated that fifteen Congregational Churches gave more in a year for missionary purposes than all the 450 Unitarian Societies of the country. The deeper the Spirit of Christ pervades the church the more far-reaching will be her missionary effort.

One thing has been certainly proved by the "dispensary system" of selling liquor in Athens, Ga., and that is, the city does not need the saloons as a source of revenue. The largest revenue from the saloons for any year was something over six thousand dollars. The first year of the "dispensary" placed above nine thousand dollars to the credit of the city. So away goes the argument "for revenue."

Some people—and some of them are preachers—are always complaining that "they are not appreciated." If you know any such, just whisper to them that maybe if they were appreciated "according to deserts," the fables might be completely turned. They might find themselves in the condition of the Irish prisoner, who said that "justice was the last thing he wanted." If some people were appreciated as they deserve, it would be the last of them.

The will of Mr. James G. Blaine will be apt to strike everyone as a remarkable document.

It is remarkable for its brevity, clearness and conciseness, but still more so for the bequests made.

To each of his two daughters and his son he gives fifty dollars. To each of three grandchildren he bequeaths twenty-five dollars. The son of young James G. and Marie Nevins Blaine is not mentioned.

With the exception of these small bequests, his entire estate, real and personal—popularly supposed to amount to about a million dollars—is given to Mrs. Blaine.

The will was made Jan. 7, about three weeks before Mr. Blaine's death.—New York Herald.

They who lay great stress on the use of Scriptural terms and strenuously object to any others, ought, in common honesty, to be very particular about using the terms as the scriptural writers use them. Otherwise they handle the Word of God deceitfully, misapply its precepts, and bring in wrongfully its great authority to support their own fond fancies. That this is constantly done, and with great show of zeal for the Bible, both in the use of "holy" and "perfect," anyone at all familiar with modern religious controversy does not need to be assured. It is time a halt was called in the matter. It is time there was less of reading our own notions into the Bible and more of patient, careful drawing out the exact ideas of inspiration. The sacred Word has suffered terribly at the hands of dogmatizers and controversialists, especially on this subject of which we are treating. There is still need of Wesley's caution that we are in danger of fanaticism every hour if we "depart ever so little from Scripture, yea, or from the plain literal meaning of any text taken in connection with the context."—Zion's Herald.

To those persons who imagine that can do everything, and to those who go to the other extreme and say they can do nothing, these words of Bishop Phillips Brooks are commended without comment:

It is almost as presumptuous to think you can do nothing as to think you can do everything. The latter forgets supposes that God exhausted himself when he made you; but the former supposes that God made a hopeless blunder when he made you, which is quite as impious for you to think.

The only way to escape the galling, grinding, degrading slavery of the world is to enter heartily into the glorious service of Christ. The true freedom comes from Christian service to men. Paul boasted of his freedom, and yet he said of himself, "Your servant for Jesus' sake." Freedom through the truth brings a man into the sphere of duty to spread the truth. Obedience, strict and severe—obedience to the law of love—is the only gateway to real liberty. The same great preacher has said: "There is no escape from the slavery of other men like that which comes of the intelligent and earnest service of other men."

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Moody and Sankey are now working with the churches in Baltimore.

Mr. Blaine left his property all to his wife. He was worth $1,000 000.

It is reported that Gen. Booth, of the Salvation Army, will visit this country soon.

Any of us are willing that God shall help us; how few are willing that he shall master us!

Governor Foster has called a State Immigration Convention, to meet in this city, March 21.

Dr. Washington Gladden takes the place of Phillips Brooks in lectures at Harvard University.

Bro. H. R. Singleton's family passed through our city last week en route from California to his work in Jackson, La.

Prof. Drummond is to deliver the Lowell Lectures in Boston this Spring. The subject is, "The Evolution of Man."

We see it stated that all the States, excepting eight, have laws for scientific instruction on the subject of temperance.

One reason why there is much profitless preaching is in the fact that there is not a clear conception of the value of human souls.

Rev. John McNeil, the celebrated Scotch preacher, is to assist Mr. Moody in his World's Fair special services next Summer.

Our brethren of the M. E. Church are preaching the gospel in India and other parts of Asia in thirteen different languages.

There will be in the World's Fair grounds thirty-five eating establishments, and 59,400 people can dine at the same time.

It is said that Joel Chandler Harris—"Uncle Remus"—was born in Africa. Does that account for his splendid African dialect?

Five daily papers will be printed on the World's Fair grounds during the Exposition; one morning paper and four evening papers.

As far as our observation goes, in matters of church finance, "the rich are the poorest givers, and the poor are the richest givers."

Thomas Nelson Baker—a negro—carried off the highest honors at the Boston University this year. He is a Virginian and a Methodist preacher.

Miss Jennie Cassiday, though confined to her bed for thirty years, was a notable Christian worker. She died recently at her home in Louisville, Ky.

Evangelist Culpepper is having a successful meeting in Columbus, Miss. Business houses close up for the day service that their employees may attend.

Our work among the Indians is about the oldest mission work we have. It began in 1823. We have now 90 missionaries and 12,000 members among them.

Dr. M. S. Terry, of Garrett Biblical Institute, has in press "The Drama of the Song of Songs." It is a new translation and arrangement of the Song of Solomon.

Bro. John F. Foster, our pastor in Natchitoches, La., gave us a pleasant half-hour last week. He represents his work in that ancient city as opening auspiciously.

We are pained to see by the papers that a son of Rev. J. A. Parker, our pastor at Homer, La., was accidentally killed by the discharge of a gun one evening last week.

A little girl, after rummaging through her mother's trunk, came and said: "Mama, I found your religion in your trunk." She had discovered the mother's church letter.

A woman recently died in Upland, Pa., who was baptized by John Wesley in 1789 on his last visit to Ireland. Her name was Margaret Cassidy Gillespie, and her age 103 years.

Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan preached two excellent sermons in the Methodist Church here last Sunday, to the pleasure and delight of a large and appreciated audience.—Winston Signal, Feb. 18.

Just after we went to press, last week, the dispatches announced the death of Rev. George S. Inge, of Columbus, Miss. Mr. Inge was a very popular evangelist and his life was a busy one.

The Central Pennsylvania Methodist says: "The public taste is set for the conversational style in the pulpit, such as characterized the Master as he 'sat and taught,' rather than the oratorical or declamatory style."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Gloster, Amite county, is to have a school building to cost $7,143—the contract having been let to J. F. Mercer. This speaks well for this young and growing town, and testifies unmistakably to the character of its people.—Clarion-Ledger.

Justice E. C. Fenner, of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, has been made president of the Board of Administrators of Tulane University, in place of Senator R. L. Gibson, deceased. Judge Feuner is eminently qualified for that responsible post.

Tulane University administrators have decided to abolish the high school connected with the University. It will be done gradually, so that the pupils now entered will be permitted to go through.

Dr. W. V. Kelley, a member of the New York East Conference, and a pastor of New Haven, Conn., has been elected editor of the Methodist Review of the M. E. Church. His friends predict for him a brilliant editorial career.

We are sure that all our readers will sympathize with our Bro. J. A. Parker, of Homer, La. It was a terrible experience and heart-rending. May the Lord's grace be abundantly supplied! See Bro. Parker's note in another column.

The Interior says that a Presbyterian pastor in Rochester, N. Y., was compelled to resign, because his people would not cease to have "church entertainments" in the shape of dog-shows. What next in religious amusements?

A note from Bro. H. G. Hawkins, dated Japan, Jan. 23, says: "Mrs. M. J. Lambuth is to sail by the same ship which carries this." We suppose then that Sister Lambuth is now in this country. She will receive a warm welcome in Mississippi, we are sure.

This from John Wesley is going the rounds, and we send it on:

I never knew that remark to fail, "He that loves to dispute does not love God." Follow peace with all men, without which you can not effectually follow holiness. Meddle not with them that love contention.

The chief of the Secret Service of the World's Fair Police has perfected "a sort of international reception committee, composed of three or four hundred veteran detectives, who will receive with open arms and a nice pair of handcuffs every thief that comes to town."

Bro. Mellen, of Meridian district, writes: "You may look for some fine reports anent church-building enterprises in this district before long. There are five now being built, with seven or eight to follow in the near future." That is good "News from the Work."

After we went to press last week the dispatches announced the death of Rev. Geo. S. Inge, evangelist. At one time Mr. Inge was a member of the North Mississippi Conference. We trust some one of that Conference will supply us with a sketch of the deceased minister.

At an oratorical contest among the law students at Tulane University for the valedictory oration in next April, the decision was in favor of a graduate of Centenary College, Mr. O. H. Simpson, of Lafayette, La. We recollect that Mr. Simpson took a prize for oratory while at Centenary. Hurrah for Centenary!

Bros. J. S. Oakley and T. B. Malone have each brought us under separate obligations for copies of their handsome Journal of the North Mississippi Conference. We know no "Minutes" better gotten up. These secretaries will be fortunate, however, if they escape a suit for slander on account of certain portraits therein contained. Better steer shy of some college men, brethren.

Too late for insertion in last week's issue we received the following personals from Bro. J. R. Bingham, of Carrollton, Miss.:

Bro. Lipscomb is recovering from a slight attack of fever.

Bro. Newell preached for us yesterday. He delivered a most excellent sermon to a large congregation. Bro. Newell is held in high esteem by this entire community. Carrollton is his old home.

Notice.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference Brotherhood:

Dear Brethren: Bro. Jno. A. Ellis has gone from our midst. Assessment No. 15 is now due and must be paid within sixty days. Remit by postoffice money order or registered letter to Rev. I. W. Cooper, at Hazlehurst, Miss.

Church Dedication.

Sunday, Feb. 19, Rev. Bishop Chas. B. Galloway, D. D., preached an eloquent and impressive sermon based on Ps. xxvii, and then, according to our Book of Discipline, solemnly dedicated to Almighty God and set apart from all unhallowed and common uses the elegant house of worship which had been erected in Lauderdale, Miss., under the administration of the Rev. N. M. Clark. The church was built more than a year ago, but the good people of Lauderdale were determined that only a Bishop should dedicate. It is a monument to their zeal and liberality. There was no debt on the building, but $100 were needed to provide better lights and a carpet. The amount was quickly contributed. The Bishop was constrained to atone for his inability to preach Sunday night by preaching Monday afternoon. He reached Meridian Monday evening in time to deliver a fine discourse before the Woman's Missionary Society in Central Church.

"Beta Tau" Brought To Taw.

I have been reading the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of Feb. 9, 1893, and find a piece written by "Beta Tau," and it made me feel like bringing "Beta Tau" to taw. I address "Beta Tau" in the singular, for I am writing individually to that person.

What a happy thought, when the preacher arrives, to have a parsonage to go into. The very thought ought to have kept them warm until a fire could be made, and provision at so short a distance. Of course, the good wife always provides a lunch basket when she starts on a journey, and especially if she has children. I really believe a preacher that would grumble that had a parsonage provided would grumble to be hung.

There is something in a church that revolts at being overrun with grumbling preachers year after year, who go to Conference dressed in fine clothes, with a stove-pipe hat on his head, while the church as a general thing have no shoes for their children to wear, much less flannel, in the cold, bleak Winter. The preacher has not five dollars in the world; what was to hinder him from working a little? He did not visit much, and could have appeared at Conference with a less expensive hat and chewed and smoked less tobacco, if you please.

With all reverence to the preachers who paid up the deficient assessment, I can not but ignore the preacher who threatened to lock the church door (while the congregation was in the house) until the assessment was paid. I have yet to learn that I am compelled to pay an assessment imposed on me by the stewards without my consent.

Come up out of the mire, brethren; go west, go west.

A PREACHER'S WIFE.

Meridian District.

On account of serious illness the Rev. H. C. Brown, P. C., has been relieved from the pastoral charge of Lauderdale circuit, Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, and the Rev. W. T. Browning, L. P., appointed to supply that charge. It is cause for deep regret that our gifted young brother has been so sorely afflicted. Let prayers be made for his restoration to health and a long life of usefulness.

Bro. Browning takes hold of the work with zeal and the spirit of the Master.

A Distressed Family.

MR. EDITOR: A deep gloom has spread over our home, and our hearts are full of sorrow. About 6:30 this evening Bennie Sligh, one of our twins, was accidently shot and died in about two minutes and a half. Not ten minutes before his death he left the dining-room cheerful as a bird. After receiving the contents of the entire charge in his neck, he called to his twin brother, saying, "Kiss mama for me." This was his only utterance. So sudden, so sad! Oh, how our Father has chastised us for the last twelve months! Pray for us.

Your brother, J. A. PARKER.

Errata.

In my paper on "The Care of the Parsonage," my bad writing causes the printer to make me say some things I do not want to abide by. What I said about "so-called 'ornamental' or 'useful'" things was of grasses, not grapes. The kind of onions to carry over—to keep—is the red variety. I do not know the variety you make me name—"Rea." Please correct.

Missionary Debt—Mississippi Conference.

PRAYER AND SELF-DENIAL.

Vicksburg, Crawford St., C. G. Andrews, P. C.	$34 60

About one preacher in ten in the Mississippi Conference has observed the Week of Prayer and Self-denial. It is true the time appointed was unseasonable for our country circuits, and rather soon after Conference for our town and city preachers; but time enough has elapsed for the latter to have observed some other week for the purpose stated. We are fast becoming connectional in name only, and fail too often to respond to the directions of those in authority. United prayer and united effort are the great needs of our church everywhere.

T. L. MELLEN,
Miss. Conf. Sol.

A Correction.

Our North Mississippi Conference Journal represents Greenwood as having paid $45 to an assistant pastor last year. The item is incorrectly placed. It should have been credited to Carrollton. Besides paying this, Carrollton fully met all the assessments levied upon her. On the Conference collections she went nearly $100 ahead. The only charge in the Winona district not financially short, she should at least be rewarded and encouraged by a correct exhibit of her contributions.

R. A. MEEK.

Notice.

All members of the North Mississippi Conference who gave me their subscriptions for Missionary Reporter and Sowers and Reapers, at last session of the Conference, and who fail to receive them in due time will please notify me. If by your removal from one charge to another, your postoffice address has been changed, you will notify Dr. I. G. John, Nashville, Tenn., of the change.

Errata.

Much obliged for the publication of my paper, but you or some one made a mistake in the last paragraph. I meant to say: "You will soon see a divine hand reaching over the battlements to help you; call the laborers." etc. You have it, "To call the laborers," etc. The to ought not to be there, and spoils the sense. Will you mention the error next week?

ALSO COPIES OF PAINTINGS TAKEN FROM THE

GREAT GALLERIES OF THE WORLD,

To the vast army of stay-at-homes the world beyond the sea, which once seemed so far away from them, has now become nearer. Events that take place in South Africa are known a few hours afterwards in America, and a feeling of familiarity with distant lands thus seems to have been created by telegraph. Besides this, we have books of travel, lectures by explorers and pictures to tell back upon, so that if "we can not go strange countries for to see," we have them brought home to our doors.

This GREAT NEW BOOK, containing a vast collection of Photographs, gathered from every corner of the globe, is printed on enamelled paper, bound in the most durable manner, and sold at $1 per copy.

CHRIST WALKING ON THE SEA OF GALILEE.

AMONG the great religious paintings of modern times Christ Walking on the Sea, by Charles Francer, is a masterpiece. The text from which the picture was taken is this: When even was come, his disciples went down unto the sea, and entered into a ship. And it was dark, and the ship was in the midst of the sea, and Jesus alone was on the land. And was not come to them. And the sea arose by reason of a great wind that blew. And he saw them toiling in rowing, for the wind was contrary unto them, and the ship was now in the midst of the sea tossed with the waves. Jesus cometh unto them, walking upon the sea and would have passed them. But when the disciples saw him walking on the sea and drawing nigh unto the ship, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out for fear. And immediately he talked with them, and saith unto them, "Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid."

This beautiful biblical description the painter has chosen for his subject, and his wonderful painting appeals in the highest degree to the religious sentiment, as well as the artistic taste and refinement of every nationality and every creed.

The reproduction just issued is a fine photo-etching, in which the light and shade of the original are faithfully preserved. Size, 21x28 inches; printed on fine plate paper.

The above handsome picture will be mailed free to each old subscriber sending $2 to renew his subscription for another year, and remitting amount due. It will also be mailed free to each new subscriber sending us $2.

COMMONPLACE.

A commonplace life, we say, and we sigh;
But why should we sigh as we say?
The commonplace sun in the commonplace sky
Makes up the commonplace day.
The moon and the stars are commonplace things,
And the flower that blooms, and the bird that sings.
But dark were the world, and sad our lot,
If the flowers failed, and the sun shone not;
And God, who studies each separate soul,
Out of commonplace lives makes his beautiful whole.

God's Time-Locks.

A modern invention is the time-lock. This is a combination of clock-work with the lock of a vault or safe, which renders it impossible to open the door, until a certain time. When the door is locked, the clock is set for a definite hour, and until that hour comes the safe can not be opened, its contents can not be obtained.

And there are time-locks on God's storehouses. He has laid up a great store of goodness for our future use. But on every storehouse there is a time-lock. The hour is fixed when the door is to be opened. And it is useless for us to try to anticipate that time. How often we worry about to-morrow's trials, and question whether we shall have strength to do the duty that confronts us, or bear the cross about to be laid upon us. But we can not open the storehouse of God's grace and strength till the appointed hour comes. The lock is set for the exact moment, when we shall need what is laid up for us, and not until the clock releases the bar can the door be opened. "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee." And not until the feet of the priests touched the waters of Jordan, did the river part before them. "When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned." But the Hebrew children were thrown into the very midst of the fiery furnace before the promise was made good in their case.

And so we are taught to ask for daily bread, and are promised strength according to the day. God has never promised dying grace to the living. It is not until the hour strikes that the door opens. But then he is faithful, and then he is sure. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." The time-lock of his providence can never be forced. But just as surely as the hour of need comes, there are opened to us the stores of strength and grace long ago laid up for us.—New York Evangelist.

Early Training.

There is no member of the human body so difficult to control as the tongue. This is as true of the full grown man or woman as it is of the child, but the child has no mind with which to direct its unruly member. Later in life we are supposed to acquire a discretion which is intended to act as a guard upon the tongue, although—well, but that is another story, as Rudyard Kipling would say. It is undoubtedly unwise for any parent to allow too much freedom of speech in a child, and if mothers concentrate more of the earlier training of their children upon that one point I think it would be better for the future happiness of both teacher and scholar. Because a child is precocious, a retort, however pert, is none the less out of place. With a child it is particularly true that "give it an inch, and it will take a yard." The slightest encouragement of what a parent knows is not a good tendency in a child undoes months of training. The saucy answer of a child, no matter how "cutely" said, may be laughed at by the guest because politeness allows him no alternative; but we are often compelled to outwardly appear other than we are prompted by our inner feelings. Much as I dislike the corporal punishment of children, I would rather see a child soundly whipped at the table than to see it encouraged in the unfortunate habit of being as much heard as seen. Early habits are very hard to shake off, and the precocious child, apt at retort, is simply the budding of the sarcastic young woman. And of what type of girlhood can we more honestly say, "Good Lord, deliver us?"—Exchange.

Educate the Children to Higher Ideals.

We are too ready to impart instruction to children from low moods and on a low plane, because we do not ourselves habitually dwell in the latitude of the uplands. Motives of policy, of vanity, of seeming instead of being right, enter into our lives, and, alas! poison the lives of the little ones at the fountain. A grand life, a brave example, a splendid instance of fortitude, of self-abnegation, of courage against odds, is never in vain. It is an object-lesson that flames out from the sky, as the planet amid the host of lesser stars. Whether it be an Arctic or an African explorer, the leader of a forlorn hope, the missionary living among the island lepers, or the army nurse leaving home and luxury to minister to the wounded and soothe the dying, the noble ideal is uplifted before the eyes of those who are yet in the initial stages, and whose characters are not yet in the mold of destiny. This thought of the deity ideal gives the chief value of our annual Decoration Day, giving us pause amid the pomp and ease of peace, that we may think not of the pageantry of war, but of its sufferings, its fever and thirst, its rigors of cold and furnace heats, its weary marches, fierce battles, and the patriotism which alone condones its bitter woe and the mourning that follows in its track.—Harper's Bazar.

The immortality of the soul is a subject in which we are all so deeply and intimately concerned, that it argues the most stupid insensibility not to make it the constant object of our reflections. All our actions and all our thoughts must take such different directions, according as we cherish or reject the hope of eternity, that it is impossible to act or determine rightly, unless we regulate our conduct and decisions by a continual reference to this main and primary question.—Pascal.

How to Reach a Green Old Age.

"Go to bed when you can, and get up when you must." Such was the rule recommended by Sir James Sawyer to a Young Men's Christian Association at Birmingham. Alcohol he declared to be a cause of sleeplessness, by keeping an excess of blood on the brain. A "night-cap" might produce drowsiness, but not sleep, and no one could employ it without shortening life. A man might eat what he liked so long as he did not eat too much. Manual laborers should have a good feed in the middle of the day and a snooze afterwards. Brain-workers should have their dinner when work is done. As to quantity, when in doubt leave off. Even teetotalers were accused by Sir James of being excessive drinkers. A large cup of tea for breakfast, less than a tumblerful of liquid at dinner, one small cup of tea in the afternoon, and half a tumblerful at supper, was all the drink he allowed. Alcohol was not a necessity. He often said a patient might take it, but rarely that he must. People should sleep with the window open at the top, and a ring at the bottom of the door to prevent the dangerous floor-draught. Gas fires were undesirable. A morning sponge in a circular, flat bath, and with water of the same temperature as the body, was beneficial. Controlling his appetites, his desires, and his temper, so might a man be gently led to a green old age. —British Exchange.

Consecration.

Consecration just means to have the hands filled. In I. Chron. xxix, 5, we find David asking the question: "Who, then, is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" When you look to the marginal reading for "consecrate," to find it is to "fill his hand." If your hand is full of anything, there is room for nothing else. If our hands are full in the Lord's service, then there is no room left for the world. Sometimes a lawyer has so much work to do that he has to refuse new clients. "My hands are full," he says; "I can't give you any attention." Now, apply the illustration to God's people. How is it that the world comes knocking at the door, and so often gains admittance? The reason is simply this: We are not consecrated to the Lord—our hands are not filled for him. But let our hands be filled, let Christ have his place on the throne of the heart, let us be busy at work for him: and what is the result? We turn round at once and tell the world that we are so busy in the affairs of eternity that we have neither time nor inclination to "strive with the potsherds" in any shape or form. But indeed the consecrated man is scarce ever troubled with the world asking him to come down off the wall. The worldlings very soon see when a man is out and out for the Lord, and, as such a man does not answer their purpose, they let him alone. The world knows him not.—Railway Signal.

A Phenomenon.

Jesus is a phenomenon in respect to his religion. His religion is phenomenal, first, in respect to its purpose. That purpose was not to organize a sect, frame a ritual, found a theology, propagate a dynasty. But his purpose was to transfigure human character. Recall his doctrine of spirituality, of worship, of purity, of forgiveness, of self-denial, of society, of blessedness, of morality: in one word, of character. Compare his heaven-the heaven that he came to open to mankind, with the heaven of the Greek Elysium, the Moslem Paradise, the Scandinavian Valhalla, the Indian Hunting Ground, the Buddhistic Nirvana. Their rock is not as our rock, even our enemies themselves being judges.

Again, the religion of Jesus is phenomenal in respect to its method. That method was not by sword, not by legislation, not by prodigy, not by shout, not by gold, not even by lore. That method was by teaching, by parable, by example, by witnessing. Listen to his own testimony before Pontius Pilate: "To this end have I been born, and to this end am I come into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth: everyone that is of the truth heareth my voice." In fine, Christianity is an absolutely phenomenal religion.—From "Problems of Jesus."

The Value of Trifles.

In the United States Mint, at Philadelphia, the visitor to the gold-room notices a rack placed over the floor for him to walk on; on inquiring its purpose, he is told that it is to prevent the visitor from carrying away with the dust of his feet the minute particles of precious metals which, in spite of the utmost care, will fall upon the floor when the rough edges of the bar are filed, and that the sweepings of the buildings save thousands of dollars yearly. How much more precious are the minute fragments of time which are wasted by the young, especially those who are toiling in the mints of knowledge! Who can estimate the value to a college student of this golden dust, these raspings and parings of life, these leavings of days, and remnants of hours so valueless singly, so inestimable in the aggregate, could they be gleaned up and turned to mental improvement!—Wm. Mathews, in Western Christian Advocate.

Helpfulness Is Happiness.

A lady was once asked to define her ideal of happiness, says the Boston Congregationalist, whereupon she set herself to answer the question, and found it a more difficult matter than she had supposed. After studying the problem in all its bearings, she concluded that, upon the whole, she could stand by this definition: "My ideal of happiness is the helping of somebody up." Is not this a strong, safe, blessed working rule? It covers all circumstances and applies to the doing of the "next thing," whether it be soothing of a wailing child, the sweeping of the kitchen floor, the leading of a great cause or the lightening of a spiritual doubt of burden. Each alike may come within the range of our daily duties and give ample opportunity for helping somebody "up."

The Bairns' Songs.

"Sing me some of the bairns' songs," said Dr. Guthrie, the great Scotch preacher, when he was lying on the bed from which he want to the kingdom of glory.

A great scholar of that nation, "Rabbi" Duncan, they called him, because of his great Hebrew learning, was found, one day, in his declining years, by a friend, intently reading a little book.

"What are you doing?" said the friend.

Smiling, the Rabbi said, in his native Scotch speech, "I'm learnin' the way to heaven out o' a bairn's buik."

It is the old way. Jesus taught it to his disciples when he took a little child and set him in the midst of them. The simplicity of faith is part of its perfection.

The last act of life is sometimes like the last number in a sum—ten times greater than all the rest.—Collier.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

BE CAREFUL.

Be careful what you sow, boys!
For seed will surely grow, boys!
The dew will fall,
The rain will splash,
The clouds will darken
And the sunshine flash,
And the boy who sows good seed to-day
Shall reap the crop to-morrow.

Be careful what you sow, girls!
For every seed will grow, girls!
Though it may fall
Where you can not know,
Yet in Summer and shade
It will surely grow,
And the girl who sows good seed to-day
Shall reap the crop to-morrow.

Be careful what you sow, boys!
For the weeds will surely grow, boys!
If you plant bad seed
By the wayside high,
You must reap the harvest
By and by,
And the boy who sows wild oats to-day
Must reap wild oats to-morrow.

Then let us sow good seed now!
And not the briers and weeds now!
That when the harvest
For us shall come,
We may have good sheaves
To carry home;
For the seed we sow in our lives to-day
Shall grow and bear fruit forever.

To Japan.

IN VANCOUVER.

The grandeur increases until the Glacier House is reached, a hundred miles from Stephen. There a stream issuing from the Great Glacier of the Selkirks has been caught and made to furnish fountains for the railroad hotel. And yet the mountains continue. But the engine darts through, climbs over, flanks, encircles and conquers all these barriers until, racing down the long canyon with the mad current of the Frazer, it runs out from the level woodland at the head of Burrard's Inlet, and, panting, slows up side by side with the great white steamship that is to convey the traveler across the ocean to that older world, where the human race began.

Vancouver is the terminus, and it has in eight years grow from 1,200 to 20,000. Its streets combine frontier and seafaring, backwoods, European, American and Oriental conditions and people. One curio shop sells basket work, silver and slate carvings brought in canoes by the coast Indians, and at the next door all the Orient is set before one by Chinese and Japanese traders, who add to their stock by each arriving steamer. A mountain of tea chests is unloaded from each ship, and a mountain of sacked flour and cotton in bales takes their place. But the city is American. When along with the Bishop, I met the pastor of the Methodist Church, and, especially, when I read in the daily paper that on the following night the ladies of the Presbyterian Church would sell ice cream and strawberries, I felt just as if I was in Meridian, Miss.

H. G. HAWKINS.

Matsuyama, Jan. 6, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I have seen but two letters from the cousins for some time; so I will try again to write. I am taking music lessons. My teacher is a nice gentleman. He takes so much pains to learn us how to play. We have a class of five girls and one boy. He teaches at my mother's. My papa has been absent all of the week at Rolenford, attending court. We miss him so very much when he is gone. I am still going to school to Mrs. Ella Stampley. She is a good teacher. We all like her very much. I am studying geography, arithmetic, civil government, History of Mississippi, grammar and spelling. We have a new preacher. His name is Mr. Abney. He has preached for us twice, and will preach the next fourth Sunday. We have a large Sunday-school. Now, tell all of the little cousins to write. I believe they are going to quit writing to the dear old ADVOCATE. I have seen several letters from H. G. Hawkins. I feel a large interest in him. He has gone to try enlighten the heathen, and to carry the means of salvation to them. His brother was our preacher last year. We all liked him so much. Please tell me where Uncle Hurst is. I have not seen any letters from him for some time. Please don't put my letter in the waste-basket. I will close by asking the cousins a question: In what part of the Bible is "organ" found? My music teacher's name is Mr. Bryant. Your little friend,

NORA G. ENMONDSON.

Campbellsville, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written a letter to your valuable paper, I will try my hand. I am a little country girl seven years old. My name died when I was only one year old, but my dear grandma took me and cared for me until she moved off, and I live with my Aunt Ada now. I have no one to play with me, but Aunt Ada has two pet pigs, a pet cat and puppy; so you see I can have lots of fun playing with them. I am a little Methodist girl. I joined the church last year. Bro. Huff is our preacher, and he is a dear, good man, too. He has a dear, good wife, and two sweet little girls. I will close by asking a question: Where in the Bible is the word "industrious" found? and where is "kite" found in the Bible? With best wishes to the ADVOCATE, I am,

Your little friend, MYRTA ANDERS.

Hopewell, Miss.

Sleigh Bells.

How many boys and girls know how sleigh bells are made? How do you think the little iron ball gets inside the bell? It is too big to be put in through the holes in the bell, and yet it is inside. How did it get there?

This little iron ball is called "the jinglet." When you shake the sleigh bell it jingles. When the horse trots, the bells jingle, jingle, jingle. In making the bell, this jinglet is put inside a little ball of mud just the shape of the inside of the bell. Then a mold is made just the shape of the outside of the bell. This mud ball, with the jinglet inside, is placed in the mold of the outside, and the melted metal is poured in, which fills up the space between the mud ball and the mold.

When the mold is taken off, you see a sleigh bell, but it will not ring, as it is full of dirt. The hot metal dries the dirt that the bell is made of, so it can be all shaken out. After the dirt is all shaken out of the holes in the bell, the little iron jinglet will still be in the bell, and it will ring all right.

Matches.

We are going to talk about some of the little things that fill great needs in the world, and the first of these little things will be "Matches." I wonder if grandmother can remember the funny days when she was a little girl and there were no matches. I should like to know how grandfather used to light his pipe, shouldn't you? But I suppose he did as all the other old gentlemen, carried around a little box in his pocket called a tinder box. I can assure you it must have taken a great deal of time and patience to "get a light." After awhile the chemists manufactured something they were very proud of. They had little metal bottles made containing phosphorus, fine cork and petroleum wax, which they stirred about with a red-hot wire. These much-talked of little "Briquets Phosphoriques" were sold with one dozen little splints tipped with phosphorus, and cost seven and six-pence each, and when these were gone you bought more in little penny bundles. The splint was dipped into the little bottle and withdrawn, and the chemical action of the air ignited or set it on fire. Many different inventions followed this, and it was not till 1826 that matches to light themselves were manufactured, and it was still ten years after this before the horrible Lucifer matches were manufactured. Sweden manufactured a safety match, and for many years supplied nearly all Europe and England, but now it is different. I wish I could show you through one of the match-making establishments in England. You would find it very large and a great many people working there; whole shiploads of the best Quebec pine are constantly imported for this one firm, to be made up into tiny little matches that we use every day with scarcely a thought as to how they are made or where they come from. They use a wonderful machine for making matches called the "block" machine. After the wood has been cut into nice little blocks and splints just twice the length of a match, a row of blocks is placed in the machine and passed swiftly across a row of sharp knives which cut way into the block, then when they return they pass another set of knives that cut them across in the opposite direction and the block falls to pieces in a shower of little sticks. A girl or boy quickly gathers these out of the way and passes them on to another, who gathers them into bundles. They hold them endwise for just an instant on a hot iron plate to slightly scorch the ends and make them very hot. Now the mix boy takes them end dips them into a flat pan of melted paraffin, which the hot wood quickly absorbs. The bundles are next put into a large circular frame and cut into halves by a fine circular saw, then they are ready for the hopper, which keeps them constantly hopping, and soon jumps them out where they are pushed forward into a frame, a long piece of wood like a lath is placed between each row of splints, and when about 6,000 are in place they are screwed tightly in and sent to the dipping-room. Here is another funny sight: lots and lots of girls stand before stone slabs spread like butter with different colored paste, red, blue, yellow, etc., and dip the ends of the frame full of splints into the paste. The frames are then carried off to the drying-rooms, with the dipped ends hanging down; when they are dry they are taken to the packing-rooms and emptied into great slate compartments, where children are employed packing them into the little boxes where you first see them.

Now, boys and girls, shall you take any more interest in the next match you light?—Aunt Katharine, in Christian at Work.

What One Boy Did In One Year.

He begged the office of sexton in the little Western church, and earned seventy-five cents a week.

He picked one hundred quarts of fruit for a neighbor.

He bought and sold eleven dozen chickens, and cleared five dollars on them.

When he could get no other work a neighbor's wood pile was always ready, at a dollar a cord for sawing and splitting. He earned thirteen dollars and seventy-five cents on his wood piles.

For doing chores, cleaning yards, doing errands, etc., he received ten dollars.

For milking cows, taking care of horses, etc., for neighbors, twenty dollars.

At the end of the year this fourteen-year-old boy had earned a little more than one hundred dollars, and never missed a day at school. It was a busy year, yet play hours were scattered all along; swimming, fishing, hunting, skating and coasting, each found its place. The old adage proved true in his case: "Where there's a will there's a way." He never missed a job; when other boys were idle he was busy, and the best of all that I can tell you about him is this, he was a King's son.—Kind Words.

STONE BY STONE.—Tom and Robert were walking through the woods. They came to a stream of water; both stopped, deliberating what was best to be done.

"I am going to leap it," said Tom.

"I am going to work my way over, stone by stone," said the more prudent Robert.

Tom leaped, and, missing his footing, fell into the middle of the stream, whilst Robert, working his way carefully from one stone to another, landed safe and dry on the other side.

Boys, learn the lesson while yet young; the shortest way often appears the longest. Do not try to leap across the stream of difficulties that separates you from the shores of success. Perseverance, diligence and determination are all stones cast across the stream of life. A leap will bring you down among them, wounded and bruised. But, conquer them, stone by stone, and ultimately you will reach the other shore—the coveted land of success. Remember, do not leap; work your way across the stream, stone by stone.—Exchange.

SCANDAL-MONGERS.—A known and felt want of the times is a generation of men and women so active in the pursuit of truth, so busy in good works, as to have neither time nor disposition to hear or spread rumors; who would prefer silence to slander, solitude to the brilliant destruction of reputation. That was a candid and courageous, if somewhat blunt, woman, who, being in the company of several ministers for several hours said: "My sex has always been charged with a love for scandal, but nothing has ever pained me more than to see how large a part of your conversation today has been made up of 'They say,' 'Have you heard,' 'I wonder if there is any truth in this.'"

Instead of the look and posture of attention, silence and the averted glance should be given to the purveyor of derogatory rumors.—New York Christian Advocate.

A FUNNY COMPOSITION.—The following composition was written by a ten-year-old nephew of Josh Billings, when the teacher gave him "Dogs and Cats" for a subject:

"Dogs and kats allways fite each uther when tha git a chance, but a dog aint no match for a kat because a kat kin make her tail biggern a ball of and run up a tree whil a dogs gittin riddy."—Exchange.

SIMMONS—Mrs. M. H. SIMMONS, eldest daughter of W. C. and C. D. Vaught, was born Dec. 31, 1861, and died at her home, in Magnolia, Miss., from much and lingered suffering, Dec. 23, 1892.

As a child she was kind, loving and obedient. Her youth was pure, bright and dutiful. In the beauty of her girlhood she gave her young heart to God, and, taking the Divine Master as her pattern, she fashioned her life according to his Word. She was married to T. C. Simmons, Sept. 13, 1887, whom she leaves with three bright little children—Clara, Oliver and Clifton—to mourn their greatest loss. As a wife and mother, her love and devotion was of the purest type. She lived an exemplary Christian life, abounding in good works and kind words. Her zeal and love for the church were unbounded. Never did there throb a warmer, more helpful, and sympathetic heart for the pastor, not governed by any personal or peculiar fancy, but that she always regarded them as her spiritual teachers sent of God. "A woman who feareth the Lord, she shall be praised," truly, for her name, "Mollie," is a household word in every home, always spoken in the tenderest accents, for none knew her but to love her, and none speak of her but to praise her. Naturally possessed of refinement and womanly dignity, she had cultivated the Christian graces until she was the most perfect child-like character I have ever known, specially marked in her humble trust in God.

Death did not take her by surprise. Several times during her protracted illness she said to me that she would love so much to live to raise her children, and at times was buoyant and hopeful, speaking of plans and purposes laid out for the future; but the monster disease, which baffled the skill of her faithful physician, would strike a deeper hold upon her vitals, and she would give all back into the hands of God. Most patiently did she suffer, never complaining against the divine—always, "I am ready if he wills it," and would talk so sweetly of the perfect peace and assurance that possessed her soul. Thus death found her, and thus she passed away in the triumphs of a living faith. Her life is a rich heritage to the church, and her death a complete triumph over every fear and doubt.

May the God of all grace bless the husband and dear children, and comfort all so sadly bereft!

HER PASTOR.

PORTER—Mrs. MARGARET E. PORTER, daughter of William L. Baird and Margaret Murphy, was born in Wilkinson county, Miss., Feb. 20, 1826, and died in Houston, Texas, Jan. 19, 1893. She married James Brown Porter, of Giles county, Tenn., Dec. 18, 1844. This marriage proved to be a happy union of hearts and hands. Of these two it may truthfully be said: they bore life's burdens and trials bravely, patiently; happy in each other's love, in sunshine and in slurm, in prosperity and affluence, in poverty and trials sore—they were the same devoted household. Seven children were born to them: three of this loving family—father and two sisters—have crossed the river and are watching and waiting for the coming of those left behind, and, no doubt, there was a happy meeting when mother got home.

The subject of this memoir was reared under the care and training of a true Christian mother, whose whole life was an exhibition of the power of the gospel of Christ; fortunate also in having Mrs. Halsey—a noted teacher both in Mississippi and Texas—as her instructor and model in her girlhood days.

She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, from her very childhood, and met death without a murmur. She died in the faith, her name enrolled among the worshipers at Shearn Memorial Church, Houston, and we rejoice to believe that according to her faith and works, her name is enrolled in the Lamb's book of life, and that her freed spirit, loosed from its frail tenement, is now basking in the sunshine of God's love.

NAIL—NATHANIEL H. NAIL was born in South Carolina, July 31, 1822; died Dec. 18, 1892. Bro. Nail was a member of the Methodist Church at Spring Ridge. He loved his church, and was devoted to his family. He lived to see all his children grown and members of the church. He took up one of his little grandchildren and blessed it, and then fell asleep in Jesus, on Sunday morning past, just at sunrise, and was buried at Spring Ridge Cemetery, there to await the resurrection morning.

May God bless the bereaved mother, children and grandchildren, that they may be faithful and meet him in heaven at last!

LEE—A short time since we were called on to bid adieu to an esteemed friend, a loving husband, kind brother, affectionate father and son. WILLIE LEE, the subject of this tribute, was the son of Leonard and Lizzie Lee, was born Oct. 19, 1859, and died Jan. 18, 1893, aged thirty-three years two months twenty-nine days. His illness was but a few days, though painful, and was borne with patience. It was noticed that even when suffering intensely he would thank those who ministered to him. Though not a member of the church, yet he leaves a most excellent Christian character, a record of uprightness of life and purity of heart, of devotion to his parents, brothers, sister and friends. As a neighbor he was true to his fellow-man; ever ready to act his part in all the public movements of his neighborhood.

His death has made many hearts sad, for many friends had he who mourn their loss. We grieve that he was taken so prematurely from his parents, wife and little children who so much need a father's care; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we are told, just before he died he called his wife to him and asked her to go home with him. We deeply sympathize with the bereaved ones, especially the little fatherless children and lonely wife who have now a desolate home.

May he who wounds to heal bind up the bleeding hearts, and pour the balm of his consolation upon them! May his infinite love surround the fatherless children, and preserve them from the evils of this life! May the Holy Spirit guide the bereaved mother; give her grace to so train the little ones that they may meet, an unbroken family, in the celestial city, where there is no death, no parting nor sorrow. While we can't understand why a wise and merciful God should have taken him from the family who so much need his guidance, we know the Lord doeth all things well.

A FRIEND.

Lone Pine, Madison county, Miss.

HARRIS—MARTHA CORINNA HARRIS, daughter of Robert M. and Elizabeth B. Harris, was born Jan. 11, 1852, in Choctaw county, Miss., and died at her home in the town of Stewart, Montgomery county, Miss., Jan. 9, 1893.

Hers was a life of usefulness, spent largely in teaching school, to which work she was specially adapted. One year before her death, a severe attack of la grippe completely destroyed her already failing health. Her lungs became involved and she gradually wasted away. She was an intelligent, loyal Methodist; she loved her church. An amiable, well-rounded Christian, she loved God, prayed and worked for the good of humanity. As a daughter, she was tender and greatly devoted; as a sister, she was gentle, loving and true. Her frail body is in the dark, cold grave; her spirit has gone to God. The large family of which she was a member is now equally divided, half on earth, half in heaven. Father, mother, two sisters and three brothers had gone before: four sisters and four brothers are left behind. Thank God all are trying to follow on! God help us to be faithful. Her brother,

W. C. HARRIS.

Inka, Miss.

RAMSEY—Died, at Ramsey, La., on Jan. 17, 1893, aged sixty-three years, lacking one month and nine days, Mrs. ELIZABETH ANN RAMSEY, wife of Dr. J. B. Ramsey, and daughter of Col. W. L. Cole, Sr., of Daleville, Miss. She was married at her father's residence, May 28, 1846.

None knew her but to love her. She was a quiet, unobtrusive Christian. As such, her Christian virtues shone forth in her daily life and walk. She was a devoted wife and mother, an obedient daughter and loving sister, beloved by all who knew her. Her stricken husband writes, "Her faith in God and the resurrection was unshaken," and adds, "I have lost my pillar of support, and am at sea without a rudder."

She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South. The writer knew her for many years, and always found her the same even-tempered Christian. Truly she served her "generation and fell on sleep." "They that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Dear Sister Lizzie, we expect to meet again where parting is no more. May the Lord sustain the stricken ones!

G. B.

ATKINS—WILLIAM J. ATKINS, after a long and painful illness, peacefully fell asleep at his home in Choctaw county, Miss., Aug. 14, 1892. He was born Jan. 22, 1848. He was married to Miss Delilah Dobbs, Oct. 22, 1874. When he was a young man he made a profession of faith, and joined the M. E. Church, South.

Bro. Atkins was in the true sense an upright and useful man. His community was made better by his life. As a citizen, business man and Christian, he was true to every interest. As a husband, father, friend and Christian, he was faithful, affectionate and devoted. The large audience at his funeral attested his worth.

W. A. DOLLAR.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchel, Publisher.

ACME BLACKING is cheaper at 20 cents a bottle than any other Dressing at 5 cents.

A LITTLE GOES A LONG WAYS because shoes once blackened with it can be kept clean by washing them with water. People in moderate circumstances find it profitable to buy it at 20c. a bottle, because what they spend for Blacking they save in shoe leather.

It is the cheapest blacking considering its quality, and yet we want to sell it cheaper if it can be done. We will pay for a recipe that will enable us to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING at such a price that a retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. This offer is open until Jan. 1st, 1893.

$10,000 Reward

A new Version of an old Story.
Three Black Crows
"There were three crows sat on a tree,
As black as any crows could be."
"Alas!" said one, "would I were white
Instead of being black as night."
"Such foolish wishing," said his friends,
"In disappointment often ends;"
But now, forsooth, to make you white,
Will be an easy matter, quite.
We'll wash you well with some GOLD DUST,
And, when you're white, we fondly trust
That while you wonder at the feat,
Your happiness will be complete."
Behold him now as white as snow!
Wonder of wonders! saith the crow,
"If GOLD DUST POWDER makes black white,
'Twill surely all the world delight;
And mistress, mother, nurse and maid
Will find themselves henceforth well paid
In using this great help for all,
The household's needs—both great and small;
For dishes, kettles, pots and pans,
For paint, and floors, and milkmen's cans—
It surely will great comfort bring,
And clean each dirty place or thing;
For what will make a black crow white,
Will make whate'er is dingy bright."

Giving its customers cash discounts on orders. We catalogue that best of all bush beans, the Warren, and that best of all early peas, the Excelsior. No other Seed Catalogue, of America or Europe, contains so great a variety of several of the standard vegetables, and, in addition, are many choice varieties peculiarly our own. Though greatly enlarged in both the vegetable and flower seed departments, we send our catalogue FREE to all. The three warrants still hold good, and our customers may rely upon it, that the well earned reputation of our seed for freshness and purity will continue to be guarded as a most precious part of our capital. E. H. MOUNGER, P. E.

Philip Werlein,

New Orleans, wants you to write to him if you want to get a good Piano cheap, or an Organ, Music or Musical Instruments. His is the old reliable music store of New Orleans.

DWYER BROTHERS.

MAMMOTH WHOLESALE DEALERS IN NOTIONS AND FURNISHING GOODS, FANCY GOODS AND HOSIERY.

One of the most conclusive evidences of the position which New Orleans has won for herself as the commercial metropolis of the South is to be found in the value and extent of the trade which she commands, and in the number and strength of her wholesale and jobbing houses, and among this number and deserving of a conspicuous place at the head of the list is the well-known and reliable house of Dwyer Bros., the Mammoth Notions and Furnishing Goods House. Those who know New Orleans at all know that this house has stood at the head of the list in its respective line since the year they opened up in their old quarters, at 10 and 12 Magazine street, where they did a business of $200,000 per annum, with a total force of seven men, employers and employees. Here business continued to increase until their old quarters became inadequate and were torn down and the mammoth Dwyer Block erected, which is by far the largest store in New Orleans. It is an eight-fifty brick structure, with white stone trimming, 50x103 feet in dimension and 126 feet in height; is absolutely fire-proof, and is finished and constructed in the most modern style of architectural skill and workmanship.

This immense building is used for sales purposes and packing and shipping only, not being large enough to carry their stock. They require the use of several large storehouses for that purpose.

The firm of Dwyer Bros. was the first in the Southern States to introduce a strictly net cash business, and were criticised for so doing. The great success which followed this venture awakened the merchants to the fact that the Dwyer Bros. were fully abreast of the times, and their grand example is now being followed by no less than seven large houses in the South.

These gentlemen have demonstrated that New Orleans has energy and life enough without the assistance of Northern brains or capital to make a close cash business a success. Dwyer Bros. are the third largest jobbers in the United States, having a total line of over 6 100 customers. They control almost all the trade of New Orleans, and do an extensive business in Colorado, Indian Territory, North and South Arkansas, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee and the West Indies, as well as the near-by States. The success of this large concern has been phenomenal and was almost a foregone conclusion at its inception. The same combination of forces were put to work in this house that have wrought the success of other large institutions; chief among these are the business activity, energy and ability of the members of the firm, and the superior size and quality of the stock which they keep constantly on hand, and the business of the firm aggregates over $1,000 000 annually. The individual members of the firm are A. J. Dwyer, Geo. H. Dwyer and W. H. Dwyer. They are men in the full activity of life, and, though they have a pay roll of some sixty employees, yet every department is under the immediate supervision and direction of the members of the firm. This enables them to buy with discretion, to sell with care, and keep constantly a full and complete stock for the selection of their customers.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Hawaiian treaty, it is thought, is dead for the season. This is reluctantly conceded even by its friends.

A fire occurred in the Southern Pacific yards in San Antonio, Texas, on Feb. 23. The losses are placed at $100,000.

A special meeting of the camp of Confederate veterans in New York City was held, on Feb. 24, at their headquarters, and appropriate resolution adopted extolling the life and character of Gen. Beauregard.

The Bethlehem Iron Company has received official notice that a contract was awarded them for over $2,000,000 worth of heavy armor plates. The entire contract was $3,800 000. This will give work for the next five years to the company.

The Commissioner of Agriculture of Arkansas has issued a call to cotton growers to meet in convention in Little Rock, on March 10, for the purpose of reducing the cotton acreage this season, and to select delegates to the convention which will be held at Vicksburg, Miss., March 20.

There being some doubt that Congress will abrogate the World's Fair Sunday closing clause, the Chicago Times is agitating the return to the United States government of the $2,500 000 advanced to the Columbian Exposition commission on condition of Sunday closing, and thereby release the commission from the pledges given on accepting the gift.

Senator White has succeeded in gaining the consent of the Appropriation Committee to place on the Naval Appropriation bill, which has come from the House, an amendment providing for the establishment of the dry dock at Algiers, La., an appropriation of $50,000 to begin work. This amendment will have to go into conference with the bill if it passes the Senate.

The Indianapolis admirers of President Harrison are arranging to give him a reception when he returns from Washington. There will be addresses of welcome by prominent citizens, and all the clubs of the city will join in a street demonstration. The President has discouraged the efforts of his friends to show their appreciation, but has not positively declined the proposed honor.

On the announcement of the demise of Gen. Beauregard, his friends and admirers lost no time in organizing a movement to secure the erection of a suitable monument to his memory, and already a considerable sum has been subscribed. The movement was undertaken by the Henry St. Paul Battalion Veteran Association, and it has met with such prompt and general favor that there is no doubt of its success.

The National League of America, on Feb. 25, issued an address to Irishmen. It is signed by the president, secretary and treasurer. In reference to the Home Rule bill, introduced by Mr. Gladstone in the British House of Commons, it says: "This measure cannot be accepted as a full and completed settlement of the claims of our people, and we have no hesitation in declaring that, instead of a blessing, it would prove a curse to our country."

The following gentlemen will be President Cleveland's Cabinet: Walter A. Gresham, of Indiana, Secretary of State; John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky, Secretary of the Treasury; Daniel S. Lamont, of New York, Secretary of War; Wilson S. Bissell, of New York, Postmaster General; Hoke Smith, of Georgia, Secretary of the Interior; Hilary A. Herbert, of Alabama, Secretary of the Navy; J. Sterling Morton, of Nebraska, Secretary of Agriculture; Richard Olney, of Massachusetts, Attorney General.

FOREIGN.

The Archduchess Margaret of Austria, the niece of the Emperor, will this year receive the honor of the golden rose from the Pope. The jewel is valued at $50,000.

A serious commercial crisis is threatened in Paris on account of the slackness of the current trade and rash speculation in bullion. Several of the firms are bankrupt and more are expected to fail.

Official figures show that the export of cattle to Great Britain last year amounted to 98,755 head, a decrease of 10 000, as compared with previous year. The export of sheep from Canadian ports fell off from 32,000 to 16,000.

The exhibits that Emperor William will send to Chicago for exhibition include the cup presented to him by the Rhine provinces, and illuminated address presented to William I. Two field marshal staffs that belonged to the late Count von Moltke will also be sent. The exhibits will fill forty cases.

Notwithstanding the expressed resolution of the masters and men in the Lancashire cotton spinning industry, so far as represented by the Masters' Federation on one side and the Amalgamated Association of Cotton Spinners on the other, to resist any change from the base assumed at the beginning of the struggle, there was a break at Oldham on Feb. 24, where one-quarter of a million spindles resumed operation at a reduction of 2 and 2½ per cent. in wages, or just one-half the amount on which the Masters' Federation has insisted.

Trusts and combinations are unpopular. But there is one form of trust against which no one has anything to say. That is the trust the public reposes in Hood's Sarsaparilla—because they know HOOD'S CURES.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable.

The Pope has improved in health, and on Feb. 26 he was able to receive the Scottish pilgrims.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

CUTICURA BABY

This beautiful baby boy, the son of Geo. B. and Janetta Harris, Webster, Ind., is one of thousands completely cured by the CUTICURA REMEDIES of a torturing and disfiguring skin disease, after many doctors and remedies had wholly failed. The marvelous cures daily performed by these great remedies have astonished all familiar with them. None but mothers realize how these little ones suffer when their tender skins are literally on fire with itching and burning eczemas, and other itching, scaly, blotchy and pimply skin and scalp diseases. To know that a single application of the CUTICURA REMEDIES will afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a permanent and economical (because most speedy) cure, and not to use them, is to fail in your duty. Parents, think of the mental and physical suffering to be endured in years to come from neglected skin, scalp and blood diseases. Cures made in infancy and childhood are almost invariably permanent.

Great Britain's Welcome to Miss Willard.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

Remarkable as has been the power of ur transatlantio friends to attract im- ense audienoes and awaken British nthusiasm, none, perhaps (John ough and Dwight L. Moody not ex- epted), have evoked more universal nterest or received a greater ovation han has Miss Frances E. Willard dur- ng her three months' stay in England. n this age of great oonvenings it is ol often that a single meeting marks n epoch, even though it be in the in- erest of a reform that has now forged s way to the front in the politics of ngland's regnant party, and, mirabile ictu, finds a place in the Queen's peech to Parliament. This is a state- ent noteworthy, indeed; but it is true the national welcome, for it was othing less, accorded to America's hite Ribbon leader at the recent reat meeting in Exeter Hall.

Thero is, perhaps, no better gauge the state of public sentiment toward easo or an individual than the atti- ude of an Exeter Hall audience. This mous auditorium has been so long he battle-ground of all religious ovements and reforms that, to the ustomed eyes of its habitues, the nprecedented character of that as- embly was a marvel. Even in the ty of London it is not difficult to ally the adherents of a single reform; ut to convene fifty distinct lines of re- gious, philanthroplo and reformatory ork is something which, so far as I now, has never before ocourred in the reatest metropolis of the world.

On the huge platform were seated en and women whose names are ousehold words throughout the Eng- sh-speaking race. Members of Par- ament, dignitaries of the ohuroh, and adies of society, side by side with the aders of the labor movement and the alvation Army. A delegation appoint- d from the Methodist Church, the aptist, the Congregational, the Soci- y of Friends elbowed canons of the stablished Church and temperance aders of the Catholic hierarchy, while he chief Jewish rabbi sent a congratu- atory letter, and signed the address of elcome, which was also attested by hree hundred local Unions of the ritish Women's Temperance Asso- iation.

Among the societies represented on he platform were the World's Women's hristian Temperance Union, British omen's Temperance Association, nited Kingdom Alliance, Young Ab- tainers' Union, Independent Order of ood Templars, Independent Order of he Rechabites, Anti-Opium League, oman's Anti-Opium Emergency eague, Church of England Temper- nce Society, Total Abstaining Section f the Young Women's Christian Asso- iation, Young Men's Christian Asso- iation, Band of Mercy, Salvation rmy, International Christian Police ssociation, Church Army, West Lon- o Wesleyan Mission, Woman's Suf- age Society, Peace Society, Vegeta- an Society; the Rev. Armstrong Ben- tis, B. A., and six ministers, a depu- ation from the Wesleyan Church; ower Hamlets Mission, Baptist Total bstinence Society, Congregational otal Abstinence Society, Women's iberal Federation, National Union of omen Workers, National Vigilance ociety, Prison Gate Mission, Friends' emperance Union, Presbyterian Tem- rance Union, Students' Total Absti- nce Association, New Church Tem- rance Society, Catholic Total Absti- nce League of the Cross, National emperance Federation, Phœnix Or- rs, London Temperance Hospital ard, Railway Temperance Union, emplar and Temperance Orphanage ard, English Sunday Closing Asso- iation, East London Mission Institute, orking Women's Teetotal League, tchers' Total Abstinence Society, kers' Total Abstinence Society, Gen- al Postoffice Total Abstinence Soci- y, Women's Trades Union Associa- on.

The speakers, twelve in number, ere each one equal to filling Exeter all in the strength of individual repu- tion; but they gladly limited their eeches to five minutes each, rejoic- g to be among those who did honor the distinguished guest whom the owds had assembled to greet in num- rs so large that the tickets could ve been sold twice over; and some rtunate possessors, more sordid than thusiastic, were disposing of them three times their original value at the entrance, where they were eagerly purchased, even for the overflow meeting which had speedily to be organized, so great were the crowds demanding entrance.

Nothing could exceed the enthusiasm with which the speaker of the evening was greeted. The vast audience rose with a cheer on their lips, and waving white handkerchief in hand, and for several minutes the expression of their admiration seemed as though it would never subside. A thrill of pleasure comes to our hearts when one is thus recognized who has toiled so long and patiently for others' weal, for it is good, indeed, to pour out the fragrance of our welcome, affection and praise, and place our tribute in the warm clasp of living hands rather than lay it on the cold marble of a tomb.

After such a greeting as has been described, it was not an easy task to organize a demonstration worthy to be compared with that of Exeter Hall; but the United Kingdom Alliance, the strongest temperance society in Great Britain, proved equal to the undertaking. Five thousand persons assembled on consecutive evenings in the great Free Trade Hall in Manchester, the second city in England, and the headquarters of the Alliance. Canon Wilberforce and Sir Wilfred Lawson were the chairmen. Testimonials were presented by the Alliance and other temperance societies, and the entire audience rose to receive Miss Willard—a greeting which was, perhaps, excelled only by the enthusiasm which brought them to their feet again, and caused a hearty British cheer to echo through the historic hall that had witnessed the triumphs of Cobden, Bright and Gladstone, as she closed her speech. "A wonderful address," said a veteran leader who had ganged every speaker on the temperance platform for the last forty years. "I have never heard it excelled, and, perhaps, not equalled."

Similar demonstrations have been held in Charrington's great hall, in the heart of the East End of London; in Liverpool, where Miss Willard was welcomed by the Women's Liberal Federation; in Birmingham and Leeds, Nottingham and Sunderland, and in St. James' Hall, London, by invitation of the indefatigable Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, on Temperance Sunday.

The Methodist Churches of London, not to be outdone, have already given a social reception to the most prominent figure among Methodist women of America, and on Feb. 27 they are to accord her a formal public greeting in John Wesley's famous City Road Chapel.

Scotland has added her quota to the universal enthusiasm, and, indeed, in the judgment of some of our temperance workers, has exceeded, perhaps, in demonstrating a more expressive sympathy in harmony with their well-known national hospitality. St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, which accommodates 5,000 persons, was packed on the evening of Jan. 29, and the great Synod Hall in Edinburgh witnessed the remarkable exhibition of the presentation of a testimonial by Dr. Blaikie, of the University, signed by the official representatives of every denomination in Scotland, together with the testimonials of each of the national temperance societies.

A more notable instance of the result of Miss Willard's life mission could not be instanced than such a recognition from this most conservative body of Christians, who have for so long resisted the work and influence of women. It is, however, no matter of wonder that the work and worth of Frances Willard should have been thus recognized in the mother country, for wherever the temperance cause has a champion, wherever the cause of social purity has an exponent, wherever the labor movement lifts up its voice; wherever woman, with the sunlight of the glad new day upon her face, stretches forth her hands to God, there her name is loved, cherished, and revered. Tried by a jury of her peers, even amid the clashing opinions of this transition age, when the old is unwilling to die, and the new seems hardly ready to be born, there would still come the verdict, "She is a fair opponent, she is a kindly comrade." As Lincoln said, she has "firmness in the right as God gives her to see the right, and moves along her chosen path with malice toward none and charity for all." From that more august and, perhaps, impartial jury, beyond the circle of reform, comes the verdict, prophetic of that which history shall one day record, "She made the world wider for woman, and happier for humanity." We know that America owes her greatness to the sterling worth of those intrepid Puritan pioneers, who were the best gift of the Old World to the New. So Frances Willard, who has in her veins that pure New England blood, owes to her ancestry much of the strength and courage that must ever be the basis of a reformer's character. Away on a Wisconsin farm, amid the cedars sweet and fragrant, and the whispering fields of Indian corn, she caught the inspiration of her life from the mother whose strong and sunny spirit made glad the solitary place, and who brought into the prairie wilderness a most intrepid intellect and a culture exceptionally rare. The brightness of her own great nature made that "desolate" place "blossom as the rose" for her children. On that country farm Coleridge, Wordsworth and Pope were household friends. That enthusiasm for humanity which characterizes Frances Willard's work was breathed into her active mind by one born and bred in the great free-soil State of the North, whose delight it was to teach her little girl to read from the "Slave's Friend." What wonder that in after years one of the greatest achievements of Frances Willard's life was her mission of reconciliation to the women of the South, while yet the scars of war throbbed in their breasts, and new-made graves stretched wide between sections that had learned the misery of hatred! It was the white ribbon taken by her tender hands that bound those wounds, and gently drew the noble-hearted women of that sunny land into the hospitable home circle of the W. C. T. U.

Sacrifice is the foundation of all real success, and it was a crucial moment in Miss Willard's life when she resigned the brilliant position of dean of the first women's college connected with a university in America, and went out, penniless, alone, and unheralded, because her spirit had caught the rhythm of the women's footsteps as they bridged the distance between the home and the saloon in the pentecostal days of the temperance crusade. She has relinquished that which women hold the dearest—the sacred, sheltered life of home. Around her hearth no children wait to greet her. But she has lost that life only to find it again ten thousandfold. She has understood the mystery of the wider circle of love and loyalty, and the world is her home as truly as John Wesley said it was his "parish." She has understood the diviner motherhood that claims the orphaned hearts of humanity as her heritage, and a chorus of children's voices round the world cherish and hail her name, for "organized mother love" is the best definition of the W. C. T. U. Well may we say in the words of our great poet:

"Live and take comfort, thou wilt leave behind
Powers that shall work for thee,
Earth, air and skies.
There's not a breathing of the common wind
That will forget thee; thou
Hast great allies—
Thy friends are exaltations, agonies and love,
And man's unconquerable mind."

ISABEL SOMERSET.

Indian Mission.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission I will now comply with my promise, and make a report on Indian Mission work for 1892 in Mississippi.

I think it necessary to make this report, as many of the friends of the mission will not see our Minutes for last year, and especially those outside our bounds.

As many know, I have been agitating the subject for three or four years; but the work proper was not begun until just a little over one year ago. In December, 1891, Bishop Hendrix appointed Bro. W. W. Cammack as missionary and myself as agent for the work, and since that time we have been at work in good earnest, with the following results: Eighteen members received, one, Simpson J. Tubby, having been received just before by Bro. J. C. Long, making up to close of 1892 nineteen members; 16 adults baptized, 2 Sunday-schools organized, 1 church-house built, and another frame up; one, Simpson J. Tubby, licensed to preach, and admitted on trial into the Mississippi Conference; $84 worth of books received and distributed among the Indians, saying nothing of several books given to Simpson J. Tubby last year, and some valuable books this year—the larger part of books donated by American Bible Society. And, then, since the last session of the Conference, Bro. Cammack has organized a day-school, and has about 15 or 16 Indians teaching them, and has received 3 more into the church, making up to date 22 members. Pretty good, as I think, for the first year.

Well, the Missionary Board took charge of the work, and fixed Bro. Cammack's salary at $500, and appointed myself as agent to collect it, and I am glad to report that, by the blessing of God, the earnest co-operation of some of the brethren and sisters, and a nice collection from the Annual Conference, I was able to pay Bro. Cammack's salary in full, and $61.70 for Simpson J. Tubby's expenses, and have $41 in bank to be placed on salary for this year, and then have collected since Conference from Rev. B. S. Rayner, $5; Rev. I. L. Peebles, $5; Dr. T. S. West, $10, and X., $1, making up to date $62 in hand on this year's salary.

And now, brethren and sisters, we have two missionaries, instead of one, to support this year, or $675, less $62, to raise; so we will have to make a special effort, or call upon the Missionary Board to help us this year. Let's not burden the already overtaxed Board for help. Let us just pay the whole amount as a thank-offering to God for his blessing to us, and also as a debt we owe to the poor, lost heathen Indians.

We want to pay the salary of our missionaries quarterly; so please do not wait one for another, but send right away as soon as you read this. The first quarter is nearly, or will soon be out, and we have not enough to settle. Please, brethren and sisters, send on at once. Where it is convenient, send draft on bank at Vicksburg, or money order payable at Vicksburg; but where it is not convenient, send by registered letter, or, if more convenient, send draft or check on Jackson bank or postoffice. Send checks or money order to me at Oak Ridge, Warren county, Miss., and if you do not get a receipt in a reasonable time, please write me.

And now I wish to ask the preachers of both the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences, and any others that will, to just please state to their congregations the need of speedy action in this matter, and prepare to send amount for their members to me. Brethren, please assist me in this way.

And now, in conclusion, I wish to report names and amounts received since my last report through the ADVOCATE:

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

The great meeting in the Methodist Church at Columbus was closed Feb. 28. It was great in interest, power, and results. People of all the different churches took part in it, more or less, and were blessed. The pastors of the Cumberland Presbyterian and Baptist Churches deserve special mention for their hearty co-operation. There was a powerful spiritual quickening in the church, and a mighty awakening without. About two hundred names were given for membership in the different churches, of which the Methodist will get more than one-half. Rev. J. B. Culpepper, the leader in this meeting, and his assistant, Rev. J. W. Blasser, have proven themselves to be workmen that need not be ashamed. With prohibition of the liquor traffic recently secured, and this potent tide of religious revival in Columbus, there is much cause for rejoicing and going forward with the Lord's people.

The writer has recently visited Starkville, Shuqualak, Macon, Brooksville, Crawford, West Point and Columbus, in the performance of his work. At each place brotherly kindness and helpfulness was shown to him by preachers and people, for which he is very grateful. We are happy to report gratifying results of our efforts to promote the Sunday-school cause and to circulate our books and papers.

Rev. D. L. Cogdell has been unable to preach much during the Winter on account of his throat trouble; but he is better now, and we hope will soon be able for full work.

The building of the Methodist Church in West Point will soon begin.

Rev. J. A. Bowen is assisting in a meeting at Summit.

Time and space forbid other items for the present. G. W. BACHMAN.

March 3, 1893.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. P. Crowe, Shaw, Miss., March 2: "We are coming; getting rid of saloons and building churches. We have on hand $1,300 to build a Methodist Church in the town of Shaw. One man who was not a member gave $500. 'How does that sound?' One brother gave $300; one widow lady gave $100. So we will build the house. We have received into the church this year 11; dismissed 3. The good work goes on. Thank God."

Rev. J. J. Kelly, Lind Grove, La., March 1: "Last Sunday was a good day on the Lind Grove circuit. Eight accessions at the morning service, two having previously joined, three by baptism—all adults. Preacher has a good home, and well paid up to date. Collected some on our missionary debt. Have four swamp appointments, and many of my people expecting an overflow; but we think, 'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.'"

Rev. T. W. Lewis, Holly Springs, Miss., Feb. 27: "Please say in this week's ADVOCATE that 17 joined our church here as the result of our last meeting. Rev. J. E. Thomas did us some excellent preaching and faithful work. Have organized a young men's prayer meeting. Have 75 in Epworth League, and 151 were present in Sunday-school yesterday. Judge Font is splendid. Epworth League had a prayer meeting every evening during our meeting, and our greatest power came from the Leaguers."

Rev. R. M. Standefer, Columbus, Miss., March 3: "The Culpepper meeting has closed, with about 300 conversions. One hundred and thirty have applied for membership in our church, making about 150 since Conference. The revival just closed is pronounced the greatest in the history of this city by the oldest inhabitant. Culpepper is a man of marvelous spiritual power. He is truly a great man in the best sense of that term. The two last saloons in our city died at twelve M. last night."

Rev. W. J. Porter, Branch, La., March 2: "I was providentially delayed in moving to my work (Plaquemine Brulee) until Feb. 24. We found two stewards and several ladies waiting to receive us into a comfortable and well-supplied parsonage. I was not idle all this time, however. Had been to and planned my circuit of six appointments, and preached at each of them. Married two couples, collected $4 for the ADVOCATE and $8 for parsonage supplies, and visited thirty-one families. Made and planted a garden, and set out fifty fruit trees. While my beloved predecessor has done a fine work, I find the field still white unto the harvest; therefore, aided by divine power, I mean to ply the sickle."

Rev. J. W. Price, P. C., Water Valley station, North Mississippi Conference: "Thank God the last 'drunkery' in Water Valley closed last night—Feb. 25. For two years we will have no saloons in Yalobusha county. All praise to God and the good citizens of the county. The Methodist Church in Water Valley is growing. Last year we had 87 additions, most of them on profession of faith, and many of them the best people of the town. This large addition to our membership was the result, in part, of the very successful meeting conducted by the now sainted Inge and Bro. Whitehurst. Inge preached with great power, and Whitehurst preached and sung, the people worked and prayed, and a sweeping revival was the result. The work abides. Bro. T. J. West and Sister J. W. Copeland have recently crossed over the river. Bro. West, for many years, had been an active official member of Wood Street Church. How we miss him! Sister Copeland was all that could be expected of a Christian wife and mother. For fifty years she worked in the Master's vineyard. The end was peace. One by one the workers cross the river; one by one the crowns are given."

Rev. D. W. Babb, Hebron circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Feb. 25: "Our first quarter, with its success or failure, is in the past. Because of inclement weather, our quarterly meeting was merged into one day. Our meek-spirited presiding elder, Bro. Wier, was in his place. We trust good was accomplished. We think prospects brightening up on this work. The ADVOCATE is spoken well of. As storms are no longer to be reported, suffice it to say we have been the recipients of many more substantial favors than we are worthy of. Don't be hard on the brethren, for storms are about all some of us can report at this season of the year. We will pray for the ADVOCATE. Will you pray for us?"

Rev. W. J. Roberts, Slaughter circuit, Mississippi Conference, Feb. 27: "This work has three churches, viz.: Buetoville, Salem, and Slaughter. We have some strong Christian men and women in each congregation. Our first quarterly meeting was recently held, and the stewards expressed their appreciation of both presiding elder and pastor in a very substantial way. All the Conference collections subscribed, and one-fourth the amount received in cash; the other is perfectly good. Two-thirds of the assessment for foreign missions is paid. I have presented these various claims to only one congregation, but shall give each of the other congregations an opportunity to help in this good work. We will pay our part of the missionary debt. We are expecting a revival."

REVIVAL AT RIPLEY.

I am on my way home from Ripley, where I have been attending the grandest revival I ever saw. I have been in Moody's meetings, Sam Jones' meetings, and in meetings of all sorts and sizes of evangelists, as well as meetings held by pastors; but this Ripley meeting is the best of all. Old feuds, that have cost blood, life, happiness and money, are hidden, rubbed out, and peace taken the place in many hearts. Over one hundred professing religion are to be received into the church tomorrow. One man—a swearer, drinker, gambler, fighter—who has been wonderfully converted, said to me: "Bro. Malone, tell the people, on the authority of a man who knows what he is talking about, that every gambler in Ripley is converted." Blind tigers have closed up and cider sellers have quit and gone to holding family prayers. There are more workers for Christ now in Ripley than I suppose was ever there before. More family altars, more Christian love, and more happiness. Peace reigns.

To-morrow, Sunday, March 5, Bro. Bell will receive his members at 11 o'clock. All the other pastors (Presbytorian and Baptist) with their people will attend. At 3 o'clock the pastor of the Baptist Church will receive members at that church, all the other churches attending there. At night everybody will go and see the pastor of the Presbyterian Church receive his members. Bro. Bell, my successor in that delightful charge, is full of joy. He is assisted by Rev. Wm. McIntosh, of the North Alabama Conference, who is stationed at Cherokee, and by all the pastors and Christians.

The brethren, knowing how this good work would gladden my heart, sent for me, and I went. And, oh! how I do praise God for letting me see so many of my old friends, for whom I prayed and labored, happily converted. With them all I glorify my heavenly Father. Bro. McIntosh is to aid me in a meeting at Grenada about the first of April. Let the brethren please pray for me, that we may save many souls.

Your brother, T. B. MALONE.

Grenada, Miss.

THE HOME OF HOMES.

Oh, earth, thou art too beautiful,
And thou, dear home, thou art too sweet,
The winning ways of flesh and blood
Too smooth for sinners' pilgrim feet.

The woods and flowers and running streams,
The sunshine of the common skies,
The sound of household peace—what heart
But owns the might of these dear ties?

And yet, bright world, thou art not wise;
Ah, no! enchantress though thou art,
Thou art not skillful in thy ways
Of dealing with a wearied heart.

If thou hadst kept thy faith with me,
I might have been thy servant still;
But slighted love and broken faith,
Poor world! These are beyond thy skill.

Oh, bless thee! bless thee! treacherous world,
That thou dost play so false a part,
And drive, like sheep into the fold,
Our loves into the Savior's heart.

This have I leaned upon, sweet Lord,
The world hath had thy rightful place;
But come, dear, jealous King of Love,
Come, and begin thy reign of grace!

Banish, if need be, all I love:
The smile of friends, the old fireside,
And drive me to that home of homes,
The heart of Jesus crucified!

The Church and Prohibition.

BY J. D. SMITH, M. D.

One of the most cheering signs of the times is the increasing disposition on the part of many of our editors of religious papers to open their columns to a free and fair discussion of the question of prohibition, and of the relation of the church as a whole, and of church members as individuals thereto. Our attention has just been called to an article on first page of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of Feb. 9, by "Layman or Sextus," which has impressed us anew with this thought, and upon which we desire to offer a little friendly criticism in the hope that the brother may write again and give opportunity for a full and free interchange of views on this important subject. Prohibition seems to be less understood than any question now agitating the minds of the people, and much of the confusion attending its discussion seems to result from the mixing of it with another question closely allied, but entirely distinct from it—that of temperance.

Prohibition is a political question, and strikes directly at the impolicy, unjustness and inhumanity of the statutory law licensing and thereby bringing into existence the beverage liquor traffic, which our court of last resort (see Crowley vs. Christensen, U. S. Reports, vol. 137, p. 90) says no citizen of a State, or of the United States, would have any right to engage in without such law; while temperance is a moral question and deals persuasively with deluded human beings who drink the liquor furnished by the government's legally authorized agents. Hence, every citizen of a State, or of the United States, is, in a measure, politically responsible for the existence of the licensed liquor traffic, the main source of intemperance; but those only who drink or encourage drinking are directly responsible for drunkenness or alcoholic intemperance.

So it was with the Louisiana Lottery. Every citizen of the State was in a sense politically responsible for the existence of that abominable institution, because, like the liquor traffic, it was the creature of legislation, and the legislation of a State reflects the politics of a State. But those only who patronized the lottery were directly responsible for the gambling of which it was the main cause. In both instances the institution is political, and must be overthrown, if overthrown at all, by political combination, either temporary or permanent, while the legalized results, drunkenness and gambling, can only be influenced and mitigated by a constant, persistent and permanent moral suasion pressure. The church member who is a humanitarian, to say nothing about his Christianity, will not vote for any man to make laws for his government who is not opposed to and openly pledged against the enacting or continuing of laws licensing either institution, whether with or without restrictions, under his church vows of "endeavoring to do no harm" and of trying under all circumstances to "do good." Then, if in spite of his vote and influence at every election the business is still legalized and continued, he will use his moral suasion to limit drinking and lottery gambling as much as possible, and also to influence as many men to vote with him in the future as possible.

And if he is sufficiently filled with the Christian graces to realize the full import of the Second Commandment, he will not throw away much time in unkind reflections on so-called "short-haired" women; nor will he forget the ten women in his own section of country who have been reduced to or held in a state of poverty and degradation by the licensed saloon; for, perhaps, not all who by "chivalrous courtesy and high regard" have been so "high-bred" as never to "jostle each other in the common walks of life."

We have been born, reared, and, until recently, always lived considerably more South than now, and loyally followed the Confederate flag until its sun was set to rise no more. But we must confess to an entire want of sympathy with that provincialism which seems to be a relic of that Jewish intolerance which Christ came to destroy, and for the destruction of which he has dispersed that people for nearly two thousand years. While, on the other hand, we confess to a weakness of leaning to that form of charity that "thinketh no evil," "that hopeth all things, endureth all things," and "is not puffed up."

Nothing reveals the weakness of the position of those who oppose aggressive work against or try to prevent a free discussion of the licensed liquor traffic more than the untenable attitude in which their arguments place the church as an organization, or its membership as individual citizens. For instance, Bro. "Layman or Sextus" says, "The great jurisdictional fact as to the powers of the church, is, that the powers of the church, the scope and sphere of its operation, and, consequent upon this, the duty and obligation of the communicant to obedience, respect support and maintainance, extends to and includes spiritual matters only. The church does not regulate the communicant's temporal affairs, his business or his politics; and, before the jurisdiction of the church attaches to any matter, it must be of a spiritual nature."

Then our Conferences should abolish all committees except the one on the "Spiritual Condition of the Church," and our next General Conference should strike from the Discipline nearly all of the General Rules, and especially such as "The profaning of the Sabbath, drunkenness or the drinking of spirituous liquors, fighting, gambling, brawling, laying, evil speaking, jockeying in trading, smuggling goods, usury, uncharitable conversation, doing to others as we would not they should do unto us, wearing extravagant apparel, engaging in unchristly diversions, singing songs and reading books that lead away from Christ, softness or needless self-indulgence (high-bred life) and borrowing under false pretenses."

We had supposed that the communicant's spiritual condition had reference to his relation to God, his Creator; to Christ, his Redeemer and Intercepior; and to the Holy Ghost, his Prompter and Comforter, and that it was the business of the visible church as an organization to see to it that the conduct of his every-day business life was made to conform to the requirements of his professed spiritual life. But just how far the church should exercise Disciplinary authority over the conduct of its members is a mooted question. Some say, turn members out for engaging in the round dance; others say not; but all say the tendency of the dance is to evil. And as statistics show that nine-tenths of the professional prostitutes of our country pass through the ball-room to the brothel, it does seem that either the tendency of the business is to evil, or else the class of persons who engage in the former are easily led into the latter. So, some say, turn a man out for casting his vote, and thus exercising the highest privilege of an American citizen, in either directly or indirectly perpetuating the enormous evil of the licensed liquor traffic; while others say not. The church member can only exercise his individual discretion in such matters until the church—as a whole—decides whether that discretion is right or wrong, and whether or not it "tends to the knowledge and love of God."

Our church now deals with a member if he manufactures or sells liquors. It has not always done this. Advancing civilization sees the necessity for and requires new rules of conduct in members of churches as well as in members of society. By what rule of right does a church member cast his vote in favor of the advocate of a law authorizing others to do what he is forbidden by his church to do himself? Our court of last resort (see Crowley vs. Christensen above quoted) has stripped this licensed beverage liquor traffic question of all nonsensical subterfuges, by saying in just so many words, "It is a matter of legislative will only." The church member exerts his legislative will only at the ballot-box through the men he votes for to make laws. Hence every law, good or bad, represents the legislative will of the voter who voted for the man that advocated, acquired in, or helped to pass the law. Then what right has a church member who voted for the friend or advocate of the liquor licensing law to become an advocate of temperance? When he helps by his vote to pass the law granting license to sell the liquor, and then gets his part of the revenue or blood money for which the licensed privilege is sold, what right has he to slip around and try to damage the business of the man who has honestly paid his money for the privilege of selling?

Who is the most honest and least hypocritical man in the whole transaction, and why apply church discipline to the one and not the others? When a man's whole conduct can not be made to harmonize some part of it is wrong. But as long as church members continue to attempt to harmonize religious and political creeds as opposite in their nature, tendency and results as light and darkness, this difficulty will continue to arise. It is exactly the attempt the devil made when he asked Christ to cast himself down from the pinnacle of the Temple and force his divinity or spirituality to justify the rash act of a reckless humanity.

Bro. "Layman or Sextus" says that, "In the sale of intoxicating liquors the church recognizes a great evil, but not the only one, nor as an evil which should claim the entire time of the church."

Is there anybody on earth who ever undertook to controvert this position? If so, we would like to know it? That is not the controversy God is having with his church to-day. But the controversy is, Why does the church, through its membership, treat this evil differently from any other evil? Our courts of last resort have said that according to common law principles, murder, arson, theft, and many other things are wrong, and that no citizen has any right to indulge in them. And forthwith our church people have helped to elect law makers who have fixed severe legal penalties to the perpetration of these wrongs.

So our court of last resort has said that, "The statistics of every State show that there is no greater source of crime and suffering to society than the dram shop, and that there is no inherent right in a citizen of a State, or of the United States, to run one" And yet our church people, at every election, help to elect law makers, who instead of fixing severe penalties to the crime of running these dram shops, pass laws to authorize them, and to sell men the privilege to run them for a money consideration! Now, would it not be better for Bro. "Layman or Sextus" to meet this plain statement of undeniable facts, than to spend his time manufacturing men of straw at which to shoot his cotton wads?

But the brother says again: "A man will not conscientiously oppose the sale of liquor until his moral nature is so quickened that he looks upon such sale as morally wrong."

Far be it from us to disparage the power and influence of the church for good in the world, and especially when her membership strives to measure up to the standard erected by the Master, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." But to attempt to make of prohibition a moral question only is to endeavor to overturn the plain decision of our highest court, which has declared it to be "a matter of legislative will only." The drink bill of the nation is $1,200,000,000 a year, and the infidel is as much interested in stopping that drain as the Christian. The incidental expenses resulting from the presence of the saloon, in the way of criminal courts, jails, poor houses, penitentiaries, lunatic asylums, charities, loss of labor, and the destruction of machinery and other property, is $1,200,000,000 more, and this money has to be raised by taxing the sober industry of the nation in which infidels are interested as much as Christians. Then, again, there are a thousand wives annually murdered by husbands brutalized in these saloons; three hundred thousand more forced to do menial service to support such husbands, and five hundred thousand children starving and freezing for the want of food and clothing that the money ought to buy that goes into the liquor that brutalizes such husbands and fathers; and these suffering ones are the friends and relatives of infidels as well as of Christians. But then, again, the saloon is debauching our politics and subverting the very foundation principles of our government in the purity and perpetuation of which the infidel is as much interested as the Christian. And still further, the saloon stands in the way of the progress of the infidel's religion—the higher development of the human race—as much as it stands in the way of progress of the Christian's religion—the higher spirituality of the human race.

Furthermore, we have been an humble official member of the M. E. Church, South, for forty years, and a close student of the problem of the abolition of the licensed beverage liquor traffic ten years, and within the range of our observation, candor compels us to say that there is as large a portion to the whole number of infidels actively advocating prohibition or the abolition of the beverage liquor traffic as there is of professing Christians.

Finally, prohibition is a part of the Mohammedan creed, and the complete enforcement of the law with them, both divine and political, has only been interfered with by the introduction of professing Christians among them, and wherever Christian missionaries have penetrated into any heathen country Christian rum has followed them. This is not the fault of the Christian principles taught by Christ; but it is the result of that spurious Christianity that pretendingly magnifies the First Commandment, and meanrably ignores the Second, which Christ said was "like unto it."

Taxing Robbery.

Inasmuch as many others have taken in hand to set forth a declaration of those things believed among us, it seemed good unto me also, having a knowledge of these things from the beginning, to write unto thee, most excellent Charles, that thou mightest know the certainty of this matter.

Now, many people came together and founded them a city, and others came and dwelt with them, to buy and sell and get gain. From the rich provinces roundabout many highways lead into this city. Now, there was in that city many people that had a heart to robbery, and were much disposed to thieving; so by them much harm was done to this city, and the regions roundabout also suffered much by reason of those robbers. Then said the people among themselves: "These things ought not so to be. Go to, let us come together and make laws whereby this evil may be restrained." Then one among the people arose and said: "Hear me, my brethren. The things thou sayest are not wise, neither is it for the good of the people, for thou canst not legislate righteousness into the hearts of men. This thing is folly." Others said: "As this thing can not be prevented, by reason of the hardness of the hearts of the people (for they are stiffed-necked and rebellious), let us, therefore, turn this evil to the profit of the people. Let the business be taxed, that the treasury of the city be filled." And the robbers answered and said: "Thou art my brother. Thou hast well said. Now let this thing be done. Give unto us a license, and we will pay much money into the treasury of the city, and there shall be no lack. Furthermore, this will make the business respectable, and also hinder him that doth work it on a small scale." But one among them said: "It seemeth not good unto me, for, like the ruler of the heathen Chinese, I say it is right to tax a vile thing, and thus raise a revenue from the sins of the people." But they took no heed of this saying. And it came to pass that they licensed robbery, and the sufferings of the people were greatly multiplied, for the dens of thieves were very many.

Now, in those days there came a woman running to the house of the governor, crying: "Help, help, for such a one hath robbed my house, and there is no bread found for my children; neither have we raiment wherewith to cover our nakedness." And the whole city was filled with confusion. And a wise-hearted man rose up among them and said: "Men and brethren, hear me. Before these days we have all known of this great evil. Go to, let us make a law for ourselves—a law forbidding this evil." Then said one: "We would ask thee a question: Will prohibition prohibit?" They said unto him: "We will also ask thee a question; answer us. Hast not thou, or thy kinspeople, a hand in this matter?" And his countenance fell; but he was filled with wrath, and turned aside. And the assembly was confused, and there was much strife. Some said one thing, and some another, and it was evident that the more part knew not the vital features involved in the case, for they thought only on their own interest, or the interest of a friend. Nevertheless, the prohibitory law was passed. However, the thieving and robbery did not cease. The open den of the lion only became the secret lair of the fierce tiger.

Now, when three months had ended, and the Winter was near at hand, some one said the robbery now is more than it was before, and the suffering of the people greater. Alas! alas! what shall be done? And they said among themselves: "Come, let us go through the city, taking the people by families, and let us know the extent of this matter." And they reported that by the space of three months robberies had been committed in the city to the amount of 13,000 pieces of silver, and some gold. And the people lifted up their voices and wept, and the people marveled greatly that the robbers themselves did weep bitterly, even more than all others. And they said one to another: "Are the robbers also in sympathy with the suffering people?" And it came to pass that others said: "We will also look into this matter and know the utmost of it, so that we may tell it, even in Gath, why prohibition does not prohibit, for this thing hath grieved us much." And they began at the end of the time, when the license expired, and numbered backward, among great and small, for fourscore and ten days, and set the sum thereof in full before all the people, and the robberies amounted to 125,000 pieces of silver, and much fine gold. And now, when the robbers and friends thereof looked upon these figures, the flood of their tears dried up in their eyes, and they ceased to weep, insomuch that the people marveled greatly, and said among themselves, "Were not the first tears after the manner of the great saurian of the Nile?"

Now, I, Thomas the Scribe, who is also called Stirling, hath had a perfect knowledge of these things, and do declare the same to be true. Grace be with you. Amen!

TOM STIRLING.

The Regular Collections.

One of the By-laws of the Board of Missions limits the appropriations made at each annual meeting for the support and re-enforcement of our mission fields to the amount of the regular collections under the assessments. Last year these collections amounted to $263,444.11, and the appropriations were limited to these figures. The appeals from every field were urgent. The call for "more men" was borne to us on the lips of the dying Lambuth. China, Brazil, and Mexico plead for re-enforcements. Our faithful missionaries on the "Western work" are weary with waiting as they see that field white unto the harvest enlarging every year as the tide of immigration pours in upon its fertile valleys. Our missionaries among the Indians, overworked and poorly paid, are pleading for help to enable them to occupy that field. We need every dollar of the assessment of $350,000 to enable us to meet the most pressing of the calls on the Board this year.

We are informed by our Treasurer that it is yet uncertain whether the regular collections under the assessments will reach the amount reported last year. In their heroic efforts to pay the debt many may forget this urgent call. Our work will suffer if there is a decline in these collections. The fiscal year will end March 31, and when the account is closed we will have the sum of the appropriations the Board will make. We trust each pastor will see to it that an immediate call under his assessment is made, and report the amount to the Treasurer in Nashville before the 31st of March.

Sunday-School Conferences, Sunday-School Convention and Children's Days.

The Sunday-school Board of the Mississippi Conference solicits the cooperation of every presiding elder, pastor, superintendent, teacher and intelligent member of the church within the bounds of the Conference. Will you "stir up your pure minds" by reading in our Conference Minutes the Sunday-school statistics, and the report of the Board, and in the Discipline paragraphs 240, 241 and 245, and then take your part intelligently and faithfully, that a Sunday-school Convention may be held in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, a Sunday-school Conference in every district, and a Children's Day service in every Sunday-school this year?

The Sunday-school affords the largest and most fertile field for every class of workers in the church. "A great door, and effectual, is opened unto" all. The Board is ready and anxious to forward everything and everybody toward grand success in these important enterprises.

Correspondence is invited with the secretary, Rev. H. M. Ellis, or the treasurer, W. A. Gunning, Esq., at Natchez, Miss.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Judge righteously and plead the cause of the poor and needy." (Prov. xxxi, 9.)

TOPICAL OUTLINE.—I. Esther's Conflict (vs. 10-14). II. Esther's Resolve (vs. 15-17). III. Esther's Victory (vs. 1-3).

HOME READINGS.

Monday—Esther before the King. (Esther iv, 10-17; v, 1-3.)

Tuesday—Vashti Disobeys the King. (Esther i, 1-12.)

Wednesday—Vashti Deposed. (Esther i, 13-22.)

Thursday—Esther Made Queen. (Esther ii, 15-20.)

Friday—Mordecai Angers Haman. (Esther iii, 1-10.)

Saturday—Decree against the Jews. (Esther iii, 8-15.)

Sunday—Sack-cloth and Ashes. (Esther iv, 1-9.)

CENTRAL THOUGHT.—Intercession.

INTRODUCTORY.

TIME.—Probably about 475 B. C.

PLACES.—Shushan at the Royal Palace. Shushan, or Susa, was one of the capital cities of the Persian Empire. It was the principal place of residence of Xerxes.

PERSONS.—1. Esther, the Queen, whose Jewish name was Hadassah—the Myrtle; was a Jewish maiden, who lived in Babylon. She was an orphan, and had been adopted and reared by her cousin. She found favor with King Ahasuerus, and was made by him queen instead of Vashti. 2. Mordecai, a Jew of the captivity, who remained in Babylon when the remnant returned to Judea with Zerubbabel and Ezra. He was the cousin and foster-father of Esther. 3. Hatach, the chamberlain, an officer who had been appointed to attend upon the queen, and through whom she communicated with Mordecai. 4. The King Ahasuerus. Probably the Xerxes of secular history. He reigned from B. C. 485 to B. C. 465. He was a proud and impetuous king, but a self-indulgent and vacillating man, often cruel, and reckless of human life. 5. Haman, an Amalekite, the favorite of the king. He was ambitious and vain, a man of boundless cruelty, and by inheritance an enemy of the Jews.

CONNECTING LINKS.

The events of the lesson took place in the interval between the rebuilding of the temple by Zerubbabel and the rebuilding of the walls by Nehemiah. Haman, the prime minister and favorite of the king, is angered by the refusal of Mordecai to do homage to him, and determines to destroy the whole race to which Mordecai belongs. In order to effect this, he misrepresents them to the king, and after offering an immense sum of money, variously estimated, but probably nearly $2,000,000, he induces the king to issue an edict that on a certain day all the Jews should be massacred. It is not improbable that avarice conspired with revenge in his plan, and that he expected to receive more money from the plundered Jews than he paid into the royal treasury for slaying them. The edict causes terror among the Jews scattered throughout the empire. In his distress for his people, Mordecai sends to the queen a copy of the edict, and asks her intercession with the king, her husband. At this point the lesson begins. The question, "Why did Mordecai refuse to bow before Haman?" naturally arises, and may be answered by saying that the homage given by Persians to their rulers was of the nature of adoration, and to render this homage would have done violence to the religious principles of the Jew.

EXPLANATORY.

I.—ESTHER'S CONFLICT.

Ver. 10. "Again Esther spake unto Hatach," by whom the former message had been sent to Mordecai, and gave him a message in response to the appeal which Mordecai had sent to her.

Ver. 11. "All the King's servants . . . do know." The law of which she speaks is one well known to all, and is referred to by several secular historians. Its purpose was to secure the king against intrusion, and, perhaps, against assassination. It was a cruel law and "the very perfection of despotism." "Golden sceptre." "In all the numerous representations of Persian kings at Persepolis, there is not one in which the monarch does not hold a long tapering staff (which is probably the sceptre of Esther) in his right hand." (Rawlinson.) It was probably not made of solid gold; as this would have been too heavy; but was adorned with gold. "These thirty days." This increases her danger; for what influence may not some enemy have exerted upon the king and what change may not have taken place in the mind of her fickle husband. It had been thirty days since she saw his face. But might she not have requested an audience with the king? Yes, but her very failure to adopt this apparently simple means of gaining her purpose shows that for some good reason this was even less advisable than the perilous method she pursued.

Vers. 12, 13. "Think not with thyself." Mordecai now urges the considerations which ended the conflict between fear and duty in the mind of the queen. She had not been known as a Jewess; but the fact would certainly become known and the position she occupied could not avail to save her.

Ver. 14. "Then shall . . . deliverance arise to the Jews from another place." In the strength of his faith he does not doubt that God will in some way save his people from destruction; he only fears that Esther will lose the honor and glory of being the savior of her people. "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" His question implies his belief that the superintending providence of God had brought her into this position of influence that she might meet this crisis in the history of her people and save them from the danger that threatened them. There is implied also his faith in the successful issue of her intercession. In yielding to this plea Esther manifests the most unselfish patriotism. The thought that she was an instrument providentially selected to save her people from destruction was the inspiration of her noble purpose, and the fact that her personal safety was involved in the issue does not detract from her devotion to her people.

II.—ESTHER'S RESOLVE.

Vers. 15-16. "Go gather together all the Jews that are present in Shushan." She asks that all the Jews should join her in making a special appeal for God's favor and support. The fasting and humiliation would certainly be accompanied by prayer. "Three days." Probably from the afternoon of the first day to the morning of the third day. "I also and my maidens will fast likewise." It is not unlikely that she had chosen as her attendants a number of Jewish maidens. "And so I will go in unto the king." Her words indicate her courage and fixedness of purpose.

III.—ESTHER'S VICTORY.

Ver. 1. "Esther put on her royal apparel." She made herself as attractive as possible. While her dependence was upon her God she wisely made use of every means likely to secure the favor of the king. "Stood in the inner court of the king's house over against the king's house." Let us suppose that Esther having crossed the garden which separated the apartments of the women from the king's house, entered the royal apartments, and, after passing through the outer door, stood before the door leading into the grand central hall. At the end of the hall opposite this door sat the king upon his throne; so that the timid but resolute woman, as she stood modestly in the inner court, was distinctly seen by him.

Ver. 2. "And the king held out to Esther the golden sceptre that was in his hand." He looked with favor upon her and gave the sign which kept back the hands of the guard who stood ready to slay every intruder. "So Esther drew near and touched the top of the sceptre." This may have been a customary act indicating that the king's favor was accepted and appreciated, or it may have been simply a graceful acknowledgment of the kindness which spared her life.

Ver. 3. "It shall be given thee to the half of the kingdom." A generous promise, sincerely made and faithfully kept. It was not unusual for kings in token of their unbounded favor to use such expressions. (See Mark vi, 23.)

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

(1) If dangers and difficulties should deter us, nothing great or good would ever be accomplished. (Ver. 11.)

(2) The place of safety is the path of duty. (Ver. 13.)

(3) God's resources are not exhausted because one instrumentality fails. (Ver. 14.)

(4) It is ennobling to believe that God has a plan in my life, and blessed to feel that I am carrying out that plan. (Ver. 14.)

(5) An opportunity to do good is a call. (Ver. 14.)

(6) Prayer equips the worker and opens the way. (Ver. 16.)

(7) Many things are worse than death; but nothing worse can "occur to him" who does his duty. (Ver. 16.)

(8) Dependence upon God does not exclude, but rather implies a wise use of means. (Ver. 1.)

(9) The way to the King of kings is always open. His sceptre is always "outstretched." Will you not go to him?

(10) Esther saved her people from temporal death; Christ can save men from eternal death.

The Old Home.

A visit to the home of one's childhood revives many long-forgotten memories.

By the kind courtesy of Bro. J. R. Bingham, of Carrollton, Miss., I was permitted to spend last Sunday in that old town—the place of my birth. This village on the hill was once as far-famed for the culture, wealth and elegance of its people as it now is for its strange and awful tragedies. Many worthy sons and daughters still live there after the manner of their honored ancestors. The day was a perfect one, and the Methodist Church was well filled at the hour for service. Some in the audience were schoolmates in other days. The old schoolhouse still stands upon the hill, and the boys of the village still gather there to be taught.

The fathers and mothers of my generation have gone. Only a short while since the mother of Bro. Bingham was laid to rest by the side of his noble father. I, like many others, can never forget their kindness. The earth covers the mortal remains of no better woman than Sister Bingham.

Hard by this old town are the graves of my parents. Two years ago to-day (Feb. 24) my mother died. She was among the last of a fine company of women who graced that community in 1851-65, and gave to me a high ideal of pure womanhood. The names and lives of her friends—Mrs. Drake, Mrs. Neill, Mrs. Ewing, Mrs. Fox, Mrs. Hart, and many others—linger with me, and purify the thoughts and hopes of this distant hour. In the afternoon I walked about the old home place. It seemed to me I could hear the voice of my mother as she called us—her children—about her and read to us the Word of Life, and taught us of the things therein. Those "Bible stories," so interesting to the young, came back to me. I seemed to see her as she walked before us, leading us, by a pure life, to love the good. She lived not in words only. Above the confusion of childish annoyances and domestic labor and responsibility was the lustre of a right life. The remembrance of her ever-cheerful helpfulness, and her sympathy amid my youthful troubles, is a daily benediction. She is gone, and we are scattered, but her pure life is an ever-present blessing to each one of us. I stood again between my father's knees. I saw that noble company of men who came and mingled with his their hopes and fears. I remember well the faces of Col. Binford, Col. Jos. Drake, Dr. Ewing, Col. G. F. Neill (the boy's friend), Rev. Chas. Hart, Rev. H. Williamson, and a great company more. These men talked of Church and State, of character and honor, of right and wrong, and led my young mind early to think on these things. The cold mathematics of money can never compute the value of the visits of these men to my youthful life. I thank my father for having these friends in his home. He never brought bad or indifferent company into his house. But, above all those, his own manly form is first to me. He was a companion to me. I loved to be with him, and in a daily association of twenty years I never heard him use an impure word. How happy will be the reunion when I, too, shall have finished life's work!

With Bro. Bingham, I called to see our pastor there, Bro. Geo. Lipscomb, who was a little sick. He is in good favor with his people, and God is blessing his work.

Francis Asbury.

Undoubtedly it will be generally conceded that the greatest name among the makers of Methodism in America is that of Francis Asbury, the great pioneer Bishop. He was born in 1745 in Staffordshire—a short distance from Birmingham, England. When but a lad of seventeen he united with the Methodists, and in a little while became a traveling preacher. At twenty-one he was received into the Wesleyan Conference, and sent forth to labor on a circuit. He put in five years at this glorious work, and then went to Bristol in August, 1871, to Conference. He is described at this time as being "studious, devoted, self-sacrificing and faithful in the discharge of all his duties. He not only had made himself acquainted with the doctrines and discipline of Methodism, but he cherished for them the warmest affection, and conscientiously reduced them to every-day practice." This Bristol Conference was a very significant occasion in Asbury's career. The call had come again and again—a Macedonian cry—for missionaries for America. Mr. Wesley called for volunteers, and the first to respond was Asbury.

When Asbury arrived at Philadelphia he found only a handful of people, but they were the nucleus of what has grown to be a mighty host. The half-dozen preachers had planted societies in New York, Philadelphia, New Jersey, Maryland and Virginia, and the Methodists all told hardly numbered a thousand. But neither the paucity of numbers, the vastness of the territory, the hardships of the wilderness, the persecutions of enemies, nor the threatened political upheaval prevented this young man of twenty-six from "making full proof of his ministry." He was warmly received by his brethren in the ministry, and immediately took up the heavy burden of his work. He was quick to detect the efficiency of the itinerant system, and insisted upon its conscientious application. Every six months the preachers were changed, and the result was that the number of societies grew rapidly. In October, 1772, Asbury was appointed by Wesley general assistant or superintendent of all the preachers and societies in America. The next year the first regular Conference ever held in America was held in Philadelphia. It was composed of ten preachers, who represented 1,160 members. The prosperity of the following half-dozen years was purchased at great cost. Those were troublous times. The spirit of discontent was abroad. The colonies were seeking to throw off the British yoke and assert their independence. As the antecedents of Methodism were British, and as quite a number of the preachers were in sympathy with the cause of the king, much opposition was stirred up, especially by those most anxious to see the thriving sect stamped out. The missionary zeal of several of the preachers was swallowed up in their toryism, and they found it convenient to take ship for England. Asbury decided to stand by the infant church in her extremity and "not to depart from the work on any consideration." Bravely did he carry out his determination. He resumed his extraordinary labors as an administrator and preacher. He traveled far and wide, preaching and ministering as he went. The itinerants caught his spirit and threw themselves into their holy work with renewed zeal. In spite of bitterest opposition and cruel persecution the work went gloriously on.

The year 1784 is an important one in Methodist history. Before this date the Methodists had been regarded as members of the Church of England, but now they proposed to acquire an organization of their own. Mr. Wesley had duly set apart Dr. Thomas Coke as a Bishop, and had given him authority to proceed to America and organize the societies into an Episcopal Church and to ordain Asbury as Bishop. Soon after Dr. Coke's arrival the preachers were summoned to Baltimore, and the first General Conference, known as the "Christmas" Conference, was held, at which time Asbury was formally ordained first as deacon, then as elder, then as Bishop, and the Methodist Episcopal Church was duly organized. The setting apart of Asbury as Bishop was an event which more than any other contributed to the permanent establishment and success of Methodism in America. Immediately upon the adjournment of the Christmas Conference Asbury began a series of labors and travels so arduous in their character and so painful in their results that they justly entitle him to be called the apostle of American Methodism. A firm believer in sound education, he gathered funds for the establishment of our first college—Cokesbury. In 1788 he made his first evangelistic trip across the Alleghanies. The next year George Washington was elected President, and by order of the New York Conference Bishop Asbury presented a congratulatory address to him. The reply of Washington to the address of the Methodists—the first church to formally assure him of its sympathy and devotion—left no room to doubt the loyalty of the followers of Wesley to the American cause.

In 1791 the episcopal itinerant made his way into New England, but was received with scant cordiality. Of this visit he says in his journal: "I am inclined to think the Eastern church will find this saying hold true in regard to the Methodists, 'I will provoke you to jealousy by a people that were no people; and by a foolish nation I will anger you.' They have trodden upon the Quakers, the Episcopalians, the Baptists—see now if the Methodists do not work their way." These almost prophetic words were strangely fulfilled—the Methodists soon firmly entrenched themselves in the very strongholds of New England Calvinism in spite of the bitterest opposition. The apostolic Bishop could not be thwarted from his high purpose. Like an apocalyptic angel he flew over his great field. Now he is traveling along the Hudson, preaching, exhorting and planning with his preachers. Now he pushes into the wilderness and submits to awful privations in order to plant the seed of Methodism. Now he crosses the Alleghanies and encourages the hearts of his itinerant brethren by his wise counsels and noble example. Then he is heard of in Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, the Carolinas, and he is back again in Virginia and Baltimore. His body is wearied, but he stays not; fever seizes him, but he burns more with a desire for the salvation of souls; dangers surround him, but he pushes on in spite of them; on, on he goes, in rain, snow, and under the burning sun; through rivers, swamps, forests; over hills and mountains; sleeping on the cold ground or in a humble log cabin, often famished for food and burning with thirst, and in perils oft; but none of these things moved the self-sacrificing hero. During the year 1807 he was sole Bishop. Coke was in Europe; Whatcoat was dead. The venerable Asbury, worn out with mighty labors, was compelled to preside at the seven Conferences of the church, and had to travel 6 000 miles in ten months to do it. The next year William McKendree was elected Bishop, and the two entered on a tour of the Conferences together. The salary of the Bishops at this time was eighty dollars a year. Asbury preached his last sermon March 24, 1816, at Richmond, Va. Seven days later he passed away at Spottsylvania, Va. His body was laid away under the recess of the pulpit of Eutaw Street Church, Baltimore, and on June 16, 1854, it was interred in Mt. Olivet Cemetery, near Baltimore.

Francis Asbury was in many respects a great man. His fame as a preacher was eclipsed by his renown as an administrator. It is said that there is scarcely an auxiliary agency in the present Methodist family that was not projected by him, or suggested in embryo. He found Methodism feeble, timid, unsettled. He left a thoroughly organized church, strong, vigorous, of constantly-increasing numbers, which was regarded as the greatest evangelizing force of the age. Asbury was "the incarnation of the ecclesiastical genius and religious spirit of American Methodism." The debt which present-day Methodism and Christianity owe to him is incalculable.—Epworth Herald.

Rev. Mr. Williams Heartily Endorses Hood's Sarsaparilla.

We are pleased to present this from Rev. A. A. Williams, of the Silsbee street Christian Church, Lynn, Mass.:

"I see no reason why a clergyman, more than a layman, who knows whereof he speaks, should hesitate to approve an

Article of Merit

and worth, from which he or his family have been signally benefited, and whose commendation may serve to extend those benefits to others. My wife has for many years been a sufferer from severe

Nervous Headache

for which she found little help. She has tried many things that promised well but performed little. Last fall she took Hood's Sarsaparilla. It seems surprising what one bottle could and did do for her. The attacks of headache decreased in number and were less violent in their intensity, while her general health has been improved. Her appetite is also better. From experience with

Hood's Sarsaparilla

I have no hesitation in endorsing its merits." A. A. WILLIAMS.

The Revival.
The remarkable sale of "The Revival" is proof of its merit and cheapness. As a collection of hymns and songs for Special and Revival occasions it is hard to match. "Life's Railroad" or "Beautiful Beckoning Hands" are either one worth the price of the book.

The following dispatch was received just as we went to press from Rev. George H. Thompson, of Enterprise, Miss.:

Rev. T. Y. Armstrong died at Rose Hill this morning.

Under a New Regime.

Last Saturday in the City of Washington the result of the general election held in November reached its culmination in the inauguration of Grover Cleveland as President of the United States. The popular vote was so largely in his favor that it can hardly be wide of the mark to say that Mr. Cleveland is the people's President. Evidently he is not the President of the politicians, for he was nominated against the wish and despite the efforts of that class in his own party. All parties are so thoroughly convinced of Mr. Cleveland's honesty of purpose and courage in discharge of duty that the general belief is that the administration of national affairs will be equally as patriotic and foster the general good as much as any preceding administration. As his advisers, Mr. Cleveland has selected men who command the respect of the country for their integrity and great knowledge of public affairs, and this gives additional assurance that the country is safe in present hands.

The ceremonies attending the inauguration were very elaborate, and were witnessed by hundreds of thousands of people gathered from every section of our broad land. Mr. Cleveland took the oath of office, administered by Chief Justice Fuller, of the Supreme Court, and this great and glorious country passed from the hands of the Republicans into the hands of the Democrats.

It was our quadrennial revolution, effected amid the shouts of millions and thousands of prayers for a reign of peace and plenty and prosperity. Long live the Republic!

If every friend of Millsaps College would only contribute the small amount of one dollar, we would finish up our $100,000 endowment. Are you a friend to Millsaps? Send on your dollar and prove your faith by your works.

Do you owe a note? Pay it up, or, at least, write and tell me you are sorry that you can not pay it and enclose a dollar to emphasize your sorrow.

Some have not known where to address. Direct all your letters to Jackson, Miss.

Brethren, let us all pull together and finish up this matter at once.

JOHN W. CHAMBERS, Agt.

In 1892 there were 6,792 murders in this country, to be contrasted with 3,567 in 1889; and, with all the murders of 1892, there were only 107 judicial executions. It is no great wonder, therefore, as executions have decreased, that lynchings should have increased, there having been 236 of such victims, of which, we are sorry to learn, 200 were in the South. The number of suicides increases; 3,860 during 1892, and 2,224 in 1889; the cause producing the largest number was "despondency;" 1,463 cases by reason of it. The Christian religion we understand well enough to be aware that if accepted in its brightness and pardon, "despondency" would pass away.—Southern Churchman.

The Obligations of Wealth.

Very few persons seem to recognize the fact that the accumulation of wealth creates obligations. The reason for this lack of recognition may be in the fact that very few persons study wealth in the light of New Testament teachings. In the New Testament the teaching is, that whatever a man has in possession is a "talent," for the best use of which he will be held to a rigid account. God is the universal proprietor who distributes the talents to men "according to their several ability" to use the same. Men are the stewards to whose keeping the talents are distributed to be used—not selfishly—but for the best interests of the proprietor. The relation of proprietor and steward creates duties on the one side and rights on the other. Duty everywhere means obligation. The man who possesses wealth has possession of a "talent" which he is under obligation to use according to the law which subsists between the proprietor and the steward. It is idle for men to endeavor to escape the force of the New Testament teaching here, by saying that they have accumulated their wealth by their own skill and industry, and they will use it as they please. Where did they acquire that skill and industry? The Scripture, long before Christ taught, announced the fact, "It is God that giveth thee power to get wealth." And the apostle quite significantly asks: "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" Men, then, are under the strongest obligations to use their money according to the instructions which God gives. They can no more escape from the force of this teaching than things on the earth can escape from the power of gravitation. If they try to escape, then the penalty is sure to come, and the doom will be that of the slothful servant.

The rich man who understands his position and the obligations that position brings—who acknowledges God as his Master and bows willingly to his authority—who regards his wealth as a talent for the use of which he is responsible, and looks about him to discover the best opportunities for using it for God's glory in human good, soon finds out that the proper use of money is something better than money. He soon realizes and rejoices in the realization that his talent is one of the best that God ever bestows, and that as he sends his money out in the channels God has marked out for it that it not only carries light and help and hope to others, but it brings them in a rich abundance into his own life and experience. The opportunities that open every day before him, and which he is careful to enter and improve, open new springs of pleasure in his own soul, new sources of enjoyment in his daily life and add mightily to his power for good among men. Thus his wealth becomes his best "means of grace," and its proper use assimilates him in character to the boundless Giver of all good. He recognizes the obligations of his wealth and strives to meet them with a hearty good-will. He receives the heartfelt gratitude of all to whom he has been a helper, and in the end, when the last account is rendered, he expects to hear from his Master: "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful—enter in."

The rich man who fails to understand his position and its responsibilities, who looks upon God as an intruder upon his private affairs, who regards his money as only his own, will never discover anything half so good as that money. No opportunities of helpful service of others will come to him. Instead, there will come a hardening of all the tender emotions, a blunting of all the finer sensibilities, a closing of all the springs of compassion, a deadening of all the scruples of conscience and a self-indulgence which finds its supreme enjoyment in getting more money to enable him to get more money. He has "digged in the earth and hid his talent," and there is nothing left but—"Take it from him and cast him into outer darkness."

If the parable of the talents teaches anything plainly, it is the fact that God's test of a man's character is the way a man uses his talent, whatever that talent may be. Hence the study for every man ought to be the ethics of the talents.

Evangelists.

The question of evangelists and their appointment by the church is now before the Methodist public, and, likely, will be till after the next General Conference. It seems to me that some of those who write for the press, notably Rev. S. A. Steel, D. D., make more of the term "evangelists" in Eph. iv, 5, than the Scriptures justify. This term, I believe, occurs in only three places in the Scriptures. In Acts xxi, 8, Philip is called the "evangelist." Philip was one of the seven deacons, and it seems that after he baptized the eunuch he settled down at Cesarea, where he devoted himself to the care of his family, and occasionally performing the work of an evangelist. His itinerant ministry, perhaps, ended at Cesarea. It seems that, in the scriptural sense of the term, an evangelist was a messenger to carry good news—the news of salvation for all mankind by faith in Christ. In the apostolic and early church they did the work that is done by missionaries in this age. Certainly the apostles knew nothing of evangelists as we have them now. To say that this particular thing—these evangelists and their methods of work—is designated and enjoined in the Scriptures is, I think, going a step too far. By the same method of exposition "faith healing," "anointing with oil," "working miracles," a special "gift of tongues" and special "revelations" and "interpretations" are all enjoined too. This kind of authority is claimed by those who do all these things, or claim to do them. The prophet says of Christ, "who healeth all thy diseases;" hence not a few are traveling evangelists who oppose the doctors and the taking of medicine, and go about commending Christ as the great healer. They say, "No one can be a Christian, or trust Christ fully, who sends for a doctor or takes medicine." They limit God to the miraculous way of doing everything. If God does a thing by calomel or quinine, it is just as truly his work as if he had done it by a touch of his finger.

It is not to be denied that men have special gifts and that they are called to do special work. These gifts and these callings are of God—all for "the work of the ministry and the perfecting of the saints." If I am to "covet the best gift," I would have great trouble in deciding what it was. It is a great gift to be a pastor, a teacher, a ruler, a preacher, a healer, an evangelist. If I know my own heart, a hard thing for one to know, I covet most of all the gift of being a "teaching preacher," or a "preaching teacher." So I bend all my studies this way. If my brother covets, receives and cultivates the pastoral, the evangelistic or the linguistic gift, shall I envy him, or be jealous of him? Nay, verily, for then I am guilty of sin. It is a mistake—a mistake into which thousands are falling—that the evangelistic gift is the best, really the only gift worth having. The publicity given to evangelists and to evangelistic work tends to mislead men, particularly young preachers, as to the relative and comparative importance of the evangelistic gift. "Are all evangelists?" which means, "All are not evangelists." Most of the work of evangelists would be entirely lost if it were not for the pastors, the preachers and the teachers who follow after them; indeed, most of their work in this country would be impossible if it were not for the pastors and teachers who go before them. I have heard several of the most noted evangelists with great pleasure and profit; but, I confess, that for daily bread, for months and years at a time, I would not like that kind of spiritual food. I am glad they are itinerant men. I like for them to come around and thaw me out and warm me up, and, then, I want milk, meat and bread that I may grow thereby. I am glad they are not pastors, not shepherds of the flock of God. I think it would be Methodistic to make room for them, and let them roam, and attend to the work of evangelists. If Wesley were alive, I believe he would do this. He would have a method of doing it. So far as my reading goes, Mr. Wesley had more of the "best gifts" than any one man since the days of Paul. He was a great preacher, a great teacher, a great pastor, a great ruler, a great linguist, a great expounder and a great evangelist. The Pauls and Wesleys, however, are few and far between. One "best gift" is more than most of us manage well. If we had more pastors, more and better organizers, more preachers, more teachers, the work of the evangelists would be more efficient and lasting than it is. As soon as a sinner is converted he ought to go into the school of Christ where, under a competent teacher, he could learn the way of God more perfectly.

GILDEROY.

The Next General Conference.

Among the most important matters that will necessarily demand the attention of our next General Conference will be that of devising ways and means for diffusing new life and a more intelligent interest on the part of our people in the missionary enterprises of the church. That we are now confronted with an appalling crisis in this department of church work must be apparent to all who have carefully studied the situation, and there are two causes for this state of things. The first is, that there are so many enterprises of the church, that are now being emphasized and pressed through agents who come in immediate contact with the people as special pleaders for their special causes, that the cause of missions is overshadowed. I do not charge that this is a result purposely sought, but that it is the necessary result of the present enthusiastic method of presenting the other claims of the church. The other cause is, the fact that the pastors can not utilize the helps afforded by the Board to awaken enthusiasm in the church in this arm of service. We are told if we would circulate the Board's literature we could easily remedy this evil, and we are censured for not doing this. Let me say just here—and I believe every pastor will endorse the saying—that the most difficult task the pastor has to perform is to try to keep up with the literature of the church. There are so many publications representing everything and every locality, that our people listen to us with an illy disguised disgust when we attempt a talk on literature. These are facts, and we had as well recognize them, and that they are facts that have come to stay, and that some plan must be adopted to put the cause of missions on an equal footing with the other enterprises of the church, both as to its claims and as an enlightening and developing force.

Then, what is the plan? I suggest the following, subject, of course, to amendment or entire substitution if a better is devised. Let the next General Conference authorize the Bishops to divide the church into as many missionary districts as they may deem necessary to a thorough canvass and systematic instruction of the people, and then appoint a secretary for each district. I think six districts would be enough, for, at least, the next four years, and possibly longer. Then, let these district secretaries, with the office secretary, treasurer, and the Bishops, constitute the Board of Missions. You will thus place the arrangement under control of men who have made the subject a special study, and who will feel a personal responsibility for the success of all enterprises projected, and who are close enough to the people to enthuse them with their own increased interest in this great work. All this, it seems to me, is the great need of the church in the development of the cause of missions, and it will never be done by men who are pastors, presiding elders, editors, or something else, as well as members of the Board. These men must look after the special work to which they are assigned, and have neither time nor thought to give to the proper development of the Board's plans.

The first question will be, What will it cost? I do not see why good men—by that I mean men for the place—could not be secured as district secretaries on $1,200 a year as salary, and say their traveling expenses would be $300 more, or a total of $1,500 each. Then, say the aggregated cost of the six district secretaries would be $10,000, and this would only be $5,000 more than two secretaries cost the church now for salaries alone. But I will not go further into this subject now, as I have merely suggested these thoughts with the hope that they might inspire others to write, and that we may reach a safe and sound conclusion of the matter.

J. M. WEEMS.

An Old Church.

A friend of the ADVOCATE, looking over some old books, found the following description of the old Poydras Street Methodist Church in this city. It was published in the first City Directory for 1836:

Located at the corner of Carondelet and Poydras streets. Grecian-Doric style, the pillars of which are copied from the Temple of Theseus at Athens. The facade in imitation of Greek temples. From the roof and over the pronaos of the temple rises a large octangular obelisk, resting on a lofty pedestal of the Egyptian order of architecture, combining a novel grandeur and beauty unequalled in the Union. The height of the steeple is 170 fe[et]. Erected by architects Darki[n] and Dakins in 1836. Minister Rev. Mr. Hamilton.

Some of our older people, doubtless, remember the imposing appearance of that Methodist temple of worship, which was destroyed by the devouring flames a few years after its construction. We have now nothing as imposing as that seems to have been, but we have some very fine-looking churches, built more after the modern style of architecture. Among these we may note that Wayne Memorial, Felicity Street and our new Louisiana Avenue Churches will safely bear the inspection of a critical eye.

The Present Time—youngest born of Eternity, child and heir of all the Past Times with their good and evil, and parent of all the Future—is ever a "New Era" to the thinking man. . . To know it, and what it bids us do, is ever the sum of knowledge for all of us.—Carlyle.

NOTES.

"It is not the business of the church to popularize Christianity, but to Christianize the populace."

Being and doing ought to go hand in hand. The Christian should not only cultivate goodness in himself; he should do good to others.

Hugh Price Hughes says, "The only remedy for the gin palace is to split it in halves, and have the gin in one place and the palace in another."

It is pleasant to learn that about five thousand words in the English language have no rhyme to them. These include such important words as honor, virtue, gulf, month and echo. If the number of non-rhyming words could be indefinitely multiplied, a vast amount of energy might perhaps be diverted to pursuits that would be of benefit to humanity.—Mid-Continent.

Augustine, speaking of the evil effects of wine-drinking in his day, declared it to be "the mother of all mischief, the root of crimes, the spring of vices, the whirlwind of the brain, the overthrow of the sense, the tempest of the tongue, the ruin of the body, the wreck of chastity, a loss of time, a voluntary rage, a shameful weakness, the shame of life, the stain of honesty, and the plague and corruption of the soul."—Zion's Herald.

We have grave doubts of the sincerity and earnestness of a Christian minister or any Christian man who can pass for years up and down the streets of our towns and cities, and in and out the homes of the people, and see and know, as he must, of the fearful and manifold evils resulting from the liquor traffic, and not lift up hand or voice against this infamy of infamies. Yet such men may be found in this land to-day, strange as it may seem.—Christian at Work.

"Publish this in your paper exactly as it is written." If we were to do that in every case, it would make some funny reading for export writers and readers, but it would not always look in print just as the sender of the communication might wish. What with amazing spelling and punctuating and paragraphing and general putting together—well! For instance, in an article now before us we have just changed "neose" into knees—and this from a truly great and good man.—Christian Standard.

The Presbyterians are taking up with circuit riding, and quite successfully. The Rev. Emmanuel Shultz, of Rehoboth, Ind., issues a card of appointments. These are eight in number, reached, each of them, once in three weeks, and with occasional revival services at each place. During the last three months he has received nearly fifty members, on profession, in one of these charges. This is good service, and work that might be done to good advantage and with much resultant joy by some who are now without charge.—Christian at Work.

If your pastor preaches a sermon which helps and strengthens you, tell him so; and he will preach a more helpful one next time. Don't be afraid of making a sensible man vain by telling him he is doing good. It will make him thankful and more devoted. Said a lady to a preacher, "I was just at the point to give up an important duty, but since I heard your sermon to-day I shall go on with that duty." That preacher went home with a new joy in his heart.

This is the Genesis and Exodus of humanity's great, steady, slow-growing uplift: First, the fanatic, laughed at and despised; next, the reformer, battling against overwhelming numbers, and often with but small success; then the philanthropist who has an easier road; next, the statesman who is covered with honor and lifted on the pedestal of fame; last, the politician, who if he fears God and loves his brethren, clinches the work of those who have preceded him in such legislation as furnishes to the people the officer behind the ordinance, the law-enforcer back of the law.—Union Signal.

How do you like this sort of a man described by an exchange?

There is a man who has done more good, I believe, in this community, than any other. A family never moves in that he does not [have] some one come and offer them some service. He gives strangers a seat in his pew. He watches with a sick neighbor and looks after his affairs. He and his wife keep house plants in Winter mainly to send bouquets to friends and invalids. He has a pleasant word for every child and you'll always see them climbing into his wagon when he has no other load. He has a genius for helping folks.

We should say that he "had religion" of a good kind.

We clip this from the New York Christian Advocate. Which one of our preachers does it fit?

There are thousands of Methodists to whom no pastor has spoken; and many sons and daughters of members to whom no pastor has said one earnest word; and the country fairly swarms with non-church-goers whom no pastor has approached. A tenth of the activity displayed by business men in gaining new customers and making new demands for their wares could, if exercised by ministers, fill their empty churches; or if the churches were well attended, fill the prayer meetings, a far better sign of life than the perfunctory congregation which appears only on fair Sunday mornings' ex[cept]. So little zeal [is] displayed by some pastors of small churches that, even where earnest members tell them of open doors, they neglect them.

No wonder their preaching neither stirs nor leads the people. Whatever else a preacher is or has, it is a misnomer to call him or his sermons "able" unless he is and does what he urges the people to be and do.

A vigorous cyclone visited Marion, Miss., last week, carrying destruction and death. Several persons were killed and a large amount of property destroyed.

J. W. Dawson, of Lisbon, La., gave us a short call last week. He represents things moving on well in his section of the church under the lead of Rev. R. M. Blocker.

One of our pastors showed us a note recently from one of the young members of his church, asking him to preach on the "worldliness in the church." What do you think of that?

The Millsaps College grounds are being greatly improved and benefited by landscape gardener Douglass, of Nashville. He has made quite an agreeable change, already.—Clarion-Ledger.

A note from Bro. Hawkins since our last issue, in which mention was made of the return home of Mrs. Lamhuth, says, "Mrs. Lamhuth became too sick to leave the day of the ship's departure." The note is dated Feb. 2.

The following telegram from Bro. Standefer at Columbus, Miss., was received after our paper went to press last week: "Rev. J. B. Culpepper closed meeting here yesterday. Two hundred and fifty added to the church." So religion is not yet "dying out."

A new magazine which has come to our desk is the Manufacturers' Record Magazine, published in Baltimore. It is a new monthly devoted to Southern resources and progress, and is certainly a valuable addition to the agencies already at work for the development of our Southland.

When whisky money, coined out of the life-blood of widowhood and orphanage, is used to hush the voice of the pulpit, by sending its perfumes into the halls of Christian learning, and the gift accepted with loud hallelujahs, it is high time the church was taking a new reckoning.—Central Methodist.

A large congregation greeted Rev. B. S. Rayner in the Methodist Church last Sunday. The morning sermon was plain and practical, addressed alike to the heads and hearts of his hearers, and produced a lasting impression. His text was, "Choose you this day whom you will serve." Josh. xxiv, 15. —Scott County Register.

Brethren complain of our printers for making mistakes; but if brethren will write illegibly, the printers must needs guess at it, and sometimes guess wrong. We hope brethren will read over their communications before sending them and see if it is always our fault that mistakes are made.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Aberdeen, Miss., writes March 3, as follows:

I am glad to announce that Rev. Lewis Powell, P. E., of East Nashville district, is improving in health. He is visiting his father-in-law, Mr. J. D. Shell, of Aberdeen. Bro. Powell and his good wife are much beloved among us. It will require some weeks yet for him to regain his health.

Of our new Centenary Church in San Francisco, dedicated a few Sundays ago, the Pacific Methodist Advocate says:

The building is of beautiful modern architectural design, and represents many sacrifices and much earnest efforts on the part of our people who lost their former church by fire more than a year ago, and totally uninsured.

We notice by the Southern Watchman that the ladies of the Methodist Church in Clinton, La., have started a plan for building a new church. The old house is the first church-building we ever worshiped in. We went to Sunday-school there in the "early forties." We wish "those women" all success in their enterprise.

Peter Henderson & Co., of New York, have our thanks for their new catalogue of "Everything for the Garden for 1893." This is one of the finest productions of the kind that we have seen. It will be sent to anyone on receipt of twenty-five cents, which amount will be deducted from the first order sent for goods from them.

Bro. McLaurin, Bible Agent for Louisiana and Mississippi, was recently called home by the sickness of his aged mother, but reports her in an improved condition. She has been a member of the church 64 years. Bro. McLaurin reports that his collections for the Bible cause are not as good as formerly. Strange that Christian people will not give money to circulate the Word of God!

Rev. R. M. Standefer, Columbus, Miss., Feb. 27: "The revival services, conducted at this place by Rev. J. B. Culpepper, of Macon, Ga., closes this morning. Bro. Culpepper came in the Spirit of the Master about ten or twelve days ago. Divine power has been manifest at every service. The cold and lukewarm restored, and sinners have been converted to God. One hundred and twenty-eight have applied for membership in the different churches. Bro. Johnson, pastor of the Baptist Church, voiced the sentiment of the town when he said to me this morning, 'Tis the old-time religion, and it's good enough for me.'"

Letter of Condolence.

Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss.,
Tuesday night, Feb. 21, 1893.

Mrs. Geo. S. Inge, Corinth, Miss.—

Dear Sister Inge: In this hour of your greatest sorrow and bereavement, allow us, as Christian brethren and friends, as pastor and Board of Stewards of our beloved church at Columbus, to mingle our tears with yours, and to extend to you our heartfelt sympathy with our prayers for God's blessings upon you and yours, invoking for you all that the Divine Comforter alone can furnish. Peace to the soul of our beloved brother, your sainted husband, honor and glory to his name! Heaven's benediction upon his loving wife and fatherless children. God loveth whom he chasteneth, and it is for us to bow in submission to his will. At home with Jesus—your darling husband. We are,

Your friends and brethren,
R. M. STANDEFER, Pastor.

Grenada District, North Mississippi Conference.

To the Preachers and Official Members of the District—

Dear Brethren: Because many of you were not present at your respective Quarterly Conferences, I take this method of addressing you in reference to some things greatly needed in many places in the district; and as you, who are official members, can, by co-operation with your pastor, help greatly in these matters, I feel the importance of urging you to give special attention to the following matters:

First, the Sunday-school. In many places where I have held Quarterly Conferences, I have found a great lack of interest, and in some places we have no schools at all. Now, if you brethren will see to it that the Sunday-school receives your earnest attention for the next three months, you will see a very decided improvement in our Sunday-schools. Let us have as many Sunday-school scholars in the Grenada district as we have church members, at least; and I think if you brethren who did not attend the first Quarterly Conference will put in some good work for the Master in the way of Sunday-school work, you will feel like making a greater effort to be present at your second Quarterly Conference.

The second thing I would call your attention to is the circulating and reading of our literature. I have found, to my great surprise, several official members not even taking a religious paper. These, I fear, will not see this letter unless some good brother hand them the paper, and ask them to read. Now, I contend that a man is not competent to do church work who is not posted in that work. Then, let every official member take one, or more, of the Advocates, and try to get some member of his church to do likewise. Let us have as many Advocates in the district as we have Methodist families.

The third thing I mention is financial system. Strange as it may appear, there are only three charges where there is any system. As a result, when the Quarterly Conferences for these three charges were held, one-fourth of the preacher's salary was paid. Where there was no system, about one-eighth to one-tenth was the amount paid to the preacher—all for the want of system. It is not poverty, as many of you have said. It is just for the want of management. Now, if the preachers will insist upon the plan laid down in our Book of Discipline, and the stewards will work the plan faithfully, every dollar of the preachers' salary will be paid, and also all the collections ordered by the Conference. Then Grenada district will be what it should be in that respect.

The last thing, but not the least, I would mention, is family prayer. So few families, comparatively speaking, that have prayers, and some official members fail to do their duty here. Will the pastors please urge this matter and let us see if we can't have more family altars, and thereby get nearer to God with our families than we have been before? Let us all work and pray for a great revival all over the district, and thus make this a great year.

Dr. Lamhuth writes me that more than $26,000 has been paid under our plan for paying missionary debt, and the prospects are brightening daily. Three choice young men have been accepted by the Board for work in China or Japan. Others are offering. The debt must be paid. The money must be furnished. To the work, brethren!

Rev. Geo. S. Inge.

MR. EDITOR: Permit one not of the household of Methodism to say that the cause of public righteousness has lost a stalwart defender in the death of Geo. S. Inge. He died soon, but will live long in his herculean labors which do follow him. Many thousands of good people of other religious persuasions mourn the death of one so true to the things which make for righteousness in the world.

"I Would Be Patient for a Little."

These were the words which I heard a poor wife, who was an invalid, saying to a husband who was cross and impatient with her. She felt that she could not last long with her racking cough, and quietly remarked: "If I were you, I would be patient for a little." We should be more patient if we reflected that the state of things to which we object is generally a transitory one. Do you not get on well with your husband or wife? All too soon death will separate you. Is your child tiresome? It is the effect of immaturity; the tree will soon be grown up. Are you in pain? If severe, it will not last long; if it last long, it can not be very acute. Are you unable to suffer fools gladly? You would be enabled to do so if you reflected that we poor fools can not become wise in a moment; you must give us time. Is the world all wrong? The Lord is at hand to set it right, and he is only not in a hurry because he is eternal. "If I were you, I would be patient for a little."—The Quiver.

DEAR SIRS:—I do not want to be without a supply of your Emmett's Colic and Bots Cure as long as I own an animal subject to the above named diseases. Am a farmer, owner and breeder of horses, cows and hogs. I have used the Specific in a good number of cases, and in every instance found it fully as good as recommended. There is an increasing demand for it here among the farmers. Yours,

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

GREAT GALLERIES OF THE WORLD,

To the vast army of stay-at-homes the world beyond the sea, which once seemed so far away from them, has now become nearer. Events that take place in South Africa are known a few hours afterwards in America, and a feeling of familiarity with distant lands thus seems to have been created by telegraph. Besides this, we have books of travel, lectures by explorers and pictures to fall back upon, so that if "we can not go strange countries for to see," we have them brought home to our doors.

This GREAT NEW BOOK, containing a vast collection of Photographs, gathered from every corner of the globe, is printed on enamelled paper, bound in the most durable manner, and sold at $4 per copy.
